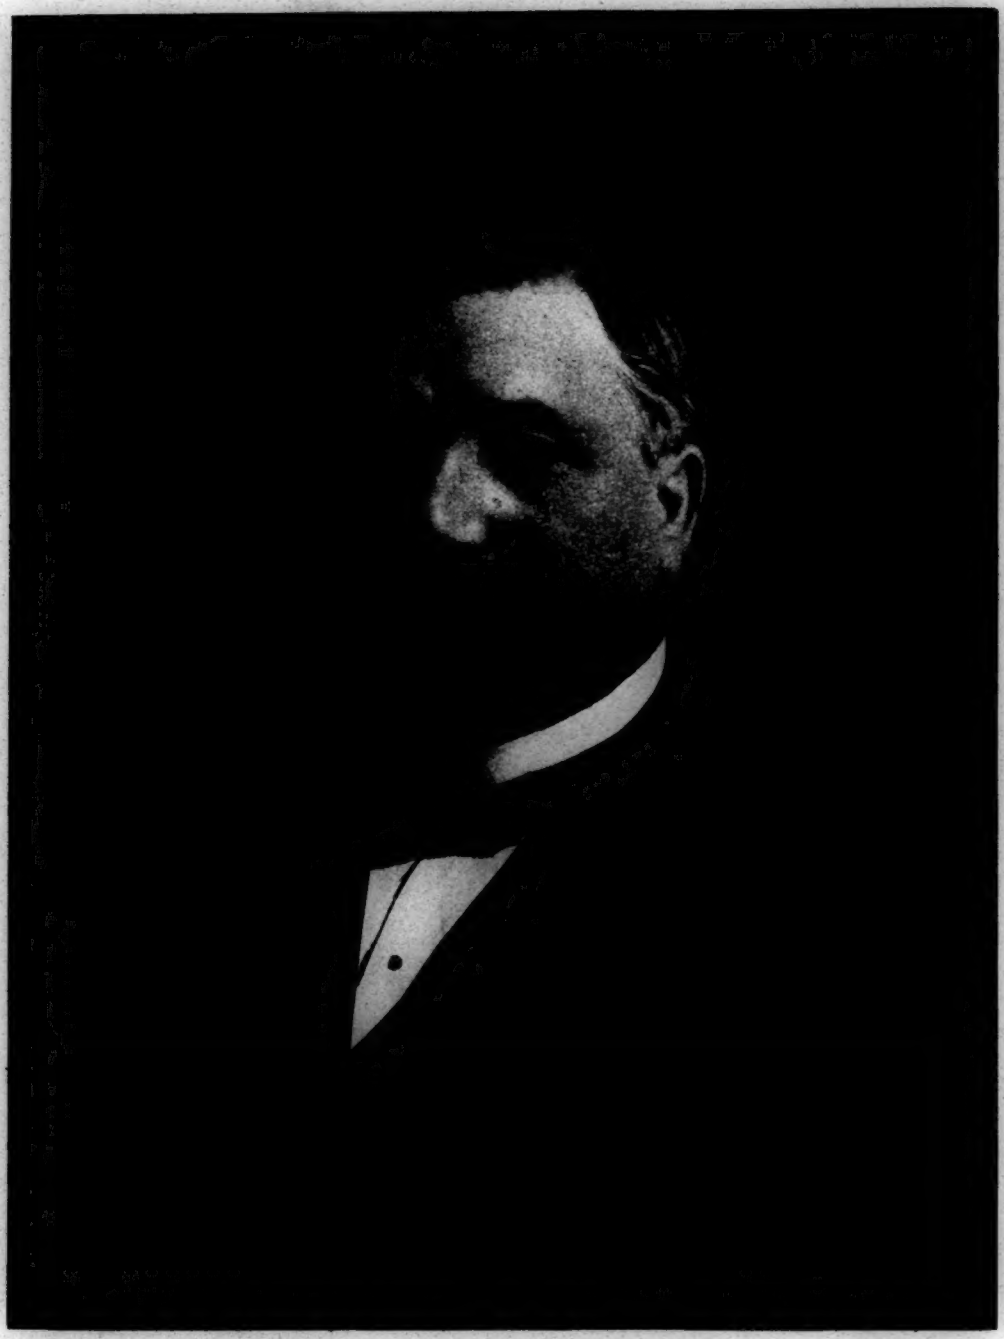
PREFACE

GRAHAM MAR 17 1948

Already three histories of Knox county have been written prior to the present work. In each of those volumes considerable time has been spent in writing up the early history of the county and especially of the first settlers. This is true of every township within the county and pretty full accounts of the cities and villages have been given. It seems that but little more can be said along that line. Galesburg is admittedly somewhat unique in its origin. A colony composed of refined and educated people came here for the avowed purpose of establishing a college and surrounding it with good influences from the start and the history of this movement has been written and can be found not only in the former county histories but also in quite a variety of publications—especially the Semi-Centennial of the Old First church of the city of Galesburg. That little volume states fully the persons interested in the Galesburg-Knox-college movement. The difficulties of their journey have been fully set out and there is no doubt that that feature of history pertaining to central Illinois will be preserved and will continue to be the subject of pleasing fireside conversation.

But little of this side of the question has been indulged in by the author of this volume. It occurred to him in the start that to the present generation the accomplishments of these early settlers and their descendants should be the principal subject of investigation. He therefore conceived the idea of presenting to the people a careful and thorough statement of what had been actually done in this county, without particularizing very much who the actors were. It will be discovered that the principal points selected by the author are the public buildings; and the public, social and economic movements of the people have formed the basis of that portion of the work prepared by him personally. To make this feature of the work still more prominent, he arranged with certain individuals, who are in every way qualified, to present various topics in a thorough and interesting manner along the lines which he himself has pursued. The writer earnestly hopes, for he fully believes, that this feature will be of great value and of very general interest to the reading people of this county. To be more specific he would call especial attention to the articles upon the various church denominations of the county. It will be found that the following outline has been pretty generally followed. First, a full statement of belief; second, the organization of individuals sharing that belief; and third, the extent to which their hopes, based upon their belief and their church organization, have been realized. So far as this form is applicable, the secular articles have been prepared somewhat in the same way.

It has been the writer's earnest endeavor to spend but little time upon the ornamental side of life, but rather to consider carefully everything that seems worth while and everything that could make reasonable answer to the questions,



"What are you here for?" and "What are you accomplishing for the betterment of life?"

The writer takes a justifiable pride in the illustrations which he has secured for this work for they have served a double purpose. They are not only beautiful and add a peculiarly pleasing effect to the appearance of the work, but in no other way could he show the development of the cities and villages of the county from a primative condition to one of prosperity and really intelligent refinement, in fulfillment of the highest hopes of the founders. It is very difficult to arrive at a just word picture of the progress of Knox county. The time required to discover and collate the facts necessary to show such progress is altogether too great, and even if accomplished, it would then not be visible as is shown by these illustrations.

To those who have assisted in this matter, the writer hereby offers his sincere thanks and confesses in truth that without their assistance this volume would lack its greatest charm and a very large part of its interest and benefit.

History of Knox County Illinois

TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION

It is believed by persons best informed upon the archaeology of Knox county that prior to 1828 it had been the home of at least three distinct races of men.

The first is known from fossils found with the bones of extinct animals and fragments of tropical wood from a few to fifty feet below the surface, where the race seemed to have existed for a long time and are now completely covered by the drift. They left no traces than are found as above stated, some of which indicate their handiwork.

The next race was the mound builders, who here, as elsewhere, was probably an agricultural and semi-civilized people. Traces of their occupancy are found in various parts of the county. They too disappeared without leaving anything of their history.

The Indian with his bow and arrow followed the mound builders, at what time we do not know, but he was the undisputed owner of the country for a long period of time. Whatever record of history he made was of such transitory character that nothing is left and nothing is known beyond some few things that may be gathered from tradition and what transpired after the advent of the white people. At the time of the discovery of America, he was the occupant of the soil but has now passed away from most of his old haunts and his power is gone as surely as his predecessors'.

The revival of learning in the fifteenth century stimulated the desire for exploration. Spain was the first to move in a far westerly course and the West Indies were discovered by Columbus. The reports of his meager success were circulated in Europe when Portugal, France and England joined in the search for a new world. As early as the year 1000, Scandinavian explorers had previously occupied places on the western shore of Greenland, planted a colony which has been supposed by many to have been near the coast of New England, but this was unsuccessful and passed out of existence. Several unsuccessful attempts were made to establish colonies in this country at different periods along the Atlantic coast by the French, Spaniards, Portuguese and English. Fernando de Soto, a Spanish chevalier, explored this country in 1541 as a part of Florida, but it was never taken possession of by the Spanish. We are interested only in the settlements which were finally effected, one in Virginia in 1607 by the English, and one made by France in Canada at Quebec in 1608, and at Montreal in 1611. On April 10, 1606, King James of England granted the first charter to Virginia, providing for the establishment of two companies, the southern branch of London Company to have authority to occupy lands between the thirty-fourth degree and forty-first degree of north latitude. The second branch, or Plymouth Company was to occupy lands between the thirty-eighth degree and forty-fifth degree. These two grants overlapped each other, but it was provided in the charter that each should occupy the overlapping territory under certain restrictions. These two grants were supposed to cover that part of Illinois which includes Knox county. This charter left the colony subject practically to the domination of the King. The Virginia charter was enlarged in 1609 and granted many rights and powers to the people, so that the colony became practically a corporation, with pretty full powers looking towards self government. The territory described in the second charter was to extend two hundred miles north and two hundred miles south of Point Comfort, "all that space and circuit of land from sea to sea, and west and northwest." This somewhat vague description and questionable power of the king to grant, forms the basis of Virginia's claim to what was afterwards known as the North West Territory. Nothing was known of the west at that time. The Appalachian range of mountains extending in a somewhat broken chain from eastern Canada southwest to Alabama, and the almost impenetrable forests, formed a great barrier to the advance of English settlement to the westward, and at the same time there was a strip of sea-board between the mountains and the Atlantic from one hundred to two hundred miles wide, which for many years gave abundant room for the constantly increasing English settlements.

Not so with the French settlements of Canada. There was easy communication by lake and river between them and that portion of the country west of the mountains and of the English settlements. The French eagerly availed themselves of this advantage and established settlements at Detroit, Fort Miami, Vincennes, Cahokia, Kaskaskia and along the east side of the Mississippi river to Mobile, Biloxi, etc. This came to be known as New France and was claimed by France by right of discovery and occupation. It would seem, in all good conscience, that the French claim to this territory was superior to that of England's claim, being founded upon a substantial basis, while the English claim was probably founded upon the mere declaration of the discoverer of the coast from which he declared that all lands to the west were subject to his sovereign. The presence of the French to the west of the English made the English feel very uncomfortable. There were continually irritating circumstances arising. The Indians were enlisted on both sides and finally war was declared between the two nations, and in America this war took the name of the French and Indian war. The English were victorious and by the Peace of Paris in 1763, the northwest territory was ceded by France to England, together with Canada, and from that time France had no jurisdiction over territory east of the Mississippi river. By this cession of territory, the claims of Virginia to the northwest territory by virtue of her charter of 1609, reading "from sea to sea," became operative as far west as the Mississippi river.

The next scene in the American drama was the War of the Revolution, which began in 1776. General George Rogers Clark, (then Colonel Clark) a citizen of the Virginia colony, formed a scheme of wresting this territory from England and thereby preserving it to the use of his colony, and at the Peace of 1783, England relinquished all claim to this territory which she had taken from France, and Illinois was made a county of Virginia.

An explanation of this statement ought to be given. The word Illinois was used by the French to designate a confederacy of the North American Indians occupying the present area of the state of Illinois and the adjacent parts of Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri. This confederacy was composed of the Peoria, Kaskaskia, Cahokia, Tamaroa and Michagamia Indians. In the language of this confederacy, the word "Illini" meant "a man." The plural of this word was "Illinuk." The French substituted their terminal for the plural "ois" for the Indian plural "uk," and thus the name became Illinois. In speaking generally of the country between the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, it was called the "Illinois country," because of the Indian confederacy occupying such a large portion of it. The Virginia legislature therefore chose that name as the name of the county created. The act establishing the county of Illinois, which was for the more effectual protection and defense thereof, passed both houses of the Virginia legislature on December 9, 1778. At this time Virginia knew almost nothing of the boundary of the county which she proposed to establish. She wanted to incorporate within this county all that she owned of the Northwest Territory. Therefore "the new county was to include the inhabitants of Virginia north of the Ohio river," but its location was not more definitely prescribed.

It stood without a question that the Northwest Territory now belonged to the United States subject to such rights as Virginia might have therein by virtue of her colonial charter, subject also to the rights of the Indians.

On July 9, 1778, the several colonies which had joined in the revolutionary struggle for independence from England, formed a confederacy which, under articles of confederation, was known as the United States, having a president and congress the same as at the present time.

On the 6th day of September, 1780, congress recommended to the several states in the union having claims to waste and unappropriated lands in the western country, a liberal cession to the United States of a portion of their respective claims for the common benefit of the Union. In conformity with that recommendation, the state of Virginia appointed Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee and James Monroe, commissioners to execute a deed to the United States, in congress assembled, for the benefit of the said states, all rights, title, claim as well of soil as jurisdiction, which this commonwealth hath to the territory or tract of country within the limits of the Virginia charter, situate, lying, and being to the northwest of the River Ohio, upon condition that the territory so ceded shall be laid out and formed into states containing suitable extent of territory not less than one hundred, nor more than one hundred and fifty miles square, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit. These instructions contained quite specific conditions as to the rights of the people and the states to be so formed. It provided further that the French and Canadian inhabitants and other settlers of the Kaskaskies, St. Vincents and the neighboring villages who have professed themselves citizens of Virginia, shall have their possessions confirmed to them and be protected in the enjoyment of their rights and liberties. It provided further that a quantity of land, not exceeding 150,000 acres, promised by this state shall be allowed and granted by them to the then colonel, now General George Rogers Clark and to the officers and soldiers of his regiment who marched with him, etc., in subduing this territory. The deed, in accordance with those instructions, was executed to the United States of America on March 1, 1784, and thereby all interests of the state of Virginia in and to the lands of the state of Illinois and Knox county were extinguished and transferred to the government of the United States. See Plate I.

On the 30th day of December, 1788, the state of Virginia modified the conditions of grant to the United States and authorized the formation of five states out of the Northwest Territory, if deemed advisable by congress.

On the 7th day of August, 1789, congress passed an act for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio river, but made no division of the same.

On May 7, 1800, congress divided the territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio into two separate governments providing that all that part of the territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio river which lies westward of the line beginning at the Ohio opposite the mouth of the Kentucky river and running thence to Fort Recovery and thence north until it shall intersect the territorial line between the United States and Canada, shall for the purpose of temporary government, constitute a separate territory and be called the Indiana Territory. See Plate II.

On February 3, 1809, congress again provided that from and after the first day of March next, all that part of the Indiana Territory which lies west of the Wabash river and a direct line drawn from the said Wabash river and Post Vincennes due north to the territorial line between the United States and Canada, shall for the purpose of temporary government constitute a separate territory and be called Illinois. See Plate III.

On April 18, 1818, congress took further action authorizing the inhabitants of the Territory of Illinois to form for themselves a constitution and state government and to assume such name as they shall deem proper; and the said state when formed shall be admitted to the Union upon the same footing with the original states in all respects whatever. The boundary line of the territory to be thus admitted is described as beginning at the mouth of the Wabash river, thence up the same and with the line of Indiana to the northwest corner of said state, thence east with the line of same state to the middle of Lake Michigan, thence north along the middle line of said lake to north latitude 42 degrees, 30 minutes, thence west to the middle of the Mississippi river and thence down along the middle of that river to its confluence with the Ohio river and thence up the latter river along its northwestern shore to the beginning. See Plate IV.

A constitutional convention was called at Kaskaskia, August 26, 1818, which adopted a constitution of the state to be submitted to congress for adoption and under which Illinois became a state of the United States of America.

The question of extinguishing the Indian titles to the lands in the Northwest Territory had been taken up by the United States government. There was considerable tardiness on the part of the government in relation to this question. Settlers were coming in from the east and squatting upon the public lands without any authority of law and there was much uneasiness on their part lest they might make improvements more or less valuable, and in the end lose their entire time and investment because no arrangement for a permanent purchase of the land had been made. Numerous petitions setting up these facts were sent to congress and congress failed to act upon them. The territory on the west side of the Mississippi river belonged to Spain, and at one time there was a strong feeling among the American settlers that they would be better off to go over into Spanish territory and deal with the Spanish government than to remain within the jurisdiction of the United States and be so long in an uncertain condition. Nevertheless, the population continued to increase and petitions for relief were continually circulated, until finally in the year 1804 a treaty was made at St. Louis on the third day of November, with the Sauks and Foxes, whereby that part of Illinois west of the Illinois and Fox rivers was ceded to the United States. Black Hawk, the principal chief of the Sauk Indians, did not sign this treaty, but it is claimed that he confirmed it on several subsequent occasions. This treaty contained an article which wrought great mischief as it led to the Black Hawk War of 1832. By Article VII of that treaty, it was provided that "as long as the lands which are now ceded to the United States remain their property, the Indians belonging to the said tribes shall enjoy the privilege of living or hunting upon them." It was expected by that clause that until the government made survey and sold these lands, the Indians should remain unmolested by the white people, but this did not follow. The principal Indian village of these tribes was situated within the ceded territory near where the city of Rock Island now stands. The Indians cultivated quite an area of land as best they knew how and produced very good crops. This fact was a continual temptation to the white people coming into the ceded area, and after awhile the white people made demonstrations calculated to either drive the Indians out of their home and across the Mississippi river into what is now Iowa, or to excite their anger and lead to war. The Indians were in the habit of going north in the winter time to hunt, returning in the spring with their cured meats and furs to cultivate their ground and raise their grain and vegetables. During the absence of the Indians the white people would commit depredations by burning their homes, and one year they went upon the ground and plowed up their national cemetery. This proved unendurable to the Indians, and the Black Hawk war followed. The Indians offered to retire, cross the Mississippi and never again come upon the ceded territory for the sum of six thousand dollars. This offer was laughed at and its refusal shut out all opportunity to avoid the war which followed and which cost the lives of many white men and a treasure of over two millions of dollars, and practically exterminated the Indians who had fought in defense of their homes and the resting place of their dead. As a matter of course, the result of this war was the complete forfeiture by the Indians of the lands ceded by the treaty of 1804. There was left, however, an indelible mark of shame upon the white man. See Plate V.

From the foregoing account, it will appear that the land comprising the county of Knox has been under ten territorial jurisdictions, two of them being extinct races, one Indian race, one under France, one under England, one under Virginia, one a territory of the United States, one the territory of Indiana, one the territory of Illinois, and lastly the state of Illinois.

Although Knox county is not especially concerned with the matter, it will be interesting to add that at the time of the Enabling Act passed by congress for the adoption of a constitution for the state of Illinois, Judge Nathaniel Pope, father of Major General John Pope of the Union army during the War of the Rebellion, was a delegate in congress from the territory of Illinois. It was proposed to fix the northern boundary at a line running westward from the southern extremity of Lake Michigan to the center of the Mississippi river. Judge Pope urged that the northern boundary of Illinois be set far enough north to give Illinois a liberal frontage on the west side of Lake Michigan. His argument for that change was that the southern point of the state of Illinois extended far into the south. It will be seen from a map of the United States that it reaches nearly to the southern boundary of the states of Kentucky and Virginia and the northern boundary of the state of Tennessee, which is nearly one hundred and fifty miles south of the city of Washington. If the northern boundary of the state could be pushed far enough north to give a good frontage upon Lake Michigan, it would make Illinois a most potent factor in tying together the two sections of the Union, the north and the south. On the north there would be easy communication with the east by way of the great lakes, and on the south with the entire south by way of the Mississippi river, and in case any difficulty should arise between the two sections of the country, the geographical position of the state of Illinois would be a most peculiar and powerful one. The arguments of Judge Pope convinced congress, and the boundary line was fixed as we now have it, quite well up on the west side of Lake Michigan. That act gave to Illinois the city of Chicago, and during the War of the Rebellion, Illinois fully performed all the duties devolving upon it and foretold by the able judge.

Knox county, of course, shares in whatever honor and pride there may be in being a part of a state so situated, and which has now become so influential in all governmental matters.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE COUNTY

The division of Illinois into counties began in 1790. More than the east half of that part of the state south of the Illinois river constituted one county, and was called Knox county. Changes and further subdivisions were made in 1793, 1801, 1803 and 1809. In 1809 the name of Knox county drops out. In the subdivision of 1790 that portion between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers was untouched. In the subdivisions of 1801, 1803 and 1809, it was included within the limits of St. Clair county, which comprised about four-fifths of the entire area of the state, Randolph county occupying the other one-fifth in the southern portion of the state. In the subdivisions of 1812 and 1813, about the same amount of territory and similarly located, was called Madison county. The territory now occupied by Knox county remained a part of Madison county until 1821, when that portion of the state lying between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers was called Pike county. See Plate VI.

On the 28th day of January, 1823, a further subdivision was made, and Pike county was cut down to a very small part of what it once was. Fulton county was laid out and covered the south four townships of what is now Knox county. The balance of the land now comprising Knox county and the territory north and east was attached to Fulton county for judicial purposes. This will be shown by Plate VII.

On the 13th day of January, 1825, Knox county was formed by an act of the legislature, and it covered the same territory that it covers today, with the exception of four townships on the north, the four townships on the south previously included in Fulton county being given to Knox, and four townships on the north being given to Henry county, giving to Knox county sixteen townships only. See Plate VIII.

The county remained the same until 1831, when on January 13, the boundary of the county was changed by adding a row of townships on the north and two townships, Numbers 12 and 13 in Range 5 East, on the east as shown by Plate IX.

Another change was made March 2, 1839, whereby the two townships, Numbers 12 and 13 North in Range 5 East, were taken from Knox and given to Stark county. This is shown by Plate X. Since that time there has been no change in the area of Knox county.

Thus it is shown that the territory comprising the county of Knox today, has been a part of St. Clair, Madison and Pike counties, and that a part of the territory of Knox county has heretofore formed a part of Fulton and Henry counties. The inhabitants of the county at different points were obliged to go to Lewistown, Rushville, Pittsfield, Edwardsville and Kaskaskia to secure an abstract of title to their lands. After the formation of Knox county in its present shape, the records pertaining to lands in Knox county were carefully copied from the above places and now constitute a part of the records of Knox county. It is supposed, however, that the records of Knox county today as kept at Galesburg, are complete, and that there is no reason for visiting other county seats for information concerning Knox county lands.

During the progress of fixing the territory, state and county boundaries, a systematic plan of survey had been pursued. The plan of congress consisted in running a base line east and west through some point having a natural witness, if possible, and running a meridian line north and south from this base line. Then beginning in the angle formed by those base and meridian lies, lay out the townships six miles square. The north and south rows of townships were called ranges, and the ranges were numbered one, two, three, etc., east or west of the meridian as the case might be.

The description of the lands in Knox county is arrived at in the following way: the city of Beardstown in Cass county, Illinois, is on the Illinois river, and is taken as the starting point for all descriptions of land west of the Illinois river. A line running due north from Beardstown is known as the fourth principal meridian. This meridian forms the western boundary of Knox county. All lands east of that meridian and controlled by it, are described as east of the fourth principal meridian. Another line passing through Beardstown runs west from here to the Mississippi river, and is known as the base line. If you take a township map of the state of Illinois, and start at Beardstown and count the townships northward until you reach Knox county, you will find that the southwest township of Knox county is the ninth township north of the base line running through Beardstown. It is also east of the fourth principal meridian. Therefore, the southwest township of Knox county would be described as township 9, north of the base line, and in range 1, east of the fourth principal meridian. This township is also known as Indian Point. The southeast township of the county is known as Salem township, and under congressional description would be known as township 9, north of the base line, and in range 4, east of the fourth principal meridian. Each township is divided into sections each one mile square, and each township therefore has thirty-six sections. They are numbered beginning at the northeast corner of the township for number one, running westward six miles, then drop one mile south and you have section number seven, then you run eastward six miles and you have section twelve, then drop southward one mile and run west six miles and you have section eighteen, and so on until you have numbered all sections in the township, giving you thirty-six sections in all. Knox county has twenty townships which would make 720 sections, making approximately 450,800 acres.

It is a simple matter from the above congressional rule to describe any fraction of any section in the county. If you are purchasing the northeast quarter of section 1, township 11 north, in range 1, east of the fourth principal meridian, you know that it is one hundred and sixty acres of land in the northeast corner of Galesburg township.

The following table shows a complete description of each township in the county of Knox as at present existing:

It is now proper to consider the governmental organization of the county. The writer once knew an intelligent, educated young Russian who remarked that the most noticeable thing he saw when he first came to America was the ease with which a new movement, society or party could be started. In Europe all social organizations began with the preacher or some ministerial officer. If he approved, he called the meeting, called it to order, was its chairman, appointed its secretary and conducted the whole proceedings. In America when public action was considered necessary on any question, a self-appointed committee called a mass meeting, the people assembled and some one stated the object of the meeting. A resolution approving the object of the meeting would be offered, discussed and passed if approved, or a committee would be appointed and an adjournment taken to enable the committee to give the matter more careful consideration and present it in better shape to the adjourned meeting. The thing especially noticeable to the young Russian was the absence of the preacher, whereas in Europe he was the whole thing, while here the people originated and carried through their own measures. The preacher is welcome on such occasions, but he comes in citizens' clothing and not in ministerial robes or vestments.

Township, county and state governments originate in very much the same way. There is a little more formality in the start. They all possess a certain legislative, judicial and executive capacity which has to be recognized by other commonwealths and it is necessary that such organizations have a definite starting, usually by proclamation or notice from the proper constituted authority. When once set in motion the whole thing becomes a government by the people.

It has been shown that on January 13, 1825, the legislature fixed the boundary of Knox county, not as it is today, but giving to it sixteen townships. By the year 1830 it was believed that Knox county had 350 inhabitants, and it was so made to appear to the Hon. Richard M. Young, judge of the 5th judicial circuit of the state of Illinois, and on the tenth day of June, 1830, he issued his order for the organization of Knox county by the election of three county commissioners, one sheriff and one coroner to serve in and for said county of Knox until superseded by the persons elected at the general election to be held the first Monday of August next.

The organization of Knox county is of such interest and importance to the people that all orders pertaining to the same are given in full, and no more fitting tribute of respect to the memory of John G. Sanborn, under whose skill and ability this organization was effected, than the publication of such orders in this history. The accuracy of these orders, written at such an early date, will be observed and appreciated by every attorney in this county.

The following are the orders in the circuit court of said county held on the first Monday in October, 1830, which was the first day of the first term of said court ever held in Knox county.

OCTOBER TERM, 1830

PLEAS, before the Honorable Richard M. Young, judge of the fifth judicial circuit of the state of Illinois, at a circuit court, began and holden in and for the county of Knox and state aforesaid, at the house of John B. Gum, Esq., in said county, on Friday, the first day of October, it being the last Friday before the first Monday in the said month of October, in the year of Our Lord, One thousand eight hundred and thirty, and of the independence of the United States the fifty-fifth:

Present, The Hon. Richard M. Young, circuit judge; John G. Sanborn, clerk; Stephen Osborn, sheriff; James M. Strode, Esq., state's atty. pro tem.

ORDERED: That the order heretofore made on the tenth day of June in the year of Our Lord, 1830, for the organization of the said county of Knox, together with the order, made on the 5th day of July, A. D., 1830, regulating the times of holding the circuit court in said county, be spread upon the records of this court; which said orders are in the words, and figures following, to wit:

State of Illinois, } Sct.
Fifth Judicial Circuit: }

The People of the State of Illinois, to all who shall see these Presents: Greeting:

Whereas, by the ninth and eleventh sections of the act entitled "An Act forming new Counties out of the Counties of Pike and Fulton, and the attached parts thereof" approved 13th January, 1825, it is made the duty of the presiding judge of the fifth judicial circuit of the state of Illinois, whenever it shall be made appear, to his satisfaction, that either of the counties of Hancock, Warren, Mercer, Henry, Putnam or Knox contain three hundred and fifty inhabitants, to proceed to organize the same, and to grant an order for the election of officers, preparatory thereto; and whereas, it has been made appear to my satisfaction, that the said county of Knox contains three hundred and fifty inhabitants and upwards, and inasmuch as the greater part of the qualified voters of the said county, have requested by petition, that the same should be organized with as little delay as possible; I do therefore in pursuance of the power vested in me by virtue of the 9th and 11th sections of the above recited act, ORDER and DIRECT, that an election be held in and for the said county of Knox at the house of John B. Gum, on Saturday, the third day of July, A. D., 1830, for the election of three county commissioners, one sheriff and one coroner, to serve, when elected and qualified, in and for the said county of Knox, respectively, until they shall be superseded, by the persons who may be elected at the general election, to be held on the first Monday in August next; and for the purpose of having this order carried into execution, I do hereby appoint Jacob Gum, Stephen Osborn and Nicholas Voiles of said county, judges of the said election, whose duty it shall be to set up written or printed advertisements, or notices of said election, in at least six of the most public places in said county inclusive of the place at which said election is hereby directed to be held, having regard to the situation and population of the different settlements within said county at least ten days previous to the said election, to the end that all persons concerned may have timely notice thereof. The election to be VIVA VOCE, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the morning and 7 o'clock in the evening of said day and conducted, as far as may be practicable, in conformity with the act entitled "An act regulating elections," approved January 10th, 1829. And lastly, the said judges are to certify the result of said election to the secretary of state as soon as thereafter may be convenient, in order that the persons who may be elected may be commissioned and qualified with as little delay as possible. And after the election of the said county officers, I do hereby declare the said county of Knox, to be organized, and entitled to the same rights and privileges, as the other counties in this state.

Given under my hand and seal, at Lewistown, this 10th day of June, in the year of Our Lord, 1830, and of the independence of the United States the fifty-fourth.

RICHARD M. YOUNG,
Judge Fifth Judicial Circuit, State of Illinois.

JOHN G. SANBORN produced in court his appointment as clerk of said court, which was ordered to be entered of record, and is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

State of Illinois,
Fifth Judicial Circuit. } Sct.

The People of the State of Illinois, to all who shall see these presents; Greeting:

Know ye, that I, Richard M. Young, judge of the fifth judicial circuit of the state of Illinois, north of the Illinois river, and presiding judge of the circuit court, in and for, the county of Knox, and state aforesaid (whenever the same shall be organized), reposing especial trust and confidence in the integrity and capacity of John G. Sanborn, Esq., have, and by these presents do, for and in behalf of the people of the state of Illinois, appoint him clerk of the circuit court in and for the said county of Knox, and state aforesaid. And I do hereby authorize and empower him, to have and to exercise all the powers and duties, legally appertaining to the said office, and to collect and receive all the emoluments therefrom arising, during good behaviour.

Given under my hand and seal, at Lewistown this 10th day of June A. D., 1830, and of the independence of the United States the fifty-fourth.

(SEAL) RICHARD M. YOUNG.
Judge Fifth Judicial Circuit, Illinois.

Pursuant to the order of the Hon. Richard M. Young, judge of the fifth judicial circuit of the state of Illinois, for the holding of an election for the election of county commissioners, it will appear from the following that said election was held on the third day of July, 1830, and the action of the commissioners in pursuance thereof is herein entered in full.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS COURT—SPECIAL TERM JULY 7TH, 1830.

At a special term of a county commissioners court began and held at the house of John B. Gum, Esq., in and for the county of Knox in the state of Illinois on this seventh day of July A. D. 1830 (pursuant to notice of Riggs Pennington, Philip Hash and Charles Hansford, commissioners elect for said county;

Present, Riggs Pennington, Philip Hash and Charles Hansford, who, at an election, held in and for the said county of Knox, on the 3rd day of July A. D. 1830, in pursuance of an order of the Honorable Richard M. Young, judge of the fifth judicial circuit, in the state of Illinois, were duly elected to the office of county commissioners for said county of Knox; and the said county commissioners being duly sworn into office, the said court was declared duly organized for the transaction of business by Stephen Osborn the sheriff elect for said county.

John B. Gum was appointed by the judges of this court as a clerk of said court.

ORDERED: That this court be adjourned to meet at the same place on the 9th day of July instant, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of said day.

The appointment of John B. Gum as clerk of the county commissioners court for some reason proved unsuccessful and he declined to serve, probably because he preferred to be county treasurer, to which office he was appointed July 9th. Whereupon John G. Sanborn was appointed. By this appointment

Mr. Sanborn became clerk of both courts in the county. The following orders of court will fully show this appointment:

SPECIAL TERM JULY 9, 1830

At a special term of the county commissioners court, began and held at the house of John B. Gum, Esq., in and for the county of Knox in the state of Illinois pursuant to adjournment, this 9th day of July A. D. 1830.

Present, Riggs Pennington, Philip Hash, Charles Hansford, county commissioners.

John B. Gum who, at the last special term of this court, was appointed clerk of said court, having declined the acceptance of said appointment, John G. Sanborn was thereupon appointed clerk of this court.

John G. Sanborn produced in court his appointment as clerk of the county commissioners court for the county of Knox, and was sworn into office by Philip Hash one of the commissioners of said court; which appointment and oath is in the words and figures following, to wit:

Knox County, } Sct.

To all who shall see these presents, Greeting:—

Know ye, that we the undersigned county commissioners in and for the said county of Knox and state of Illinois, reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity and capacity of John G. Sanborn, have, and by these presents do, in behalf of the people of the said county of Knox, appoint the said John G. Sanborn clerk of the county commissioners court in and for the said county of Knox and state of Illinois. And we do hereby authorize and empower the said John G. Sanborn, to have and to exercise all the powers and duties legally appertaining to the said office, and to collect and receive all the emoluments, arising therefrom, during good behavior.

Given under our hands and seals this ninth day of July in the year of Our Lord 1830, and of the independence of the United States the fifty-fourth.

CHARLES HANSFORD, (SEAL)
RIGGS PENNINGTON, (SEAL)
PHILIP HASH, (SEAL)

ORDERED: That the temporary seat of justice for Knox county shall be at the house of John B. Gum, Esq., in said county.

ORDERED: That for the purpose of holding the next general election, to be held on the first Monday of August next, the said county of Knox shall be one precinct and that the said election shall be held at the house of John B. Gum, Esq.

ORDERED: That Jacob Gum, Nicholas Voiles and Thomas Maxwell be appointed to act as judges of election in the district composed of the county of Knox.

ORDERED: That the clerk be authorized to procure a suitable seal for this court, and also a suitable seal for the circuit court; and also all necessary and suitable books, for the circuit and county commissioners courts, for said county.

ORDERED: That the sum of seventy-five cents be allowed to each of the judges and clerks of an election held on the 3rd day of July; and that the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of each, viz.,

No. 1 Jacob Gum, for seventy-five cents.

No. 2 Nicholas Voiles, for seventy-five cents.

No. 3 Stephen Osborn, for seventy-five cents.

No. 4 William McMurtry for seventy-five cents.

No. 5 Jonathan C. Reed for seventy-five cents.

John B. Gum was appointed by the Commissioners of this Court, Treasurer for the county of Knox, and it was ORDERED: That the clerk deliver to him his appointment, and request him to file his bond, for the penal sum of five hundred dollars with the clerk of this court before the next term thereof.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue a license for retailing spirituous liquors for the term of one year from the date thereof, to Samuel S. White in said county, on his paying into the county treasury the sum of two dollars, and to the clerk his fees for issuing the same; and that the following tavern rates be established, for the regulation of the said Samuel S. White, viz:

For a half pint of whiskey .....12½ cents
For a half pint of brandy .....18¾ cents
For a half pint of wine .....25 cents
For a meal of victuals .....25 cents
For lodging for one person one night .....12½ cents
For a feed of corn or oats for a horse .....12½ cents
For feed and stabling for a horse one night .....25 cents

We have now traced the territorial jurisdiction and the organization of the county of Knox to a point where everything may proceed with orderly sequence. We are now leaving that part of our subject to take up the general business of the county at a point where we have the circuit and county commissioners courts fully established and all the county officers properly inducted into office.

It is interesting to notice, however, that the first act of the county after its full preparation to do business was the granting of a license to sell intoxicating liquor, a thing which could not be done today under any circumstances whatever. The board of supervisors have at different times been petitioned for the granting of such a license and have always refused to do so by an overwhelming vote. We may learn one thing, however, from this record, that the drinking of liquor in all probability was not carried on in the tippling house proper but was purchased and taken home in small quantities for home consumption, which much minimizes the evil of the traffic. The tippling house with its attendant evils was reserved for the time when the business became differentiated from all other businesses and when the fight for profits was concentrated upon the sale of liquor alone.

It will be our duty to take up in the next and succeeding chapters a consideration of the more important transactions of the county of Knox.

MINOR COURTS AND PERMANENT SEAT OF JUSTICE

After placing the county machinery in good working order, the commissioners undertook the work of providing minor courts for the people, and to get possession of such funds as were coming from the county of Fulton from taxes levied on Knox county property while Knox county was under judicial control of Fulton county as shown in previous pages of this history. The orders on these matters are given in full for the purpose of showing methods of transacting business in those days.

ORDERED: That for the election of justices of the peace and constables, the county of Knox shall be and hereby is divided into two districts, bounded and defined as follows:—The first of said districts shall include all that part of the said county lying north of the township line between townships number ten and eleven north, and shall be called the "Henderson" district. And the second of said districts, shall include all that part of said county lying south of the township line between townships number ten and eleven north, and shall be called the "Spoon River" district.

ORDERED: That Jacob Gum, Nicholas Voiles and Thomas Maxwell be, and hereby are, appointed judges of elections for justices of the peace and constables, in the "Henderson" district in the county of Knox, and that elections in said district be held at the house of John B. Gum, Esq., and that an election be held in said district on the 7th day of August next, for three justices of the peace and two constables.

ORDERED: That Abraham Swarts, Hiram Palmer and Parnack Owen, be, and are hereby, appointed judges of elections for justices of the peace and constables in the "Spoon River" district in the county of Knox, and that elections in said district be held at the house of Abraham Swarts, Esq., and that an election be held in said district on Saturday the 7th day of August next, for two justices of the peace and two constables.

To the County Commissioners of Fulton County:—

We the undersigned county commissioners of Knox county do hereby petition your honorable court to grant an order of said court, to furnish to the clerk of the county commissioners court of Knox county a list of the property in said county of Knox, assessed for taxation by the county of Fulton for the present year, and to relinquish to the said county of Knox, the right of collecting said taxes. And should the above petition be granted, we do hereby agree to account to your honorable court, for all taxes on lands in said county of Knox, with which the county of Fulton may have become chargeable by the auditor of public accounts; and further, to account for expenses legally incurred in taking the assessment of said county of Knox.

Dated Knox county, this 17th day of July, 1830.

CHARLES HANSFORD,
RIGGS PENNINGTON,
PHILIP HASH.

ORDERED: That the clerk of this court leave the above recited memorial, with the clerk of the county commissioners court of Fulton county, and request him to lay the same before said court, at their next regular or special term.

It will be remembered that Riggs Pennington, Philip Hash and Charles Hansford were elected members of county commissioners court on July 3, 1830, to organize the county; that they met on the 7th of July and adjourned to July 9th; that on said July 9th they ordered a new election to be held at the house of John B. Gum on the first Monday in August following at the time of the general election; that election was held as provided and Pennington, Hash and Alexander Frakes were elected to the first commissioners court under the general election in the county. At the December term 1830 of the court was reported upon what conditions the county commissioners of Fulton county would turn over to Knox county the collection of taxes which had been levied by Fulton county on Knox county property. The order of approval is as follows:

ORDERED: That the conditions proposed by county commissioners of Fulton county at their special term on the 26th of August, as certified by the clerk of said court on file be accepted, and that the clerk of this court issue an order for the sum of eight dollars and twenty-five cents, and cause the said amount to be paid into the county treasury of Fulton county on or before the first Monday of March, 1831.

It seems from the above that the work of assessing and extending the taxes on Knox county property at that time could be done for $8.25. The assessment of taxes at that time was a very simple matter. The following order was entered at the March term 1831 of said court.

ORDERED: That a tax of one-half per centum be assessed on all personal property liable to taxation by law, in the county of Knox for the year 1831.

John B. Gum, treasurer of Knox county, produced in court a statement of his account with the said county as follows:

JOHN B. GUM, Treasurer of Knox County.

ORDERED: That the above account be accepted, and that the treasurer be allowed two per cent on the amount paid out of the county treasury as per the above account.

ORDERED: That John B. Gum be reappointed treasurer of Knox county and that he be required to give a new bond for the penal sum of five hundred dollars, and file the same in this court.

The money received from the state was the greatest part of the revenue of the county as shown by the above report of the county treasurer. Five hundred dollars was the amount of the treasurer's bond for that year.

The temporary seat of justice was at the house of John B. Gum, Esq., located on section 32, Henderson township. In the very nature of things, this arrangement could not last long. Accordingly on the 12th day of March, 1831, the county commissioners ordered the construction of a court house upon specifications which are entered below. The contract for the building was let in two parts and was divided according to the following orders:

ORDERED: That a contract be entered into with the lowest bidder for the erection of a court house as follows: To be built of logs hewed on the ground and raised two stories high, the first story to be nine feet high between the sleepers and joists, the second story to be eight feet between the joists and top of the wall plates; the size of the building to be twenty-eight feet long and twenty feet wide, the corners to be sawed down after the building is raised. Thirteen sleepers to be delivered on the ground; and thirteen joists to be nine inches by three inches in size to be hewed straight and planed smooth and placed in the building at equal distances apart, level and ready for the reception of a floor; said building to be erected on such part of the quarter section designated by law, for the seat of justice for said county as may be selected by the county commissioners on or before the 10th day of April, and said job to be completed on or before the 20th day of May next; said building to be placed on a solid and permanent foundation of pillars of stone, one at each corner and one at the center of each side, to be raised one foot above the surface of the ground. The sills are to be hewed square, ten by twelve inches in size and to be laid level and so as to leave four inches clear inside the logs, and to be made of good sound over cup* or white oak timber—the first round of logs above the sills also to be over cup or white oak; the wall plates are to be hewed square, 10 by 8 inches in size and to be delivered on the ground—two plates 28 feet long, and two plates 20 feet long.

ORDERED: That a contract be entered into with the lowest bidder, for completing and finishing the court house in the following manner, viz: The plates are to be raised and laid level and a good substantial roof to be put on, made of good black walnut shingles 18 inches in length, jointed and well put on; thirteen sleepers to be hewed on one side and laid level in a workmanlike manner, and a floor of good white oak or ash plank one and one-fourth inch thick and 7 by 9 inches wide to be laid close but not jointed or laid down tight; two windows and one door to be cut out and cased and faced with plank, the windows to be of suitable size to receive the sash for 12 lights of glass 8 by 10 inches, the door to be of good large suitable size, and to be made of good plank and made to fit the casing, and well hung in a workmanlike manner. The windows and door to be placed in such part of the building as the commissioners may direct on or before the 20th day of May next, and the whole work to be completed before the first Monday in June next.

At this time there was no town in which, and no land belonging to the county, on which to build this court house. Nevertheless, on the same day the court entered the following orders:

ORDERED: That a contract be entered into with the lowest bidder for posts and stakes for laying out a town at the seat of justice for said county as follows: Four posts for the corners of the public square to be seven feet in length, 12 inches square, to be hewed and planed for four feet in length and a suitable head cut or turned, the head to be painted white and the remainder of the four feet to be painted red or black—three feet at the lower end of said posts to be left the full size of the timber, and to be the butt ends of white oak or over cup trees. Three hundred stakes three feet in length, to be shaved four inches square for one foot in length at the upper end—the lower end to be hewed or shaved to a point and the remainder to be hewed or shaved square—to be delivered at or near the center of the quarter section designated for the seat of justice for said county on or before the 1st day of April next. The posts may be painted after they shall be placed in the ground at any time before the 20th day of May next, the stakes to be made of large over cup timber suitable for board timber.

ORDERED: That the foregoing jobs of work be offered to be let to the lowest bidder upon the following terms, viz: One-third part of the amount of each contract to be paid out of the county treasury on taking the contract and upon the contractor's giving bond with security approved by the court for the performance of the contract; and the other two-thirds of the amount of each contract to be paid out of the first money arising from the sale of lots in said town, or out of the revenue which may be due from the state treasury to said county for the year 1831, whenever it shall come into the county treasury. Every person taking a contract, shall within two days after taking a contract, enter into a bond with sufficient security in a penalty of double the amount of said contract for the faithful performance of the same.

William Lewis, having offered to take the first contract for the erection of a court house for the sum of seventy-eight dollars, and being the lowest bidder for same it is therefore ORDERED: That a contract be entered into for the same.

Parnach Owen, having offered to take the second contract for completing and finishing the court house, for the sum of one hundred dollars, and he being the lowest bidder, it is ORDERED: That a contract be entered into with him for same.

Andrew Osborn, having offered to take the third contract for posts and stakes, for the sum of fifteen dollars, and he being the lowest bidder for the same it is therefore ORDERED: That a contract be made with him for the same.

On the 14th day of March it was concluded that six more windows were needed in the court house and we find the following entry.

Parnach Owen, having offered to make six additional windows in the court house of the same description as those mentioned in his contract, for the sum of six dollars, ORDERED: That the same be added to his contract.

Provision having been made for a court house, the county commissioners took steps to acquire land on which to build and for laying out a town which should constitute a permanent seat of justice. On March 24th the following proceedings were had in said matter:

ORDERED: That some suitable person be employed to proceed on to the land offices in Springfield, as agent for the county of Knox, to secure the title to said county by pre-emption for the S. W. 28—11 N.—2 E., being the land designated by law as the permanent seat of justice, for said county; and for this purpose that the same be offered to the lowest bidder upon his giving bond in a penalty of double the amount of money entrusted to him, with sufficient securties to be approved by the court, conditioned that the person so employed and empowered shall proceed to go to the land offices in Springfield as soon as practicable, and make application for said land in the name of the county commissioners of said county, and make return of the certificate he may receive for said land, on or before the 10th day of April next, to the said commissioners or to the clerk of said court.

Rees Jones, having offered to go on to the land offices at Springfield as agent as before mentioned, for the sum of eight dollars, and having offered a bond for the faithful performance of said commission as above specified, it is ORDERED: That the said offer and bond be accepted and that the bond be filed in the clerk's office.

ORDERED: That Rees Jones be and he hereby is employed and authorized as agent for the county commissioners of Knox county, to proceed on to the land offices at Springfield and make application in the name of the said county commissioners for the use of said county, for the southwest quarter of section twenty-eight, in township eleven north, in range two east, of the fourth principal meridian, being the quarter section designated by law for the seat of justice for said county, and to which the said commissioners are entitled to the right of pre-emption, according to the laws of the United States, and that the clerk of this court furnish them with a certified copy of this order, and also a certified copy of the act passed at the last session of the general assembly of this state, entitled "An act to establish a permanent seat of justice for Knox county and for other purposes," approved January 15, 1831. And for the purposes aforesaid, the clerk is hereby authorized to issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Rees Jones, agent for said commissioners, as aforesaid for the sum of two hundred and five dollars.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Rees Jones for eight dollars, his compensation for going to Springfield as agent for the county commissioners of Knox county.

Having arranged for the purchase of land on which to build a town and a court house, the committee on the first day of April, 1831, entered into a contract with Parnach Owen for dividing the same into lots and blocks according to the following plan.

ORDERED: That a contract be made with Parnach Owen for laying out the town of Henderson, the minutes of which contract are as follows: The said Owen agrees to survey and establish the exterior lines and corners of the southwest quarter of section twenty-eight in township eleven north, in range two east, and to lay off the streets of said town as follows: Main street to be six rods wide, the north side of said street to be 54 rods south of, and parallel with the north line of the said quarter section; two other streets 4 rods wide to be laid out at a distance of 20 rods one on each side of and parallel with Main street; two other streets 4 rods wide to be laid out from South to North across said quarter section 40 rods distant from and parallel with the east and west lines of said quarter section; and two other cross streets 4 rods wide extending from the south to North street, and crossing Main street and 20 rods from and parallel with the east and west streets and bounding the public square on the east and west sides; the public square to be laid out and bounded east and west by the two last mentioned cross streets and extending 10 rods north and south of Main street; all the blocks between north and south street to be laid out in lots to contain one quarter of an acre of land and to be 10 rods in length by 40 rods in width fronting north and south upon one of the streets running east and west; the remainder of the quarter section to be laid off into out lots as follows: The land on the north side of North street to be divided into 4 lots and the land on the south side of South street to be divided into 8 lots as nearly equal in size as may be thought advisable, said Owen to stick and drive and number the stakes at the corners of the lots and set 4 posts and the said Owen is to be paid twelve and a half cents for each large and small lot, in said town as a full compensation for laying out and surveying said town; to be paid and discharged in lots in said town at the same prices and rates as may be obtained for the same at the first sale of lots for cash or prompt payment.

On the 9th day of April, 1831, there was another meeting of the county commissioners at which was presented the following receipt showing the purchase of land which had been set apart by law for the seat of justice of Knox county.

RECEIVER'S OFFICE.

No. 4793. (Duplicate)

SPRINGFIELD, April 1st, 1831.

Received from Alexander C. Frakes and Riggs Pennington, (county commissioners of Knox county, Ill.) the sum of two hundred dollars, being in full for S. W. qr. of section No. 28, township No. 11 North, Range No. 2 east, 4th pl. md. containing one hundred and sixty acres at the rate of $1.25 per acre. $200.

And now having acquired perfect title to the land by purchase from the government and having subdivided the same into lots and blocks, a day was fixed for the sale of such lots and blocks as it was deemed advisable to offer at the time.

ORDERED: That a sale of lots in the town of Henderson be made on the 23rd day of April, 1831, as follows: The lots which may be offered for sale will be sold to the highest bidder, and immediately after the sale of the lots, the purchasers will be required to give a note or obligation with approved security for the amount for which each lot shall be sold, payable in three equal installments; one-third part of said amount payable in 12 months, one-third part in 18 months, and one-third part in 24 months from the day of sale; subject, however, to a deduction of eight per centum per annum, for the payment of the said amount at the time of sale, or at the same rate for the payment of any of the said installments, at any time before the same shall become due; and the purchasers will receive from the county commissioners a bond for a deed to be made on the full payment of the amount for which each lot may be sold; and the clerk is required to prepare blank bonds and notes for said sale.

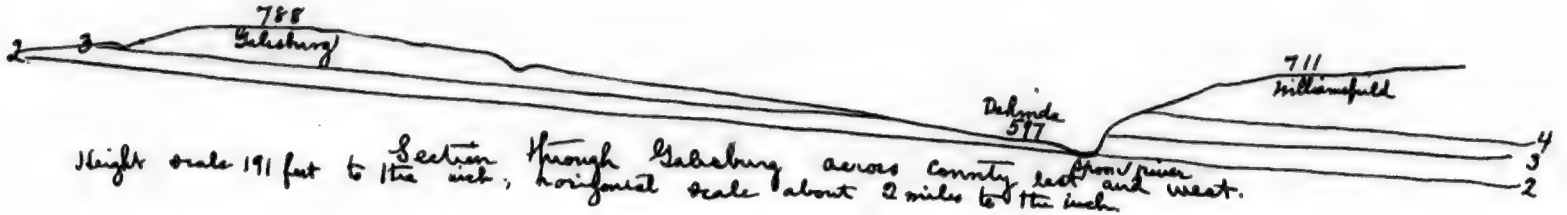
A plat of the ground as surveyed was made and acknowledged by the county commissioners before William McMurtry, a justice of the peace of said county, being the town of Henderson, and was delivered to the recorder of the county according to law on the 23rd day of April, 1831, being the day on which certain lots were sold at auction. At that sale seventy-nine lots were sold for $1,256 or an average price of practically $15.90 per lot. The lots varied in price from $4 up to $61 each. For making the survey Parnach Owen was paid the sum of $18.25 and it was ordered that the court house be located on the southwest corner of lot 10, in block 5, so as to front on Main street 28 feet. It was ordered that a further sale of lots be made on Monday the 13th day of June, 1831. Upon that day a second sale was made which resulted in disposing of eighteen lots for a gross sum of $233.50. Upon the same day the work performed by William Lewis on the court house was examined and approved and Mr. Lewis was discharged from the contract and was paid $52, also Parnach Owen appeared and was discharged from the contract and he was allowed $6 in addition for extra work and paid $76.66. Upon the same day Andrew Osborn appeared with his contract for stakes and posts which was declared satisfied and he was discharged from further work and the clerk was directed to issue an order on the treasurer in the sum of $10 in payment of said contract.

On the 6th day of September, 1831, the county commissioners court convened and entered the following order in regard to further work upon the court house.

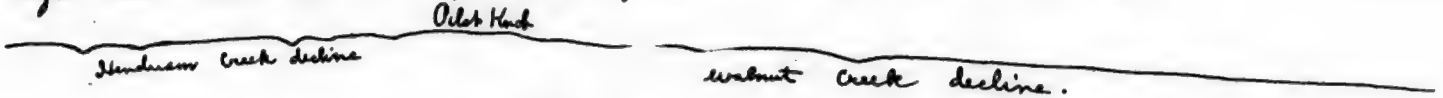


ORDERED: That notice be given that on Saturday the 17th day of September inst. at the court house in the town of Henderson, the following jobs of work will severally be let to the lowest bidder, to-wit: For underpinning the walls of the court house and for finishing the walls of the court house by chinking and daubing the same, and nailing boards on the outside over the cracks and daubing. For furnishing oak or ash plank and laying loose the upper floor in the court house. For furnishing sash, glass, putty, etc., and finishing the windows of the court house; making a suitable seat for the judge, table for the clerk and seats for the court, the particulars respecting the same to be made known at the time they are let out.

ORDERED: That John G. Sanborn be authorized to procure a suitable stove and stove pipe for the court house, and also a lock and key for the same.

ORDERED: That no family be permitted to reside in the court house, and that as soon as the same shall be finished it shall be kept locked, and the key thereof deposited with the clerk of this court.

On the 17th day of September, 1831, the commissioners proceeded to let the contract for completing the court house according to the notice previously given and the reading of the contract and specifications are so quaint and full of instructions that they are given in full below. It is certainly a matter of education to the people of today and will continue to be such more and more as time passes on. They are as follows:



The commissioners proceeded agreeably to notice given to let out the jobs of work for finishing the court house as follows: A contract was entered into by the commissioners with Robert K. Hendricks for underpinning the court house with good sound rock to be laid to face on the outside and laid tight and in a workmanlike manner. Also to chink the cracks of the walls on the inside with blocks of suitable size to fill the cracks and of convenient lengths to be laid in lengthwise so as to fill up the cracks full and plum with the wall and fastened with pins well drove into the logs and the pins sawed off close:—The cracks to be filled full and plum with the outside of the logs with clay mortar well worked and tempered and mixed with straw or hay and rough boards of sufficient width to cover the cracks and daubing to be nailed on the outside over the daubing—to be completed on or before the 22nd day of October next, and for which the said commissioners agreed to pay to the said Hendricks the sum of thirty-seven dollars and a half, of which one dollar and forty-nine cents is to be paid out of the treasury upon entering contract as above, and the remaining sum of thirty-six to be allowed to the said Hendricks in payment of any town lots sold at any former sale:—it was ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of the said Robert K. Hendricks for the sum of one dollar and forty-nine cents on the above named contract.

Calvin Glass having offered to furnish oak or ash plank 1¼ inches thick and eight or nine inches wide for the upper floor in the court house, and to lay the same loose, on or before the 22nd day of October next, for the sum of eighteen dollars, which offer was accepted by the commissioners—one-half of the said sum to be paid by an order on treasurer on the ensealing hereof, and the other half to be paid on the completion of the same: Whereupon it was ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Calvin Glass for the sum of nine dollars on the above contract.

Calvin Glass offered to finish and complete eight windows in the court house and to furnish glass, putty and other materials requisite for the same—each window to contain two sash, each of six lights of 8 by 10 glass (12 lights to each window), the glass to be set with putty and the sash to be primed, fitted and put in in a workmanlike manner. Also to erect a seat or stand for the judges as follows: a platform to be erected seven feet long, three and a half feet wide and eighteen inches high, with a step or stair at each end of the same; standards to be inserted and framed in, and the front and back to be closed up with plank neatly jointed and matched, the front to be two feet nine inches above the top of the platform, and an inclined writing shelf about fifteen inches broad placed on the top, projecting over the front about one-third part of the width of it. The platform to be framed and put together so as to stand independent of the walls of the building—the whole to be made of good suitable plank in a workmanlike manner. Also a table two feet and ten inches high, seven feet long and three and a half feet wide, the legs to be framed together at the top and bottom, and to be made strong and finished in a neat, substantial, and workmanlike manner. Also six seats or benches of suitable height, nine or ten feet long and at least twelve inches wide, to be made of suitable plank, the legs to be of plank and braced with strips on each side, and to be planed smooth and made strong and substantial; to furnish all the materials requisite and suitable for the whole of the above work and to complete the same on or before the 22nd of October next, for the sum of forty-three dollars, to be paid out of the county treasury on the completion of said work; and the said offer having been accepted.

ORDERED: That the clerk prepare written contracts for the above work with Calvin Glass and execute the same on part of the commissioners upon his entering into contract and giving security for the performance of the same.

On September 7th, 1831, the following orders were given:

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Robert K. Hendricks for the sum of five dollars and fifty cents in part on his contract for completing the court house.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Calvin Glass for the sum of fifteen dollars in part on his contract for windows, etc., for the court house.

September 15, 1832, we find the following orders:

Upon the request of the court, George A. Charles and John B. Gum having taken into consideration the contract of Robert K. Hendricks, and having examined the work performed under said contract, gave it as their opinion to the court, that the said Robert K. Hendricks is not entitled to full compensation for said work, but that the sum of two dollars and fifty cents be deducted from the amount of said contract, Whereupon it is ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Robert K. Hendricks, or bearer, for the sum of twenty-eight dollars, receivable in payment of any town lots sold at any sale previous to the 17th day of October, 1831, as a full compensation for the work done on said contract, and that the said contract and bond be endorsed satisfied, and the said Robert K. Hendricks and his security be released from said contract and bond.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer for the sum of thirty-three dollars in favor of Calvin Glass or bearer, being in full compensation for a certain contract entered into by the said Glass for finishing the court house by putting in windows, making seats, table and judge's stand, and the above including five dollars additional compensation for extra work done on the judge's stand, etc., and that the said contract and bond be endorsed satisfied.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Calvin Glass or bearer, for the sum of nine dollars in full, compensation for his contract for furnishing plank and laying loose the upper floor of the court house; and that the said Calvin Glass be held on his contract accountable for any deficiency of plank which may be required to lay said floor agreeably to contract.

THE TOPOGRAPHY AND GEOLOGY OF KNOX COUNTY

BY FREDERICK R. JELLIFF

The topography of Knox county is determined by the watershed between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers. This elevation diagonally traverses the northwest part of the county and creates two main drainage districts, the one to the south and southeast with Spoon river as its main channel, and the other to the northwest, with branches of Pope and Henderson creeks furnishing the outlet. By much the larger part of the county is drained by Spoon river and its net work of creeks with their brooks and rivulets. These run south and east on the north and west side of the river and north and northwest and west on the east and south side of the river. This ridge varies from a quarter to a mile in width and is part of the watershed extending from nearly the north boundary of the State to the south and west.

Knox county is thus by no means a uniform surface, a level prairie, but is diversified, with its rich prairie uplands, its long slopes to the streams, its rounded hills, its often broad valleys and occasionally abrupt bluffs.

There is a remarkable ramification of streams as a glance at the map will show. Counting the mapped contributary streams, Spoon river has a total of 352 tributaries in this county, not including those of Walnut creek, that afford drainage to every mile of its basin. On the north it has twelve main streams and twelve on the south and east. Court creek, running east from east of Galesburg to the river gets to be a fine stream often with wide and picturesque valley, with high, rounded hills for a border; and emptying into it are nine main branches, some of which extend far north into the adjacent territory. Haw creek is another handsome stream, with Brush as one of its main assets, and with a total of eleven main tributaries, including those of Brush. French creek which flows from the east brings to Spoon river the waters of ten main tributaries, while Willow creek in the extreme south part of the county conveys the waters of five more. The laterals of all these creeks have their subdivisions, their sloughs and their draws, extending into seemingly level uplands, and all charged with water during times of heavy rainfalls. In all are 352 recognizable and mapped Spoon river streams, little and big, reticulated like veins, conveying water, sculpturing the land, often filled with precious humus, and gradually planing down the level of the county. Every hill is the result of this process, and every valley represents the work of a stream.

Walnut creek, which drains the northeast part of the county, has no less than sixty-seven tributaries little and big, including the subdivisions of its main branches, and is a Spoon river auxiliary. To the northwest are Pope creek with twenty-five tributaries, and Henderson with forty-seven, and including Cedar Fork with fifteen, all flowing west into the Mississippi river, while in the extreme southwest part of the county is Cedar creek with twenty-four tributaries emptying into Spoon river.

THE STREAM SYSTEM

To recapitulate the stream system of the county, including all mapped streams, is as follows:

Spoon river, unnamed	21
Walnut creek	67
Court creek	64
Brush creek	43
Haw creek	45
Willow creek	22
French creek	51
Cedar creek	24
Miscellaneous	15
Pope creek	25

Henderson creek 48
Cedar Fork 15

Total 440

Of this total, eighty-eight find their way to the Mississippi, while the remainder belong to the Spoon river system.

Thus all told on the 720 square miles of territory in this county there are 440 streams, agencies in shaping the surface and giving it its present contour and character. These are fed by the thirty-six to forty-eight inches of annual rainfall, either by direct flow from the surface, or from seepage or springs. It should also be remembered that every stream has for its feeders its rills and rivulets. It is indeed amazing how large a work is accomplished by a mere streamlet during a heavy rain, as it excavates a ravine in the soft hill side, or plows its way down a cultivated incline, bearing soil away to the bottom land.

A Knox county hill represents the labor usually of two small streams that in descending from the upland gradually excavate more and more deeply until the bottom is reached through which they meander to the main channel, the hill sides meanwhile being rounded into agreeable proportions by the washing away of the material and the action of frost and atmosphere. As one walks along a creek like Court he can see hill after hill, between each two of which comes tumbling and singing a rivulet. The four hundred and forty streams mean therefore more than this number of hills, indicating that the areas of level land are never more than a few square miles in extent and that the whole territory is magnificently drained.

THE DRAINAGE AREA

When one comes to the drainage areas he finds that they are approximately distributed as follows:

Spoon river drainage area 430 square miles.
Walnut creek drainage area 118 square miles.
Pope creek drainage area 30 square miles.
Henderson creek drainage area 62 square miles.
Cedar Fork drainage area 28 square miles.

THE ALTITUDES

The highest altitude on record in the county is that at Wataga, 835 feet above the sea level; the lowest, 532 feet, that at the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy bridge at London Mills. The river bed is some distance below the bridge, so that the elevation of the river itself is less than the figure shown for the bridge. Then the 835 feet is not the highest altitude. Wataga is about a mile south of the watershed and on its southern slope. The elevation of the ridge is higher than Wataga. Northwest of Oneida is Pilot Knob, a conspicuous landmark and in the early day serving as a guide to travelers. From this the land slopes in all directions and the altitude at its summit must be considerably greater than that of Wataga. It is judging from the altitude of Oneida not far from 870 feet.

Thus there is between the highest point in the county and the lowest a difference of at least 350 feet. In going from Spoon river bridge near London Mills to Pilot Knob, one would ascend about this distance.

Following is a list of the altitudes at important points in the county:

Wataga	835
Oneida	815
Galesburg	788, 756
Rio	782
Knoxville	778
Saluda	770
Altona	760
Abingdon	753
Williamsfield	711
Gilson	689
Delong	685
Rapatee	684
Knox	678
Yates City	674
Hermon	653
Douglas	652
St. Augustine	647
Maquon	630
Appleton	604
Dahinda	597
Maquon railroad Spoon river bridge	571
C. B. & Q. bridge at London Mills	532

Some altitudes of towns just outside the county throw some light on the general trend of elevations:

Woodhull	824
Galva	850
London Mills	543

It will be noticed that the higher altitudes belong to the towns on the watershed or near it, such as Oneida, Wataga and Galesburg, while as one goes toward Spoon river or toward Walnut creek or Henderson or Pope creeks, the altitudes fall.

This is illustrated by the altitudes from Galesburg to Spoon river via the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad as follows:

Galesburg	788
Knoxville	778
Gilson	689
Maquon	630
Spoon river	571
Douglas	652
Yates City	674

In these figures one can almost see the Spoon river valley.

Equally interesting is the showing from Galesburg along the line of the Santa Fe:

Galesburg 788
Knox 678
Appleton 604
Williamsfield 711

Pilot Knob is a point from which descents radiate; Victoria is another; Knoxville in a measure another, with streams flowing into Haw creek south of it and streams flowing into Court creek north of it. Abingdon and Yates City occupy high points from which streams flow.

IMMENSITY OF EROSION

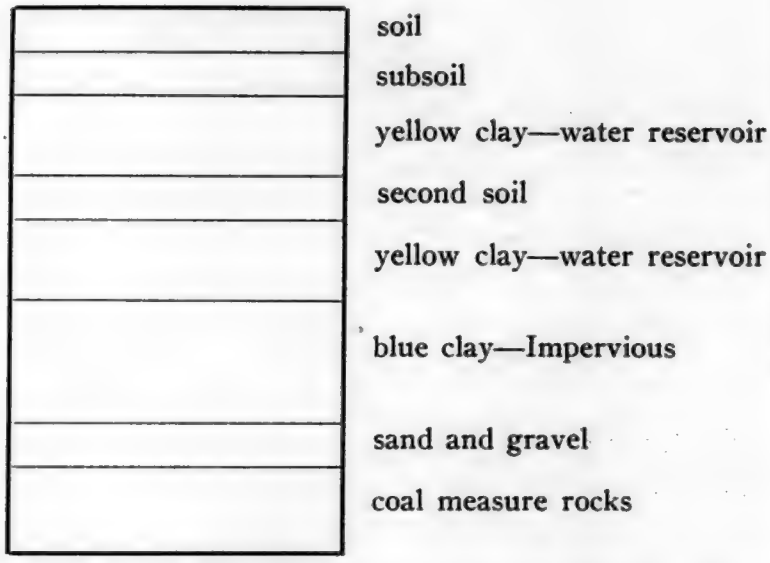
If, then, one takes his stand on Pilot Knob, he is in a position to comprehend the enormous amount of erosion accomplished by Spoon river and its branches since the day when the accumulation of drift ceased, and also the work done in this same way by Pope and Henderson creeks. This removed mass at the London Mills bridge would have a thickness of more than three hundred feet. East and west of the Knob a large thickness has also been removed. When the floods following the glacier disappeared it is likely that there were no such surface inequalities as now exist. Possibly the surface may have been something like that of southern Texas, practically level, with sluggish streams. There is evidence that since the glacial epoch ended there has been a slow elevation of the land, so that greater velocity was given to the streams, their number was multiplied and their capacity for erosion was increased. The removal of an irregular layer over three hundred feet in thickness at the south end, a hundred or more at the east end and as much at the west, covering all but a few miles of the surface of the county, and thinning as the watershed is approached, represents the work of the tributaries of the county, since the period of elevation began, and accounts for the variety noticed in the topography of the county.

The significance of this discussion of erosion as a topographical factor lies in this, that with all the numerous stream agencies and slopes, the soil is being slowly carried away toward the valleys and the seas. The period of soil deposition seems in large measure to have ceased. If the present soil covering is removed, there appears no present agency to renew it. There are already many bare hills and slopes, the soil on which is scanty. The farther back the waters eat their way, the less the upland. The present denudation of soil must be much greater than it was during the days when the ground was covered with dense growths of prairie grass, and then the slough and creek bottoms were heavy with coarse sedges or other soil protecting plants. Now the plow of the farmer leaves the earth friable, an easy mark for heavy rains. The bare field soft, unprotected, is easily cut into by the small streams and the soil is quickly conveyed away. Single heavy rains often make deep ravines in such areas. Then with the soil ploughed, harrowed, pulverized, the winds sweep away clouds of it in dust, and scatter it far and wide. These leveling agencies may through the removal of the soil render unproductive in the distant future the now fertile acres of this county. The Knox county soil map published by the State Geological department shows large areas adjacent to the streams stripped of the black soil, characteristic of the uplands.

The topography of Lake Rice east of Galesburg, a beautiful sheet of water affords an illustration. It is surrounded by these deep ravines, especially along its eastern shore, and some of these extend far up into the ploughed fields. North of Knoxville one can follow a little stream and find that in the course of a mile and a half it has dug a deep valley for itself, while extending down the sandstone and clay shales to its valley are deep crevasses, affording an excellent opportunity to study the formations.

SOIL, THE GREATEST ASSET

The greatest asset of Knox county is its soil. Several varieties are mentioned, according to the clay and sand and humus elements. Judging from the recent census report, this surface is worth nearly forty-eight million dollars at the present time, with promise of a larger valuation in the future, if properly conserved. On the upland prairies is found the dark, fertile stratum with its underlying subsoil. It thins out on the hills, and there the covering is more clayey, while in the bottom lands is the often thick deposit of alluvium. The upland subsoil is underlain by a deposit of drift, thirty to sixty feet in depth, and this drift rests on the coal measure rocks. Immediately under the subsoil is a stratum of yellow clay, eight to fifteen feet in thickness, and often containing beds of sand. Frequently about eight feet below the surface is found a second soil from six inches to a foot in depth and of a chocolate color. Below the yellow clay is the blue clay, at the base of which there is usually a deposit of gravel and sand, while scattered through the entire deposit are boulders, some of which are of large proportions.



Thus a section of a boring through any of the prairie uplands would pass through the following materials:

Soil—two to three feet.
Subsoil—twelve to twenty-four inches.
Yellow clay—five feet.
Second soil—eight to twelve inches.
Yellow clay—three to ten feet.
Blue clay—twenty-five to forty feet.
Coal measure rocks.

THE WATER RESERVOIR

The yellow clays with their sand deposits are the great underlying water reservoir. The blue clay will not allow the passage of water through it; that is, it is impervious. The rain passes through the porous soil and subsoil and is gradually diffused through the yellow clays where it is held, because it cannot sink through the blue clay. It is thus kept within reach of the roots of vegetation. Where streams cut through the yellow clays, as along the hill sides, there are springs and seepage that maintain the streams. This retention of water in the yellow clays is a magnificent provision, as all can readily see.

A section would disclose something like this:

Wells are usually sunk into the yellow clays and perhaps a short distance into the blue clay, but the water flows into the well from the yellow clays, impregnated with the lime, magnesia, iron and other minerals dissolved out on the way.

This interesting arrangement of the deposits is a vital factor in agriculture. If in place of the blue clay there were sand or other porous material the water would sink beyond the reach of plants, there might be no streams and a desert like condition might result. If the blue clay extended to the surface, as water could not sink, the tendency would be to form swamps. As it is, the great underground water supply so near to the surface and maintained there is a most beneficent and magnificent treasure for maintaining the streams and for supplying all life with needed moisture.

The drift contains at some points in the county beds of sand and also of gravel. At one time gravel was extensively mined in the hills along the northwest shore of Lake Rice east of Galesburg, and also in Maquon township.

The surface formations of the county thus include the soils, the water stratum of yellow clays, the blue clay, the coal measure shales, sandstones, and limestones, and the coal veins, six in number, all here and there exposed in the county.

DISTRIBUTION OF SOILS

The soil survey of the county shows that the surface formation approximately consists of 468 square miles of black loam, which is the superior soil of the county; ten square miles of black clay soil, almost like gumbo in its tenacious qualities; 185 square miles of clay soil, and 55 miles of bottom land. In Ontario township nearly all the surface formation is set down as black loam, and in this respect it leads the county. Galesburg township also has a large preponderance of this soil. On the other hand, such townships as Copley and Victoria have much clay loam, not however, lacking in fertility, while Maquon township has the largest area of bottom lands.

The largest areas of black clay loam are found northwest of Galesburg.

THE COAL RESOURCES

At one time there extended all over the county six veins of coal and their intermediate strata of limestone, sandstone, and clay shales. They are nearly horizontal with a slight dip to the southeast, toward the center of the Illinois coal field. The sixth and fifth veins are now found only in the north part of the county and a small section in Salem and Elba townships. These two veins have been mined in Walnut Grove, Sparta, Ontario, Victoria and Copley townships north of Spoon river and in Elba and Salem townships south of the river. In the vicinity of Spoon river valley they are not found simply because they have been with all their strata eroded.

As one therefore goes down the incline toward Spoon river he gets below the horizon of these two veins and is in that of No. 4, and as he goes still farther he passes below the horizon of No. 4 and reaches the horizon of No. 3, which is found in the banks of the river in places in Truro township, while still farther south one passes into the horizon of No. 2. Thus the river and its tributaries before the south limit of the county is reached have washed away the strata of four veins.

There is a fine illustration of this along Brush creek south of Knoxville, the sandstone hills making a very picturesque valley and the slate and coal appearing at the base of the sandstone a few feet above the bank of the creek.

The same erosion of coal veins is noticed going west from Wataga down the slopes of Henderson creek. Vein No. 6 has been mined just west of that village and starting from this point one descends past successive veins until in one place in Henderson township he is on the horizon of No. 1. In walking west from Oneida, the horizon of No. 6, mined there years ago, he comes to the horizon of No. 3, in the vicinity of Pope creek.

That streams have cut down through coal veins and their strata, leaving them exposed on each side of the valley, explains why drift mines are so commonly met in the hills facing the bottom lands. As the veins are nearly horizontal it is easy to trace them in the hillsides. That just above the bottom of Court creek east of Knox station can be followed clear to Spoon river, and there it is found just below the bed of the river. In Henderson township five miles northwest of Galesburg a seam can be traced along the hillsides a short distance above the bottom lands.

In Henderson township it is believed that all six of the veins of coal are either exposed or mined. In section 26 the streams have cut deeply into the shales. High in the bluffs in the eastern part of the township are found fossils associated with vein No. 6. In the shafts penetrating the creek bottom farther west three veins were gone through. Still farther down the valley is a vein thought to be the equivalent of No. 1, the lowest of the series.

THE INTERMEDIATE ROCKS

Each coal vein is separated from the one below by a series of rocks, sometimes solid, sometimes shaly; the distance between the veins varying, and the veins not always appearing to be continuous. From thirty to sixty feet of rock usually separate one vein from that below it, although occasionally a vein is split up into two or three seams. The rock is ordinarily sandstone or a clay shale, that passes easily and naturally into sandstone. In the case of vein No. 3 found along several streams running into Spoon river, there is a very interesting series of formations extending twenty feet above the vein, comprising a friable black shale, with lines of concretions, deposited in parallel lines, and often containing shells and other marine animals. Above this black shale is a very valuable clay shale deposit, from which are made the Galesburg paving brick. Bluffs of this clay surround Lake Rice, and Glenwood Lake and extend along Court creek for miles to Spoon river. Streams running from the north and south to Court creek cut through this shale. It is thus the surface coal measure formation over a number of square miles along Court creek. The same condition is noticeable along Haw creek and its branches, although there the shale is more likely to pass into sandstone than farther north. Indeed even along Court creek and its laterals there are stretches of sandstone, and often great concretions of sandstone and ironstone abound in the formation, even where the layers are consistent enough for brick making. All along the drift lies on top of the formation and must be stripped off. Then come forty to sixty feet of bluish white brick shale, which when the sandstone is absent, is wonderfully fine grained.

As one approaches its base, he finds the remains of coal measure vegetation in the shape of fern leaves and the stems of coal measure plants; then he passes into the black shale with its layers of concretions often filled with sea shells; then he strikes the slate, which reflects a vast variety of ancient life, ranging from large sharks and gigantic water fleas to the beautiful shells of the nautilus family; then comes the coal seam, formerly mined along the creek. The region thus gives the scientist as well as the manufacturer something worth considering.

In the hills south and north of this wonderful deposit is a coal vein presumed to be No. 4.

GEOLOGIC LIFE

All along Court creek to Spoon river is one traveling between bluffs of this clay shale and sandstone. A few feet above the creek juts out a ferruginous limestone rock that abounds in ancient snails and bivalves. As one nears Spoon river, the bluffs along the creek are rounded and picturesque. From the sandstone concretions one may obtain fine specimens of fern fronds. Then as the river is reached the slate is found at the base of the bluffs, with its relics of ancient sea life, while in the waters of the river itself are the modern fish and mollusks.

A section of a Spoon river bluff in Haw creek township affords the following, illustrative of what has been said.

There is scarcely a rock in the county that does not speak of life and forces, of the sea, of elevation, of depression and of elevation again.

In Henderson township there are fine bluffs of shale that some day may be utilized. The same is true of shales over No. 6 in Sparta township, although there a strong tendency to concretionary structure is shown. All along Spoon river one sees shale bluff structure. In Cedar township there are large accumulations of shale.

The day may come when even the masses of ironstone formations found above some of the veins may be utilized. In Victoria township the shale was once used in the manufacture of tile, and in Cedar township for making brick. When processes are better understood more of these may be serviceable, for such is the topography of the county that there are frequent exposures.

THE COAL MINING INDUSTRY

There is not much data regarding the history of mining in this county. Mines are known to have been operated in Sparta township as early as 1850 and for twenty years thereafter assumed an importance that they have not since attained. Sparta township was for a long time a leader in production owing to its proximity to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy main line. The earliest mine of which there is specific record is that opened by E. F. Ranney in 1850 in section 23, Sparta township. H. H. May was operating a mine in the same township as early as 1854. It is known that scores of mines have been opened in that township, have been worked out and abandoned. Over a half century ago coal was mined in the south part of Maquon township and has been since. One of the oldest mines was on the David Masters' farm and was run by a man named Lopeman. During the civil war coal was taken from the J. K. Lane farm in the same township and from the F. M. Davis farm. The Cope farm also has yielded considerable coal.

In Copley township there has been at times considerable mining and one in traversing the streams of that township finds many evidences of former mining operations. Two of the oldest mines are those operated on the James McGovern and Charles Morgan farms, and we believe that they are still yielding coal of an excellent quality.

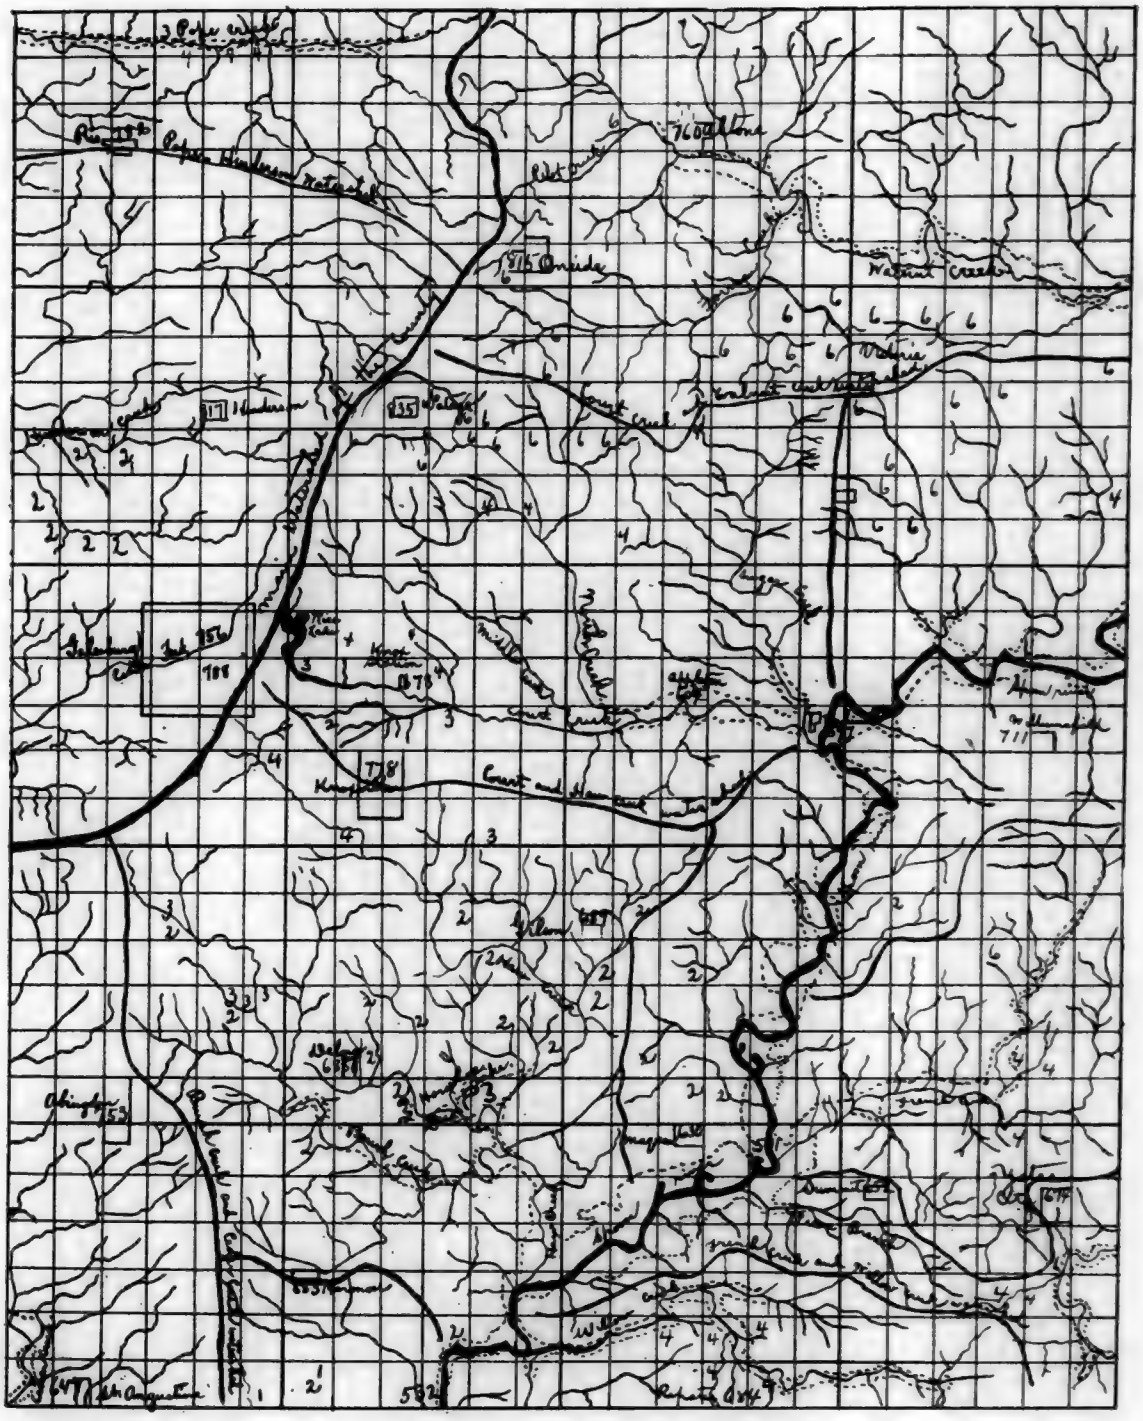
One of the earliest shaft mines in the county was that operated near Oneida by Messrs. Camp and Powell, and it was perhaps the only extensive mine ever run in that township.



When the Illinois geological survey of the county was made, just prior to 1870, it listed a large number of mines. Nearly every township in the county was represented. Much valuable information was given. It is to be doubted if there are today in operation a half dozen mines that were then running, and of which sections are given in the works of the survey. This indicates that there are melancholy features connected with Knox county mining, and that more than one man has failed to make money operating a mine. Some large mines have flourished for a few years only to be closed because either of inability to cope with the water or because of the imperfections of the veins and the abundance of the clay intrusions.

For years in the early days there was much stripping of coal done in the creek bottoms where the veins were very near the surface. All that had to be done was to remove the thin superficial covering of soil or of slate and the coal was within reach, and was then very easily removed. This method has been abandoned with the exhaustion of this accessible supply.

While there is coal in nearly every township of the county, if not all, there are but few extensive workings. For years a conspicuous sight in the seventies, and perhaps before, was the large colliery just southwest of Wataga, near the railroad track. Among those that operated from time to time large mines in the county were R. M. Campbell, east of Wataga, the Essexes in Henderson township, the Cliffords in the western part of Walnut Grove township, Alex Baird in Henderson township, the Eppersons in Rio township, and the Etherly Company, whose plant was abandoned in recent years. The cheapness at which outside coals can be placed at the larger centers of the county is the real occasion of the decline in mining, notwithstanding the large coal acreage.

The last available statistics of mining in the county are those of 1910, published by the State. These show 27 mines in the county producing that year 38,673 tons, and employing 122 miners and sixteen other hands. The largest mines were those of the Pendergast Brothers at Soperville, Rodell & Mitchell of Wataga, and Thomas H. Mellan of Soperville. The total for the county is but a fraction of that produced a half century ago.

Of the six veins of coal, No. 6 has been most extensively mined, owing to the thickness of the vein and the ease with which it can be removed. It is usually four and a half feet in thickness and has a clay seam two inches in width that serves as a parting between the upper and lower parts of the vein. No. 4 is not so shaly, seems more dense and compact. No. 3 is not a thick vein, usually about thirty inches to three feet. No. 2 is also a thin vein but of very excellent quality. No. 1 if correctly enumerated, is a thick vein, four to seven feet. Some of the veins of the county are difficult to place because of peculiar conditions surrounding them.

THE STONE QUARRIES

In the early day there was considerable stone quarried in Knox County but at the present time there is but very little, owing to the better quality of stone that can be procured elsewhere. The early quarries were situated not far from Knoxville. North of that city, along the bank of a small stream that runs into Court creek can be seen the site of a quarry in a sandstone bluff. This stone is in large blocks and hardens on exposure. It was used in the construction of some of the buildings in Knoxville and elsewhere in the county. Farther north in section sixteen in the same township is still another quarry relic. From this were taken blocks of conglomerate, that were hard and very durable, composed of limestone pebbles, cemented solidly together. This stone was used in the construction of the foundation of the Old First Church of Galesburg. This indicates that stone was quarried there as early as 1846. The Hope Cemetery wall, Galesburg, is made of this same enduring material. Stone was also quarried in the sandstone beds along Haw creek south of Knoxville. Over vein No. 6 of coal there is often a heavy seam of limestone that has been used for foundation and other purposes. In the north part of the county a bastard limestone was formerly quarried. As a rule outside of the conglomerate the rock of the county is likely to shale and split under the influence of the weather.

A SECOND SOIL

A few feet below the surface in some parts of the county is found a second soil, or perhaps it might be better termed a first soil, as it antedates the present. In passing, it might be remarked that each coal vein indicates that under it was a soil on which flourished the dense vegetable growth that was subsequently, when the land was again submerged, compressed into coal. This soil is usually termed fireclay, and traversing it in all directions are the roots of coal measure plants. Thus there were six soils for coal making plants and subsequently six periods when the land was under the surface of the sea, as the presence of so much marine life in the rocks between the coal veins clearly shows.

The second soil is of course of recent formation. There lie above it four to six feet of the yellow clay, and yellow clay below it. It denotes a period above the level of the waters and conditions suited to vegetable growth. It is in association with this soil that the remains of elephants and mastodons are found. The parts most often discovered are the teeth, because their enamel resists best the processes of decay. A number of fine specimens have been exhumed in this county. In the Galesburg waterworks excavation in Cedar Fork valley, three well preserved teeth and parts of the hip bone of an elephant were found. Around them were fragments of cedars of considerable thickness. In the same trench was found the long, handsome tusk of some member of the swine family. In a brick yard pit near Oneida in the second soil were found numerous bones of a mastodon, while in a marshy place near the same city was found a great tusk. From a Spoon river bluff was taken a well preserved tooth of a mastodon, and on a gravel bank in the river was discovered a mighty tusk. Recently near Woodhull several gigantic teeth have been unearthed, and still more recently in excavating at Galva immense molars of some species of elephant were found.

During the period when elephants, mastodon and great swine roamed over Knox county, probably many other mammalian species lived.

This is mentioned simply to show the variations in the topography of the county during the ages, and the life to which each variation gave subsistence. The present configuration is the outcome of the slow elevation of the land, permitting the deposition of the subsoil and the soil, and the incessant operations of water, air, temperatures and life, since the deposition of the clays in the glacial epoch.

SPOON RIVER NOTES

From the topographical and scienic view, main interest centers around Spoon river. It enters Truro township on the east side of the county and takes a serpentine southwesterly course through Truro, Haw Creek, Maquon and Chestnut townships. On the way it touches Persifer and Elba townships. Its northern part is marked by narrow valleys and in a few places the river runs between bluffs. From where French creek enters to the junction with Haw creek, the river runs through a broad and fertile bottom. This is one and a half miles in width at the French creek juncture, broadens to two miles at the Pease creek juncture, and from there to the mouth of Haw creek varies from three quarters to one and a half miles in width. Standing on the shore opposite Haw creek entrance, one can look along four miles of bottom land.

Where Court creek enters the river there is a bottom of a mile and a half in width, but it is not long continued.

Eight square miles of bottom land are included in Spoon river valley between the mouths of French and Willow creeks, and in places it seems to be from six to ten feet in thickness. All this represents what the streams have in part brought down from the hills and uplands.

The topography of Spoon river valley can be seen to good advantage from the bridge southeast of Maquon. The valley broadens and the bottom is nearly three quarters of a mile in width. The river flows in a channel cut in the alluvium and the banks show this deposit to be eight to ten feet in thickness. The highlands are well back. The broad bottom extends north and south as far as the eye can see. It seems to be all under cultivation and as the soil is so deep and rich ought to bear magnificent crops. The view from the hills above down the valley is a charming one.

THE HILL STRUCTURE

The hill structure of the county is well shown in a ride west from Maquon past that curiosity, Horseshoe Lake or Bend, an isolated body of water in the south part of Orange township, and having some fame as a fishing resort. On the north side of this lake are high hills, between which and from springs comes the water that feeds the lake. This natural reservoir occupies a part of the basin between Pig and Haw creeks. To the south and southeast there is bottom land. Judging from the natural features, this lake may occupy what was once the channel of Pig creek, or perhaps even Haw, and its ends for some reason having become filled, the stream was forced to cut its way farther south. It is said that during times of flood Haw creek backs into it, and this indicates that the level of the two are not far from identical. At the time of the visit the reservoir ranged from two to five rods in width, but it was said that its beauty had been marred by the attempts to drain its waters. An early tradition is that the lake was made by dams formed by the beavers.

Before one gets to this lake, there is a fine series of hills descending from the higher level, and so facing the road that one can discern the rounded hollows down which the water descends between each pair of hills.

All these facts indicate how well adapted this county is to be the home of civilized man and what a variety of life it can support. Verily, it is one of the choice garden spots of the earth.

INDIANS.

By Eva Chapin Maple, Maquon, Ill.

The knowledge of man does not extend back far enough, to tell us what manner of people the very first inhabitants of Knox county were. When the white men came, they found this country inhabited by the Red Men. But who were here before the Indians? One historian says that "the entire valley of the Illinois river from Starved Rock to the Mississippi was, unknown ages ago, the home of a still different race from any yet enumerated. Time can scarcely be reckoned in considering the ages in which human life has found existence along the rivers of this state. Again and again has this land been trodden by different races, cities have risen and fallen, and great people have vanished utterly, leaving behind them no record of existence, except their voiceless graves."

MOUND BUILDERS

The earliest race of people, which left us any trace of their existence in our land, we call the Mound Builders. Whether these strange builders of mounds were the ancient ancestors of the Red Men whom Columbus found in America, or were an entirely different race of beings, scientists are not agreed.

Mounds of different sizes, shapes and kinds are to be found along the banks of certain streams, notably the Illinois and some of its tributaries. Spoon river is quite rich in these relics. There are three types of mounds existing: the ossuary, the sacrificial and the altar. The first named type is the most common, being found in many parts of the county. Whether all the burial mounds commonly called "Indian graves" are graves of Indians or are part of Mound Builders' ossuary mounds, is not known to the writer.

The only sacrificial mound which could be located, is situated on the N. E. quarter of N. E. quarter, Section 12, Truro township. One writer, in speaking of it, says "on a well prepared earthen altar, four men and one woman were burned, so that the bones were charred, and the soil was impregnated to a considerable depth with the oleaginous matter. In an excavation beneath this altar were the skeletons of two men."

The "altar" or "temple" mounds are the largest and perhaps most noteworthy, their age is still an unsolved problem.

The American Indian knew nothing of their origin or use, and had no traditions concerning them. But in later years, the Indians sometimes used them for burial purposes, by digging into one side of the mound and placing their dead therein.

It is evident that the Mound Builders were sun worshipers, as their altar mounds invariably faced the east.

ALTAR OR TEMPLE MOUNDS

Before the ruthless hand of civilization had destroyed these land marks, many of these Mound Builder mounds or, as they are generally called, "Indian mounds," might have been seen along the banks of Spoon river. There is one fine specimen of the altar mound in Maquon township. It is situated on the S. E. quarter of Section 4, just a short distance south of the town of Maquon. It is spoken of, locally, as "The Mound," or "The Indian Mound." This mound rises from the bottom land, about sixty rods from the north bank of Spoon river. It is now covered with timber, but the oldest settlers tell us, that when the first white people came, there was not a tree upon the mound. The mound is of natural origin, largely composed of sand and gravel, but is covered many feet deep with a clay unlike any found in that vicinity. Originally, its shape was clearly defined, but the effect of the elements, and the tread of the feet of cattle for ages have rendered it less distinct. The general outline is diamond shaped, with the corners pointing toward the four points of the compass. At the eastern point was a rude elevation forming an altar. The mound is 164 rods long and 60 rods at the widest part. The clay was evidently used to prevent the growth of vegetation, and to preserve the outline of the mound.

TRAILS

The plunging buffalo, keen of instinct, and very practical, broke great roads across the continent in search of food, water and salt. These "traces" or paths, lead from timber groves, to timber groves, always seeking the shortest and best route descending and crossing the streams, usually at the bars formed at the mouth of some smaller stream. These roads were swept clear of debris in summer and snow in winter. The wild Indian, having the same instinct as the wild animal, followed the same trails and wore them smooth by frequent use. The earliest white explorers were dependent on the buffalo and the Indian for ways of getting about. And later came the first settlers to travel over these same trails, in looking for a home. Many of these trails became public highways continuing until this day, monuments of the past. Thus we may mention the great Galena trail from Peoria, passing through Knox county, where it forms in two branches and goes to Galena, one branch going by way of Rock Island. One of the earliest roads in Illinois was one of these trails from Danville, Illinois, near the famous Vermillion salt springs on the south-eastern border of Illinois to Peoria. This became the "Danville and Fort Clark road," over which came the earliest settlers to the military tract. This trail became a well traveled road about 1815. This part of the state being settled earlier than the more eastern parts, owing to the fact of the allotment by the government of this territory, to the soldiers of the War of 1812, thus it will be seen that the stream of earliest immigrants came from the eastern states, usually by the Ohio river, disembarking and following these two trails mentioned, into and through Knox county at a very early date.

It will be seen, by the accompanying map, that Indian trails extended over the greater part of Knox county, several of these being important thoroughfares. One in the northern part of the county, that takes an easterly course, became the main road to Chicago. The one taking a diagonal course from Indian Point township to Truro township, is probably the oldest known trail in the county. It was used by the Indians and French as early as 1673, it being in a direct course from La Salle, on the Illinois, to the Mississippi river. It was quite largely used by Indian trading parties, and formed a part of a direct line of Savage communication between the Chicago portage and the Mississippi river. During the French occupancy, it was used by the French missionary and the fur trader. This path is believed, by many, to be the identical one used by Father Marquette and Joliet on their return eastward on their voyage of discovery. This old trail held its course through Hancock, Warren, Knox, Stark and Bureau counties.

Several points within the state appear to have been the favorite meeting places, not of one tribe alone, but of many tribes, and thus diverging trails led thereto. Peoria, Rock Island and Chicago river were important places. Thus Maquon became quite a center of Indian population, situated as it is at the crossing of two main trails.

"History holds in her iron hand, no more picturesque story than these trails could reveal, were their guarded secrets known. Here met the nations of the Old World and the New—Indian and White, Spaniard, Frenchman, Briton and American; priest and nun, soldier and adventurer, settler and outlaw, fair patrician women, and the outpouring from the Saltpetriere and other hospitals of Paris."

INDIAN TRIBES

When Father Marquette and his companions, with their two Indian guides were floating down the "Father of Waters," they noticed an Indian trail. Mooring their canoes, they followed the trail about six miles, where they came to an Indian village. The inhabitants came out to meet him, and after smoking the calumet, they addressed him thus: "We are the Illini. How beautiful is the sun, oh Frenchman, when thou comest to see us. Our village awaits thee. Thou shalt enter in peace all our dwellings."

THE ILLINI

The first authentic history we have of the Indians of the Mississippi valley reached us through preserved records of La Salle, the French fur trader and explorer, who spent the winter of 1679-80, at what is now Peoria. We know that he and his companions were within twenty miles of Knox county and it is more than probable that they traversed her soil also.

The Indian word "Illini," means in their language, "superior men." This Illini, or Illinois confederacy was composed of five tribes: Michigamies, Cahokias, Kaskaskias, Peorias and Tamaoras. They were intensely warlike, being almost constantly in conflict with other tribes. They were migratory and depended largely upon the summer and winter hunts. In their wars with the Sacs and Foxes, they suffered severely. About 1722 they were overpowered by the Sacs and Foxes, with the aid of other tribes.

SACS AND FOXES

From that time the Sacs and Foxes held, for many years, the supremacy of the land between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers. But the Kickapoos and the Pottawatomies contended with them, each holding certain portions. Upon the arrival of the white people these different tribes were in the vicinity of Knox county.

The Foxes called themselves Musk-wah-ha-kee, a name composed of two words, meaning "those of red earth." The French called them On-ta-ga-mies, that being their spelling of the name given them by other tribes, the meaning being "Foxes," and was bestowed upon them because their totem (or armorial device, as it might be called), was a fox.

The name of their allied brethren, the Sacs, is variously spelled, in Indian dialects, Ou-sa-kies, sauks, etc. Black Hawk was of this tribe. Black Hawk's Indian name was Ma-ka-bai-mis-he-kia-kiak, meaning black sparrow hawk. Both Sacs and Foxes were of Canadian origin. They were a courageous people: shrewd, politic and enterprising.

A PECULIAR CUSTOM

The Sacs and Foxes had a peculiar custom unnoticed in other Indian tribes. Each male child, at birth, was marked with either black or white paint, the mother being extremely careful to apply the colors alternately, so that each family, and the entire nation, might be thus divided into two nearly equal clans, the blacks and the whites, the object of these marks being to keep alive a constant spirit of emulation in the tribe. In their games, hunts and public ceremonies, the blacks always contended with the whites, while in war each party was ambitious to take more scalps than the other.

POTTAWATOMIES

The Pottawatomies were among the most energetic and powerful of the Indian tribes of the northwest. They came to Illinois from Wisconsin. For a long period of years they were a power in the Illinois country, and were the last tribe to leave its borders upon the encroachment of the whites. They were the ones found in Knox county, by its first white settlers. The name Pottawatomie, means "we are making a fire."

INDIAN LAW MAKING

Their general councils were composed of the chiefs and old men. When in council, they usually sat in concentric circles around the speaker, and each individual, notwithstanding the fiery passions that ranked within, preserved an exterior as immovable as if cast in bronze. Before commencing business, a person appeared with the sacred pipe, and another with fire to kindle it. After being lighted, it was first presented to heaven, secondly to earth, thirdly to the presiding spirit, and lastly to the several councilors, each of whom took a whiff. These formalities were observed with scrupulous exactness.

POTTAWATOMIE CHIEF SHAUBENA

Shaubena was a faithful friend of the white men, and often his life was endangered because of it. After the death of the chiefs, Black Patridge and Senachwine, no chief ever exerted so much influence over his nation as did Shaubena. He often prevented the tribe from going to war. The Sacs and Foxes were always trying to kill him, and he was hunted down as a wild beast. They killed his son, Pypeogee and his nephew, Pyps, to enrage him. Black Hawk, being aware of Shaubena's influence, twice visited him to enlist him in his cause, but was unsuccessful. While Black Hawk was a prisoner at Jefferson barracks, he said, "Had it not been for Shaubena, the whole Pottawatomie nation would have joined his standard, and he could have continued the war for years."

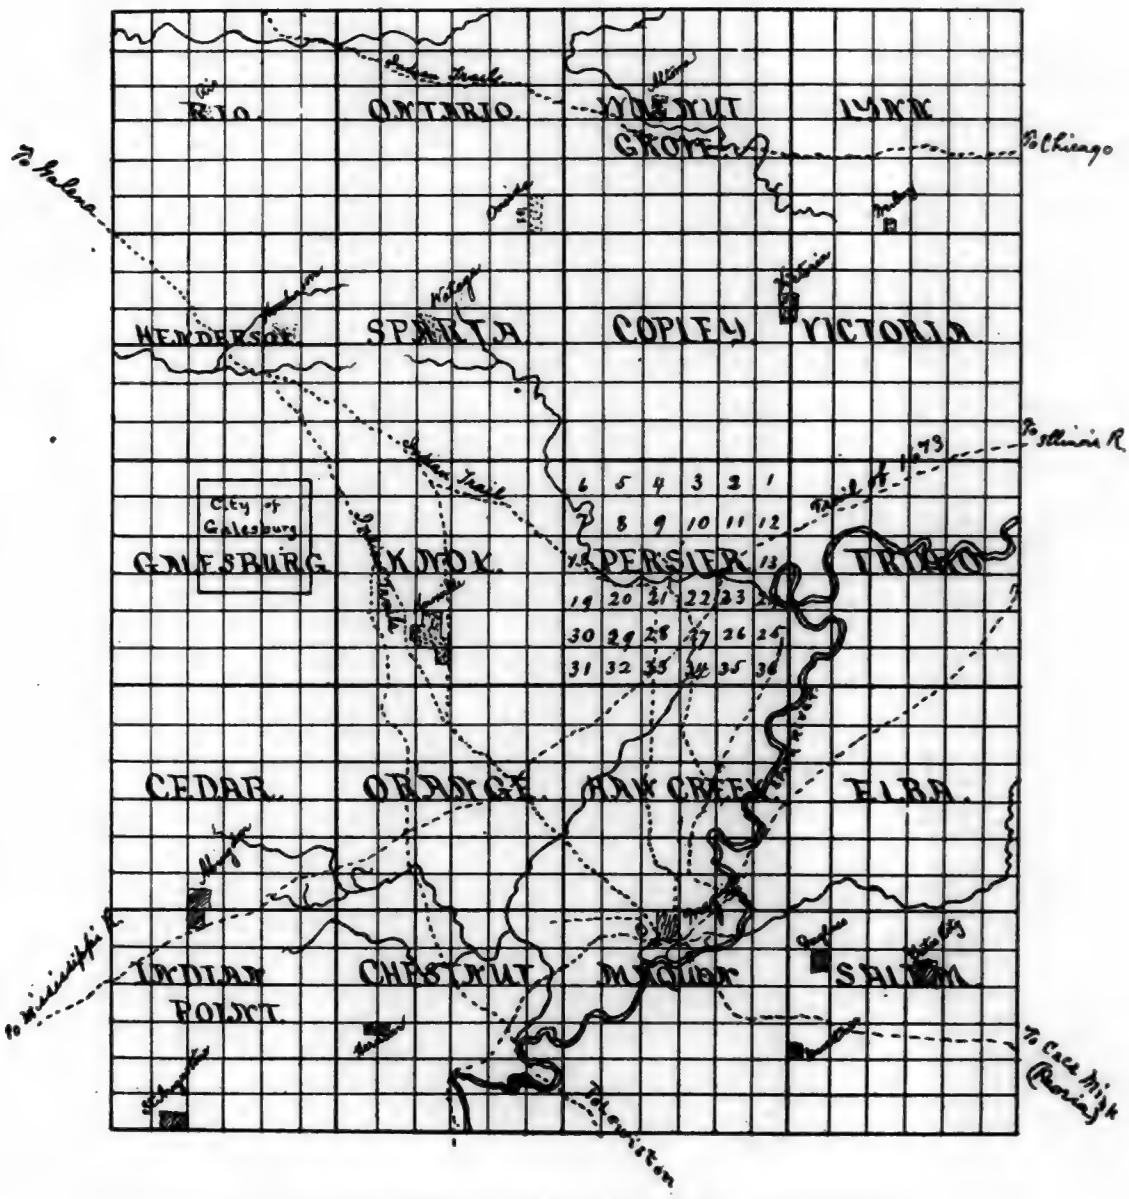
Many early settlers of Knox county owe their lives to Shaubena, as he was ever on the alert to save the whites. He frequently visited the settlers in the northern part of the county. It is said that at one time he visited the settlers at Fraker's Grove, in Lynn township, warning them to leave, that they would be killed if they didn't. David Cooper, John Essex, Thomas Essex, Sr., Thomas Essex, Jr., with their families, fled to the fort near Pekin, Illinois. All but the last named returned later.

Shaubena often went to the home of John Essex. He was always kind to them, once bringing them a quarter of a deer that he had killed.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE EARLY INDIANS

In an interview given Mr. Fred R. Jelliff, Major Thomas McKee, of Galesburg, said: "The Indians most frequently seen in this locality were Foxes, Sacs, Kickapoos and Pottawatomies. They were alike in many particulars. The Kickapoos and Foxes were often in the vicinity of Henderson Grove, which was a favorite sugar camp. They were as kind a people as you ever saw. They were considerate. For instance, if you were in a wigwam talking, the rest would keep quiet and give you respectful attention. They did not interrupt you. They made their children act with deference in the presence of strangers. They did not hunt, perhaps as extensively as do some other tribes. They lived on corn and beans, on berries and other fruits gathered in the woods, while a favorite dish was the wild potato, or penyon, as it was called. This they found in the bottom lands. It was formerly quite abundant but of late I have not noticed it. They speared and caught fish, not small game, and now and then secured a deer. The squaws did the work, such as gathering the penyon and cultivating their ample crops." Their life was one of simplicity, and if was not until they were aroused by injustice and unkindness, that they became cruel and warlike. The Pottawatomies retained their identity as a tribe better than the others.

POTTAWATOMIE LANGUAGE



The language of these Illinois natives was simple, consisting of but a few words made plain by the most significant of gestures. Their names were long and full of vowels. The following are some of the words used by the Pottawatomies:

horse	Nan-ka-toka-shaw	cow	Nan-noose dog	Co-co-sh	hog	Nemoose gun	Pos-ka-soogan	tomahawk	Quimesockin
knife	Co-mone	water	Bish
fire	Sco-ti	whisky	Sco-ti-o-pe drink	Tela-ma-cool	food	Wau-a-net mean	Mean-net	white men	Che-mo-ko-man
the future	Mon-a-to	small	Pe-tete baby	Pap-poose	potato	Pen-yon
nothing left	Chocaco	you are a liar	Kiwa-lis-ki
pumpkin	Wam-pa-cum	beans	Ko-kees corn	Ta-min	melons	Esh-kos-si-min
		hominy	Do-min-a-bo

HOME LIFE

The Pottawatomie summer camps were near the fishing points, and the winter camps in the timber where the birds and wild animals sought shelter from the cold.

The Pottawatomie wigwam was from six to ten feet in diameter—a circle of poles meeting in center at top, and bound together with buckskin thongs. This frame was wrapped on the outside to the top with mats made of bull-rushes woven together, lattice style, with long fibers of rushes and grasses, or sometimes it was covered with strips of bark. In winter, the wigwam was banked with ashes around its base. Inside there was a hole about two feet deep in the center of the wigwam for the fire, the smoke finding its way out the best it could through a small opening at the top of the wigwam. The earth floor of the wigwam was covered with the skins of wild animals, killed when the fur was long and thick. In winter, the Indian men sat most of the time on the rugs smoking and playing cards, while the squaws did the work. The men killed the game and the squaws prepared the meat for future use by jerking it. The squaws made the gardens usually on a rich piece of ground. They prepared the ground by breaking it in a rude way, and planted pumpkins, beans, potatoes and melons. The garden spot was fenced with Jack oak trees. The small trees were cut down and dragged to the garden spot. Forked sticks were driven into the ground for the trees to rest upon. These were arranged so closely as to make a fence that was impregnable to the wild hog or other small wild animals. The ripened corn was shelled and broken to pieces by pounding it in a hollowed-out log with a wooden club. This corn was boiled with water and a piece of pork, making the favorite hog and hominy. Pumpkins were cut in strips and dried in the sun for winter use. The men were dressed in buckskin breech-clout moccasins and leggins, and a blanket fastened about the waist with a skin belt. When ready to sleep, they curled down among the fur rugs and pulled the blankets close about their heads. Every Pottawatomie Indian man carried, swinging to his belt, a skunk skin, with head, teeth, claws and tail intact. In this skunk skin he carried his tobacco, and in an opening just back of the fore legs, he tucked his pipe. Then he had a flat piece of stone or mud that he used for painting his face. His method was to paint this flat piece with blood root (called by the early settlers Indian paint), in designs of lines and crosses; and when he had the figure finished to his taste, he pressed it with the paint still moist, to his face. The Pottawatomie women never smoked, and never painted, except a line down the center of the head from forehead to back of neck, where the hair was parted.

It is interesting to note the way the squaws cared for their babies. The Pottawatomies never had large families, and regarded, with disgust, the many children of the white people's houses. The Indian mother devoted her whole time to the care of her pappoose. The baby was laid upon a flat piece of linn bark, called by the Pottawatomies a chimote. The baby was fastened to the chimote by wrapping with cloth from feet to chest. And at the chest, the ends were tied in front and to them was tied a string of beads or something bright for the baby to play with. The arms were left free, and another strip of cloth was bound across the forehead and was tied to the back of the board. When the mother traveled, she swung the baby on the chimote to her back, and when she worked, she stood the chimote against a tree. The Pottawatomie babies were often pretty and seldom cried.

LOCAL ITEMS OF HISTORY

Knox county has been the home, for a longer and shorter period of time, of many tribes of Indians. From past historians and from people now living, it is learned that sixteen and possibly all of the twenty townships of the county have been inhabited by them. The following local items have been gleaned from accounts of the aborigines and of the relics found in various places:

Rio Township

In 1832 John Cresswell settled on the S. W. Quarter of Section 27. During that year, a fort was made on his land, it was named Fort Aggie in honor of Mrs. Cresswell. In 1836 the fort was torn down by Joseph Hahn, who built a barn of the logs and which he used for tramping out wheat with horses. Other thrashing machines were unknown. Another fort was built, it is said, on Section 33. These forts were built to protect the white settlers during the Black Hawk war.

Ontario Township

The only hill in the township of any size is Pilot Knob, having an eighty acre grove upon it. In this vicinity many Indian arrows have been found.

Walnut Grove Township

During the year 1836-37, a band of Indians about thirty in number, camped for a short time, just west of John Thompson's residence, and near the present

Altona high school building. An old Indian and his squaw remained long after the rest of the Indians had gone. This pair were considered good neighbors.

Lynn Township

Mr. Michael Fraker, in 1828, while still living in Kentucky, purchased a farm from the government in Lynn township. Upon his arrival, he found a band of Indians located on his land on Section 23. There was quite a controversy as to whom the land belonged, the Indians claiming they received their title directly from their god. Mr. Fraker used considerable diplomacy. He, being a blacksmith, mended their guns, and did other favors for them. They in turn, helped him build his cabin. They could see no reason why he put in so much chinking between the logs to make them tight. They finally decided to move. They went seven miles east and built a village on Indian creek. They always remained friendly to Mr. Fraker, coming back every spring to make maple sugar, and to raise sugar corn and vegetables, leaving in the fall for their hunting grounds. Near Frakers, there is a fine spring, trails leading in all directions from this spring.

Henderson Township

Indians had corn fields on Sections 23 and 26 and cultivated the soil for years. In an early day, a well was dug on Section 30 near the creek. At a depth of 60 feet, the workmen found what seemed to be an Indian camping ground. Ashes, stumps and general rubbish fresh as if the fire had just gone out; a cedar log was also found.

The Indians lived in wigwams, helped the settlers make maple sugar and were friendly till the war broke out. Anticipating an Indian outbreak, the white settlers built two forts. One fort on Section 33, was named Lewis Fort. A description of this fort is given elsewhere in this article. The other on Section 10, was unnamed. This township furnished a company of "Minute Rangers" in the Black Hawk war.

Copley Township

At Foreman's Grove, on Foreman creek, near the northern limits of the township, a small tribe of Indians were located when the first settlers arrived.

Knox Township

On Section 32 are several Indian graves, and several trails pass through the township.

Persifer Township

One branch of the Gelena trail passes through the township from north to south, crossing Court creek where Appleton bridge now stands. The north end of the bridge stands in the Indian ford. There was an Indian village on the present site of Dahinda (lodge poles were still standing in 1830). On the bluffs nearby are 25 or 30 mounds, supposed to be Indian graves. Many arrows, stone axes and bullets have been found in the township, Sections 35 and 36 being particularly rich in these relics. Indian ladders were found in the woods by the early settlers. They were made by cutting a small tree having many limbs, then cutting the limbs off so as to leave enough of a stump on each limb to make a step. The last Indians seen were on Section 14, N. E. quarter. There is every evidence that a fierce battle was once fought on the north and east quarter of Section 14, about two miles north and west of where Court creek empties into Spoon river. Within an area of a few acres, large numbers of bullets have been plowed up, and have been picked up by handfuls. They are of the old-fashioned kind of bullets, such as were used in the smooth bore Queen Anne muskets of two centuries ago. This would indicate revolutionary times, or before.

Maple sugar was made in this township annually. There were several traditions of hidden wealth buried by the Indians. A cellar was dug on the Taylor farm in 1841, when at the depth of four feet, three bars of copper were found, which had been hand forged out. In digging a well, at the depth of twenty-two feet, remains of a camp-fire, charcoal and rubbish were found.

Truro Township

On the S. W. quarter of Section 31, on land owned by Charles Bradford, a number of Indian graves were found, when the first white settlers came. The corpses had been buried in the forks of the trees, ten to fifteen feet above the ground. Logs had been split in halves and hollowed out, the forks of the trees were cut away with their tomahawks sufficient to let them in, and the rude coffins there rested with their skeleton contents until about 1836, when the whites took them down and buried them in the earth. One sacrificial mound is located on the east quarter of Section 12 of Truro township.

Cedar Township

Mrs. John Reed settled on Section 17, in 1836, on the very ground where the Indians had camped, and used water from the same spring.

Orange Township

There were many Indians in the township when the whites came. In early times there was a small grove on the N. E. quarter of Section 16, Orange township. This was a favorite camping place for the roving bands of Indians on their way from Spoon river to the Mississippi. Numerous fine specimens of arrow points were found here on Mr. Myers Eiker's farm.

The last appearance of any considerable number of Indians in Orange township was in 1843, when several hundred Sacs and Foxes camped on the northwest quarter of Section 5, while on their way to the reservation in Indian Territory. A block house was built on the southwest quarter of Section 3. It was called McCallister's fort. The land is now owned by Mrs. J. M. Nisley. One man was killed by Indians near this fort.

Haw Creek Township

In this township was an arrow-maker's workshop. On Red Chalk hill, vast numbers of arrows in all stages of completeness, and flint chips are found, showing that here arrows were made.

Indian Point Township

There was but one grove of timber in the township, and that extended into a point. Along the edge of this timber, which extended from Cedar Fork to Section 16, many Indian remains were found. Remains of bark wigwams, flint arrows, axes, hatchets and domestic utensils were found. Hence the name of the township. Indian creek empties into Cedar Fork, and that into Spoon river.

Chestnut Township

On Section 12, were many graves, on the bank of Haw creek near the iron bridge. On land belonging to Carl Burnside, on the southwest quarter of Section 15, Chestnut township, are four mounds about three feet high and forty-five feet in circumference. Some interesting things were once found in them when opened some ten years ago. On Section 33 are a group of three graves.

On Mr. Charles Burnside's farm, Chestnut township, Section 14, northeast quarter, the hills and valleys back of his house were covered with arrows and implements of war, many yet remaining. Across the road on land belonging to Mr. William Swigart, Section 11, southeast quarter, there is a valley north of the house where the ground was covered with arrows, as were the hills surrounding it. If we only knew what mighty tribes contended here.

At the beginning of the Black Hawk war, all the Pottawatomie Indians disappeared forever from this locality, none of the whites knowing when or where they went.

Maquon Township

Along the banks of Spoon river the Red Men found their Paradise. Its waters were filled with fish and mussels, while wild fowls haunted its banks, and deer and small game abounded in its woodland and prairie. It was called, in the Algonquin tongue, the language used by the Pottawatomie Indians, A-ma-quon-sip-pi, A-ma-quon meaning mussel, or mussel shell. The Indians used the shell as we do spoons for dipping up food. The word sip-pi means river, thus A-ma-quon-sip-pi meant Spoon river. Because of the Indians' manner of pronouncing the first syllable of a word very short, it was difficult for the white man's ear to catch the sound, and thus it was an easy step from A-ma-quon-sip-pi to Maquon. In a government report, in 1813, Brigadier General Howard speaks of several encampments on the "Maquonie" as the river was known at that time.

Amaquon village was situated on the S. E. quarter of Section 4, Maquon township. It was located near a hill, and near a fine spring of water; there was a garden and orchard on the hill north and a garden east of it. These gardens were fenced with jack oak trees. The trees of this orchard furnished fruit for Mr. Wm. Palmer, the first white man to build a house in Knox county. It was built on the top of the hill just beside where the main trails crossed.

Village No. 2 was situated about a half mile distant to the north on the northeast quarter of Section 4, on the spot where later Mr. Nelson Selby, the first land owner in Maquon township, settled. The tent poles of this village were still standing in 1850. Mr. Selby's daughter, Mrs. Mahala Benson, used to play, when a child with the buckskin thongs with which the tent poles had been tied. This village had its garden northeast of it, on a small flat of very rich soil one quarter of an acre in size. For many years, the kettle sticks remained in this garden. Where the Indians held their annual green corn feasts and dances, south of the garden, were three Indian graves. Northeast of this garden, at the foot of the hill, is the famous Selby spring, which the Indians opened and used. In the year 1850, a white man brought an Indian troop to give a show in Maquon. When they camped at the south edge of town, these Indians went straight to the Selby spring for water, showing that they were familiar with the place.

Village No. 3 was on the southeast quarter, Section 2, Maquon township. It was in a valley on the north of the bluff on French creek.

Village No. 4 was located on the Mrs. Lodema McGirr farm on the northwest quarter of Section 12, Maquon township. Tent poles, maple sugar troughs and water boxes were there many years after white settlers came.

Village No. 5 was on Mr. Menzo Morse's farm, northeast quarter of Section 35, Maquon township. It was on a depression surrounded by hills and near a large spring. Indians spent the winter of 1829 here. Old settlers remember that there were about 100 inhabitants in this village of which the larger number were men.

Several burial grounds were found in Maquon township. One of considerable size was on the bluff or mound at the mouth of French creek, a short distance southeast of Maquon, on the southeast quarter, Section 2. The builders of the C. B. & Q. railroad cut through a large number of graves in the year 1856. On the southwest quarter of Section 5, during the childhood of the older settlers, there were more than a dozen burial mounds from 35 to 40 feet in circumference.

Salem Township

In the eastern part of Salem township on the farm of Mr. Avery Dalton, Knox county's oldest inhabitant, was held annually, Pottawatomie green corn feasts and dances; also, councils were held.

Lewis Fort

Lewis Fort, in Henderson township, was built by Wm. Lewis and sixteen others in the short time of four weeks. It was near the woods, was 210 feet square, and was built of oak timbers, twelve feet each in length, set close together in the ground, forming a piece fence or palisade eight feet in height. This was lined with chunks of sod two feet wide, four feet thick, and two feet in length. Portholes were made every four feet. Block houses were erected on two of the corners, at which each of the four sides of the fort could be guarded. These houses were 16 x 20 feet, and projected slightly beyond the fence to prevent the approach of incendiaries. A shed extended all the way around the inside. The only place of entry was a doorway, twelve feet wide, closed with a heavy puncheon door. A sham cannon of basswood gave the fort a deadly look. The other forts were of the same general plan.

INDIANS OF THE REVOLUTION

It is little known that this portion of Illinois took any part in the revolutionary war, but the American army marched through Knox county on their way from Peoria to Rock Island. Colonel (afterwards General) George Rogers Clark, received twenty volunteers from Kentucky, under Captain John Montgomery, which was an important addition to his army. Captain Montgomery is described as one of the "Long Hunters of Kentucky, Irishman full of Fight." In 1778 he was made lieutenant colonel and given the title "Commander in chief of the Virginia Troops in the County of Illinois."

The condition of the American army may be judged from an extract of a letter he wrote in September, 1779, to General Clark: "I would be glad if it is in your power to send to me a Relefe to me for the soldiers, if it is only as much as will make them a little Jump Jacote and a pair of overalls, I think they might scuffle through."

On May 26, 1779, the British and Indians attacked the Americans at Cahokia, Illinois. The command was under a Mr. Hess, and was composed of 750 men, including servants and Indians. These were Menominies, Sioux and Sacs and Foxes. General Clark and his men made so brave a resistance at Cahokia, that the British retreated northward, one part going by the Mississippi river, and the other going by the Illinois river. Colonel Montgomery was ordered to follow the enemy up the Illinois river to the lake (Peoria), and then cross the country and attack the Sacs and Foxes on Rock river near its mouth. This attack during the fore part of June, 1780, by the American army upon the Rock river town of the Sacs and Foxes, is the only event in the Revolutionary war that brought the American army so far north. And notice: Knox county is in a direct line between Peoria and Rock Island, and that the well traveled Galena trail passes from one to the other, therefore, the army must have marched through Knox county. The Indian villages of Maquonia were on the well worn trail from Peoria to Rock river (Indian village), hence it is no stretch of imagination to presume that they passed through the present village of Maquon. Another evidence is this: there are, within the confines of Knox county, abundant evidence that there were, at least, three heavy battles fought on her soil and neither battlefield is ten miles away from Maquon.

This American army, under Colonel Montgomery, consisted of 350 men, according to his letter written February 22, 1783, to the Honorable, the board of commissioners for the settlement of western accounts. Among other things he says, after speaking of General Clark's movements and commands: "After giving me instructions he (General Clark) left Cohos (Cohokia) the fourth of June with a small escort for the mouth of the Ohio river, on his route to Kentucky. I immediately proceeded to the business I was ordered, and marched three hundred and fifty men to the lake open on the Illinois river, and from thence to the Rock river, destroying the towns and crops proposed." Colonel Montgomery gives no detailed account of the march from Cahokia, or of the engagement at Rock river. It was probably only a minor matter to this "Fighting Irishman." No mention is made how the Montgomery army returned, but it is safe to presume that they went as they came, by land.

INDIAN TREATIES

There were, at least, three Indian treaties that effected the Indians of Knox county. Th first one being a treaty made at St. Louis, on November 3, 1804, between William Henry Harrison, governor of Indian Territory, and of the District of Louisiana, with the chief and the head men of the United Sacs and Foxes, tribes of Indians. It is as follows:

For this land, the Indians were to have goods to the value of $2,234.50, and an annuity of $1,000 per year. By a treaty at Fort Madison, April, 1809, and renewed during different years, they were allowed to remain on the lands until they were surveyed.

It seems that the Ottawas, Chippewas and the Pottawatomies also claimed rights in these lands. On August 24, 1816, a treaty was entered into between the United States and these Indians, under which the Indians relinquished all claims on these lands, as follows: The head chiefs and warriors for themselves and the tribes they represent, agree to relinquish, and hereby do relinquish, to the United States, all their rights, claims and title to the land contained in the before mentioned session of the Sacs and Foxes, which lies south of a due west line, from the southern extremity of Lake Michigan to the Mississippi river. And they, moreover, cede to the United States all the land contained in the following bounds, to-wit: Beginning at the left bank of the Fox river of Illinois, ten miles above the mouth of said Fox river, thence running so as to cross Sandy Creek, ten miles above its mouth; thence in a direct line to a point ten miles north of the west end of Portage, between Chicago Creek, which empties into Lake Michigan. The general boundary line between the lands of the United States and the said Indian tribes shall be as follows, to-wit: Beginning at a point on the Missouri river opposite of the mouth of the Gasconade river, thence in a direct course so as to strike the river Jefferson (in Iowa), at the distance of thirty miles from its mouth, and down the said Jefferson to the Mississippi, thence up the Mississippi to the mouth of the Onisconsing river, and up the same which shall be thirty-six miles in a direct line to the point where the Fox river (a branch of the Illinois) leaves the small lake Sakaegan, then down the Fox river to the Illinois river and down the same to the Mississippi. The treaty (Aug. 24, 1816) was attended by twenty-eight chief Pottawatomies, Ottawas, Sacs and Foxes, and Kickapoos.

LANDS SURVEYED

From 1816 to 1823, the land between the Illinois and the Mississippi rivers was surveyed, by congressional enactment, May 6, 1812, and subsequently the military tract of Illinois was created consisting, as we know, of the land between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers south of the north line of what is now Bureau and Henry counties.

Black Hawk, chief of the Sacs and Foxes, who fought for the British in the War of 1812, declared these treaties were not binding, and that they would not abide by them. Many whites moved upon the land of the Indian. In 1831, Black Hawk and a band of warriors established themselves on the disputed territory, ordering the whites to leave at once.

ILLINOIS INDIANS IN THE WAR OF 1812

Upon the declaration of war in June, 1812, the Pottawatomies and most other tribes of Indians in the territory of Illinois, strongly sympathized with England. Just prior to the War of 1812, Tecumseh, the great Indian chieftain, endeavored to arouse the western Indians against the whites. For this purpose, he visited Illinois and perhaps Knox county. Long years afterwards the Pottawatomie chief, Shabbona (who then lived in Bureau county) stated that Tecumseh came to him personally to get him and his tribe to join with him against the whites.

It is not generally known that Illinois took any important part in the War of 1812, but the record, though incomplete, shows that at least four regiments and a number of rangers were enlisted and in active service, and had it not been for the bravery and vigilance of these rangers, the other settlements of Illinois would have met the sad fate of Fort Dearborn.

MAQUONIA INDIANS

In September, 1812, an expedition was fitted out at Camp Russell, near Edwardsville, not far from St. Louis, to march to capture Peoria, as the white settlers there were supposed to be in sympathy with the Indians, and was to take the Indian tribes in that vicinity. During the expedition, Major Boone, was sent with one hundred from Peoria in the direction of Rock river, to look out for war parties of Indians. When he went back, he reported that he had penetrated the country northwesterly and within forty-five miles of Rock river, he said there were several encampments of Indians of the Maquonia, which seemed to be deserted about the time the army arrived at Peoria. This is from records of the adjutant general of Illinois, and to my mind is conclusive evidence that the army marched to Spoon river, which was known by that name at that time, and crossed it at Maquon, Knox county, Illinois. I can not otherwise account for the name as there is not another town in America by that name.

Another expedition during the War of 1812 marched from Edwardsville to Quincy, where was a large Sacs and Fox village, thence across what is now Schuyler and Fulton counties, to the mouth of Spoon river, near where Havana now is, and thence to Peoria and destroyed the Pottawatomie village of Chief Gomo, near Chillicothe. Peoria was burned and the inhabitants carried away in 1813.

BLACK HAWK WAR

Black Hawk war seems to be a blot upon the fair name of Illinois because of the greed of some of the white people who were determined to have the land, regardless of the Indian rights and claims. The following speech, by the famous Black Hawk, explains the Indian's idea in the matter:

BLACK HAWK TO GENERAL STREET

"You have taken me prisoner with all my warriors. I am much grieved, for I expected, if I did not defeat you, to hold out much longer, and give you much trouble, before I surrendered. I tried hard to bring you into ambush, but your last general understood Indian fighting. I determined to rush on you and fight you face to face. I fought hard, but your guns were well aimed. The bullets flew like birds through the air and whizzed by our ears like the wind through the trees in winter. My warriors fell around me. It began to look dismal.

"I saw my evil day at hand. The sun rose dim upon us in the morning and at night it sank in a dark cloud and looked like a ball of fire. That was the last sun that shone on Black Hawk. His heart is dead and no longer beats quick in his bosom. He is now a prisoner of the white men: they will do with him as they wish, but he can stand torture, and is not afraid of death. He is no coward. Black Hawk is an Indian. He has done nothing for which an Indian ought to be ashamed. He has fought for his countrymen, against the white men who came, year after year, to cheat them and take away their land.

"You know the cause of our making war. It is known to all white men. They ought to be ashamed of it. The white men despise the Indians and drive them from their homes. They smile in the face of the poor Indian, to cheat him; they shake him by the hand, to gain his confidence, to make him drunk, and to deceive him. We told them to let us alone and keep away from us, but they followed on and beset our paths and they coiled themselves among us like a snake. They poisoned us by their touch. We were not safe. We lived in danger. We looked up to the Great Spirit. We went to our Father. We were encouraged. His great council gave us fair words and big promises, but we got no satisfaction; things were growing worse. There were no deer in the forests. The oppossum and beaver were fled. The springs were drying up, and our squaws and pappooses were without food to keep them from starving.

"We called a great council and built a large fire. The spirit of our fathers arose, and spoke to us to avenge our wrongs or die. We set up the war-whoop, and dug up the tomahawk; our knives were ready, and the heart of Black Hawk swelled high in his bosom, when he led his warriors to the battle. He is satisfied. He will go to the world of Spirits contended. He has done his duty. His father will meet him there and commend him.

"Black Hawk is a true Indian, and he disdains to cry like a woman. He feels for his wife, for his children, for his friends, but he does not care for himself. He cares for the nation and the Indian. They will suffer. He laments their fate. Farewell, my nation. Black Hawk tried to save you and avenge your wrongs. He drank the blood of some of the whites. He has been taken prisoner, and his plans are crushed. He can do no more. He is near his end. His sun is setting, and he will rise no more. Farewell to Black Hawk."

COURTS—THEIR JURISDICTION AND SUITS OF PUBLIC IMPORTANCE

By Hon. George W. Thompson, Judge Circuit and Appellate Courts.

The legal history of Knox county in detail would include a review of the acts of the legislature from the admission of the state of Illinois into the Union, the records of the courts which had jurisdiction over the territory now within the county, a biography of the judges who have presided over the courts having such jurisdiction and of the leading lawyers who have conducted litigation concerning public matters in the county and a review of the more important cases tried within the county. This history of the county, in the appropriate departments, will contain biographical sketches of the lawyers who have practiced and are now practicing before the bar and of the judges who have presided over the courts of record in the county. It is intended in this sketch to review only topics of general interest concerning legal matters within the county. The statutes of the state required that the territory within the limits of the county should have three hundred inhabitants before it could be organized as a county, and there was included within the county when first organized the territory now within its boundaries with the two townships that are now the west townships of Stark county and which were detached from Knox county in 1839, when Stark county was organized.

An order was entered in the circuit court at Lewistown in Fulton county, of which Knox was then a part, on the 5th of July, 1830, that a term of the circuit court be held in Knox county on the Friday before the first Monday in October, 1830.

When this county was organized the statutes of the state provided, that the county commissioners court in each county should divide the county into districts, in each of which two justices of the peace should be elected, except in the district in which the county seat was situated and in that district three justices of the peace should be elected. Justices of the peace had substantially the same jurisdiction in criminal and in civil matters that they have at the present time, with the exception that in civil matters their jurisdiction was limited to the sum of $100. The statute then in force is very similar to the present statute except that justices have been given additional jurisdiction in a few other special matters; there has been very little change in the practice in such courts. In 1874 their jurisdiction was enlarged to controversies not exceeding $200.

The statutes in force in 1830 also provided that a court of record styled "the court of probate" should be established and held at the several county seats, and that the judges of probate should be appointed by the general assembly to be paid a reasonable compensation to be allowed them out of the county treasury by the county commissioners' court. They were required to hold terms on the first Monday in every month and had jurisdiction over estates of deceased persons. The only jurisdiction that the court of probate had when first established was in the matter of estates of deceased persons, the appointment of guardians and matters relating to apprentices. They had no jurisdiction in the allowance of claims against estates if the claim exceeded $1000 or in proceedings to sell real estate to pay debts.

In 1837 the legislature changed the name from probate judge to probate justice, and made the office elective by the voters for the term of four years. The probate justice was also given the same jurisdiction in civil matters as justices of the peace, and in cases of debt or assumpsit where an administrator or executor was a party, they had civil jurisdiction to the extent of $1000. In 1845 the style of the probate justice was changed by the legislature to "probate justice of the peace;" the term of office was reduced to two years, but their jurisdiction remained substantially the same as under the act of 1837.

The constitution of 1848 provided that a county court should be established and that a county judge should be elected in each county. By the statute of 1849 county courts were given full jurisdiction in the settlement of estates, including the power to sell real estates of decedents to pay debts, with the same jurisdiction as justices of the peace in civil suits, where the amount involved did not exceed $100. In 1872, under the constitution of 1870, the jurisdiction of county courts in civil suits was enlarged, giving them jurisdiction in all matters over which justices of the peace had jurisdiction, when the amount involved did not exceed $500 with jurisdiction, concurrent with the circuit court, over appeals from justices of the peace, but appeals from the county court when sitting as a justice of the peace, were to be taken to the circuit court. They were also given jurisdiction over criminal cases, where the punishment was not imprisonment in the penitentiary or death, and the circuit court was authorized to certify indictments in such matters to the county court for trial. In 1877 the jurisdiction of the county courts was extended in civil suits to $1000; law terms were established for that court, and appeals in common law cases directed to be taken to the appellate court and in proceedings for the sale of real estate to pay debts of decedents to the supreme court.

There was also a court of record for the government of counties, established when the state was organized, called "the county commissioners' court." It was composed of three county commissioners elected in each county; they had power to appoint a clerk. The jurisdiction of this court was limited to matters concerning the county revenue, the imposing of county taxes, granting licenses for ferries and "taverns" and anything that brought in revenue to the county. It also had jurisdiction in all cases of public roads, canals, turnpike roads and toll bridges. While styled a court, it was simply the means of county government. This court continued until 1849, when an act was passed authorizing counties to adopt township organization by a vote of the people. While it is styled a court, yet it had no jurisdiction in civil matters, between third parties or in criminal matters, its jurisdiction being limited to county business.

The circuit court in Illinois has always been a court having general jurisdiction over all legal matters except in the probate of wills and the settlement of estates. The first term of the circuit court was opened in Knox county in a "temporary seat of justice" on the first day of October, 1830, at the home of John B. Gum, which was a log cabin on section thirty-two in Henderson township.

The first judicial order, made in the circuit court of Knox county on that day, directed the recording of an order made at Lewistown on June 10, 1830, that an election be held at the house of John B. Gum for the election of three county commissioners, a sheriff and coroner, to be held on the 3rd of July, 1830. There was a grand and petit jury in attendance. On the first day of court the grand jury made a report concerning the condition of the jail and that there was no business for their consideration. The court adjourned until the next day when the court was adjourned for the term. The only business transacted by the court at that term, other than directing the recording of the orders concerning the organization of the county, the approval of the bonds of John G. Sanborn, as clerk of the court, of Stephen Osburn as sheriff, ordering such bonds recorded, the appointing of a temporary states attorney and the empanelling and discharging of grand and petit juries was to certify to the county commissioners court, that the sheriff had attended court two days.

On January 15, 1831, the legislature passed an act providing, "that the seat of justice for the county of Knox is hereby permanently established on the southwest quarter of section twenty-eight in township eleven north, of range two east" and authorizing the county commissioners of the county to purchase said quarter of land of the United States "and to lay off on the same a town which shall be called Henderson." (Laws of 1831, page 62.) On December 22nd, 1832, the legislature enacted: "That the county seat of Knox, hitherto known by the name of Henderson, shall from and after the passage of this act be known and designated by the name of Knoxville." Knoxville remained a town until 1853, when it was incorporated as a city by an act of the legislature.

In March, 1831, the county commissioners made a contract with William Lewis for the building of a court house in the town of Henderson to which the legislature had transferred the seat of justice. A two story court house twenty-eight feet long by twenty feet wide built of hewed logs was completed in 1833, at a cost when furnished of less than $400, which served all the purposes of a court house until 1840, when a two story brick court house was erected at a cost of $15,450 on the public square in Knoxville. That building still stands and is now used by the city of Knoxville as an office building. In 1854 a two room fireproof brick building was erected near the court house for the use of the clerks and for the safe keeping of the records.

In 1873 the county seat was changed from Knoxville to Galesburg, where court was held in the opera house on the south side of the square until October term 1883. The records of the county were kept, and the clerk's offices were located in a one story fireproof building on South Cherry street, which had been built by the city of Galesburg for the use of the county, where the city hall of Galesburg now stands. That building was also used as a county court room.

In 1882 the county began the erection of a second story over the clerk's offices which was reached by an outside stairway. The circuit court was held in the second story of this building from October, 1883, until the present court house was completed in 1886 at a cost, when furnished, of about $150,000.

In 1860 the question of the removal of the county seat from Knoxville to Galesburg was raised. From that time the location of the county seat figured much in the official affairs and in the politics of the county. Dennis Clark who resided in Abingdon was elected county judge in November, 1865, and held that office five successive terms and until the election in 1886. The fact that the city of his residence was favorable to the change of the county seat to Galesburg was long used as an argument why the citizens of Galesburg should vote for him for county judge. In 1862 in a constitutional convention, propositions were offered, contended for and resisted, the ultimate motive of which was the removal of the county seat of Knox county from Knoxville to Galesburg. In 1865 an act was passed by the legislature providing for a change from Knoxville to Galesburg if the people of the county should by a vote of its citizens favor such removal. In March, 1869, an act was passed authorizing the supervisors to appoint commissioners to contract with the city of Galesburg or persons offering gifts to the county as an inducement for the removal of the county seat to Galesburg. An election was held on the question of the removal of the county seat to Galesburg on April 6, 1869. On the face of the returns the vote was against the removal. That election was contested, and on a trial in the circuit court of McDonough county, where the case was transferred, by a change of venue, it was held, Judge Higby of Pike county presiding, that the majority of the vote on the location of the county seat was in favor of Galesburg. The case was one of the most important and closely contested civil cases that have arisen in this county. The ablest lawyers that could be found in the state were employed in the case. The law firm of Craig and Harvey, composed of Judge A. M. Craig, who at that time lived midway between Galesburg and Knoxville, and later was elected to the supreme bench of the state, and his brother-in-law, Curtis K. Harvey, a very promising young lawyer, were the leading counsel for the city of Knoxville. They were assisted by G. L. Hannaman and P. H. Sanford, who resided in Knoxville and who afterwards from 1886 to 1898 presided as judge of the county court after the removal of the county seat to Galesburg, but who lived and died in Knoxville, and by Eagan and Temple and H. M. Weed of Peoria, and Beckwith, Ayer & Kales of Chicago. The case for the city of Galesburg was presented by McKenzie and Williams, Frost & Tunnicliff and Kitchell and Arnold. E. P. Williams of McKenzie and Williams is entitled to much credit for the great care and freedom from error with which the case was presented in the circuit court, and the ultimate success of Galesburg at the end of the case in the supreme court.

At the time of the county seat contest all that was required in favor of a removal was a majority of the votes cast. Prior to that contest there was no general legislation in such matters, but special acts were passed by the general assembly concerning different counties. The constitution of 1870 contains a provision that a vote to change a county seat shall not be taken oftener than once in ten years, and that if the new location is further from the center of the county than the old one, then a vote of three-fifths of the votes of the county in favor of the removal is required to move it, but if the new location is nearer the center of the county, then a majority vote only shall be necessary. The contest in Knox county was the cause of the foregoing provision.

On June 11, 1832, court was opened in the new log court house just finished in Knoxville, then called Henderson. The grand jury empanelled at that term reported that there were no violations of law, and the records show that there was no business before the court either of a criminal or civil nature. The first bill in chancery filed in this county was a bill for divorce, at that time called a libel for divorce, filed to the October term, 1832, entitled Tanner vs. Tanner. At that term, there being no general statute concerning notice of suit to non-resident defendants by publication, an order was made for the publication of notice to the defendant in a public newspaper published in the state. The libellant, Rhoda Tanner, upon a showing as to her poverty, not only procured an order that she be permitted to prosecute her suit as a poor person without the payment of any costs, but also secured an order directing and requiring James W. Whitney, an attorney, to prosecute her suit without any compensation or fee. The only other business at that term was the issuing of attachments against persons summoned for jury service who have failed to appear.

At the June term 1833, in Knoxville the first entry on the records of the county was made in a criminal case. That case came on a change of venue from McDonough county. The only common law case upon the docket at that term, in which any order was made, was an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, which had been obtained on a note dated in May, 1830, "payable in young cattle." O. H. Browning, a lawyer from Quincy, a leader of the bar in the state in his day, appeared as the attorney for the defendant. The defendant procured a continuance and the case was not disposed of until 1834, when, the defendant being unable to obtain any further postponement, the appeal was dismissed and judgment for $21.15 rendered against the defendant.

The second and third chancery suits, begun within the county, were also bills for divorce. A decree was entered in April, 1834, granting a divorce to the libellant, in the bill for divorce filed to the October term, 1832. The first indictment returned by a grand jury, for an offence committed within the county, was returned at the April term, 1834. At that term two indictments were returned, one charging certain defendants with riot, and another charging the defendant with selling intoxicating liquor without a license. The cases were tried before a petit jury and the defendants were acquitted.

Under the constitution of 1818 the judicial power of the state was vested in a supreme court and such inferior courts as the general assembly might establish. It provided that the justices of the supreme court and of the inferior courts should be appointed by a joint ballot of both branches of the general assembly and be commissioned by the governor and hold their offices during good behavior, until the end of the first session of the legislature after January 1, 1824.

Richard M. Young, one of the judges of the supreme court who received a salary of $1000 each, presided over the circuit court in Knox county from its organization until the May term, 1837, when he was succeeded by James H. Ralston. Stephen A. Douglas was one of the judges of the supreme court from 1841 to 1843 and presided over the circuit court of Knox county during that time.

In 1848 a new constitution was adopted by the state which declared that the judicial power of the state should be vested in a supreme court consisting of three judges, in circuit courts, county courts and in justices of the peace, all of whom should be elected by the people of fixed and definite terms. The constitution of 1848 fixed the salaries of judges of the supreme court at $1200 per annum and of the judges of the circuit court at $1000 per annum.

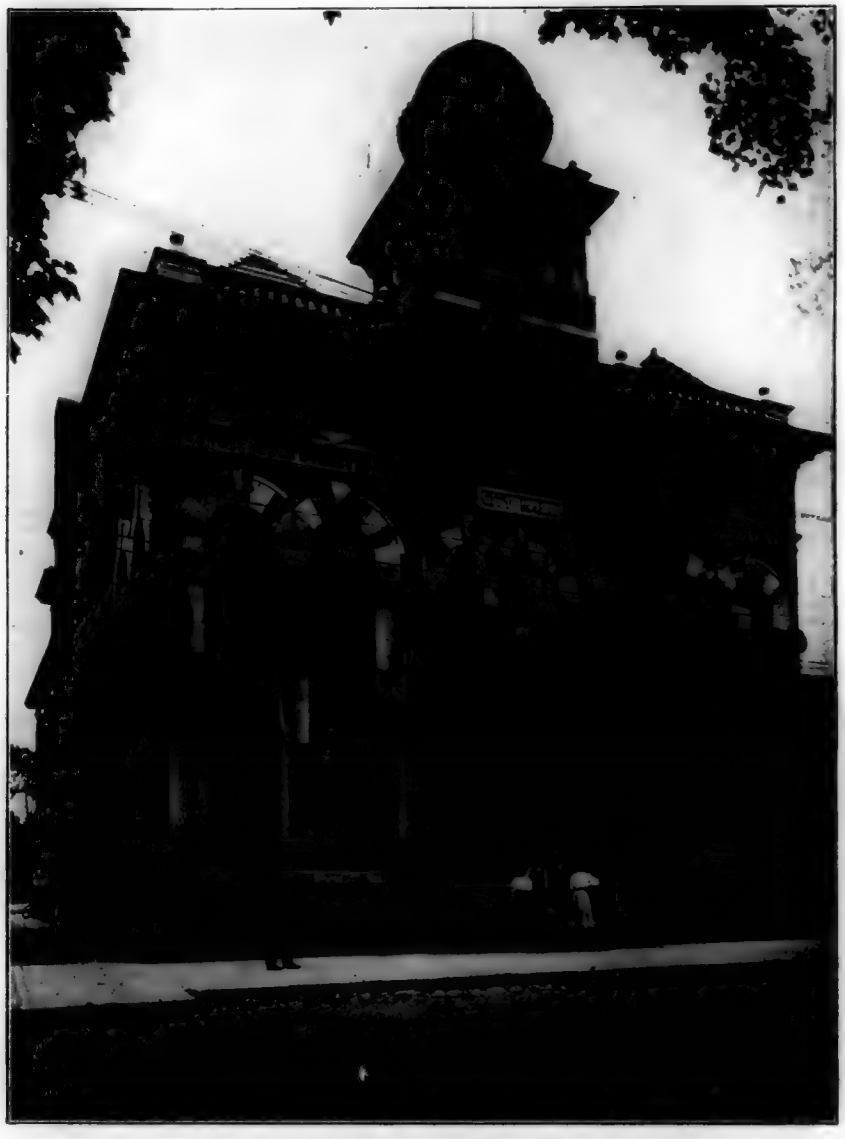
The constitution of 1870 increased the number of judges of the supreme court to seven and the salary of such judges to $4000 until otherwise provided by law. It also made provision for the creation of inferior appellate courts by the general assembly, which provision was acted on in 1877, and the appellate courts established. It fixed the salaries of circuit judges at $3000 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

The appellate courts were formed by an act dividing the state into a certain number of circuits, each circuit being composed of several counties, and electing three circuit judges in each. The state was divided into four appellate districts. The supreme court assigns three circuit judges to each district, who do appellate duty as well as circuit court duty, however without any additional pecuniary compensation, but are recompensed by the honor of the appointment.



In the constitutions of 1818 and 1848 there was no restriction against special legislation, and much of the time of the general assembly was occupied with legislation, concerning matters of local interest only, in which the public at large was not interested. The constitution of 1870 contains a provision against special legislation concerning certain enumerated things, and provides generally that in all cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted. Section 42 of an act passed by the legislature and approved March 2, 1839, provides: "That Turner Roundtree, Thomas Gilbert and Agrippa L. Martin, of the county of Knox, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners to review, survey and relocate that part of the state road leading from Knoxville in Knox county to New Boston, in Mercer county, which lies in the said county of Knox, so that said road, as relocated, may run through the town of Galesburg in said county of Knox, and strike the present state road at some point between Galesburg and Alfred Brown's." In 1841 an act was passed requiring an election to be held in Cherry Grove precinct, in Knox county, for the election of an additional justice of the peace and constable who shall reside within the limits of the town of Abingdon.

Some of the special charters created by acts passed under the old constitutions of the state are cherished as very valuable, while the rights secured by others have been abandoned. The Farmers and Mechanics Bank of Galesburg is incorporated and exercises its corporate rights as a bank under a special charter obtained from the legislature. The cities of Galesburg, Abingdon, and Oneida, each, were incorporated under special charters. The original charters obtained from the legislature by these cities continued many specially valuable provisions, amongst others may be mentioned the prohibition against licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. Abingdon and Oneida still cling to their original charters, with the result that no intoxicating liquor has ever been legally sold as a beverage within their boundaries. In 1876 the city of Galesburg, by a vote of its inhabitants, became incorporated under the general incorporation act concerning the incorporation of cities and villages passed in 1872, and relinquished its charter prohibition against the sale of intoxicating liquor. The public school system of Galesburg is still acting under the provisions of a special school charter adopted in 1859.

The public school system of the city of Galesburg, while existing under a special act, is controlled by the general school law in the conduct of some of its business and in some matters by its special charter. In 1882 there appeared in the public newspapers of the city articles written by a prominent lawyer contending that the board of education of the city was not controlled by the general school law, and that it was unnecessary for the teachers employed in the city schools to go to the expense and trouble of procuring certificates of their fitness to teach from the county superintendent of schools. The result of the newspaper articles was that a citizen of the same political persuasion as the author of the articles employed a lawyer who occupied offices near those of the author of the articles to bring a suit to enjoin the payment of the salary of a teacher of penmanship, who, teaching a special subject only, did not have a certificate from the county superintendent licensing to teach. The writer of the newspaper articles was employed to defend the school board against the injunction suit and show that his published articles laid down correct legal principles. The circuit court held that no teacher in the public schools was entitled to be paid out of the school fund, unless he held a proper certificate from the county superintendent of schools. The case was appealed to the supreme court, where it was expected, that as the briefs for the citizens who brought the suit, only perfunctorily stated his contention and the defendant's brief was an able one, that the case would be reversed and the school board exempted from the provisions of the general school law. Another leading lawyer of the city, James A. McKenzie, who was regarded as one of the best common law pleaders that ever practiced in the county, and who had a state wide reputation, quietly filed a brief as a friend of the court and for the public good, and the decree of the trial court was affirmed in an opinion published in 112 Ill. Supreme Court Reports at page 11, much to the discomfiture of the lawyer, who had instigated the suit by his published letters and who apparently had his choice of sides in the case.

A comparison of the judicial records of the first few years of the county with those of later years demonstrates that the inhabitants of the county were neither different in their characteristics nor distinctly better or worse than its citizens of the present time. The first action usually taken by a defendant in court was to move for a continuance. The proportion of divorces compared with other chancery suits was then apparently as great as at present, and the court compelled attorneys to prosecute suits for divorce in behalf of poor persons without reward, a proceeding unknown at the present time in civil suits between parties. then more reason than now, in addition to the lack of transportation facilities, as grand jurors in the earlier years of the county received no mileage or compensation of any kind, and petit jurors received 25c a day for each civil case in which they served, and no compensation whatever in criminal cases.

The territory within the state of Illinois was originally with other territory northwest of the Ohio river, within the state of Virginia and was in 1778 organized into the county of Illinois. In 1783 it was ceded to the United States by the state of Virginia, and by the ordinance of the 13th day of July, 1787, was erected into a territorial government. That ordinance contains certain articles of compact, between the original states and the people in that territory, which articles it is declared shall forever remain unalterable unless by common consent. The ordinance provides, among other things, that the inhabitants of said territory shall always be entitled to the benefits of judicial proceedings according to the course of common law. There is still in the statutes of Illinois an act which provides, "That the common law of England so far as the same is applicable and of a general nature, and all statutes or acts of the British parliament made in aid of, and to supply the defects of the common law, prior to the fourth year of, James the First, excepting the second section of the sixth chapter of 43d Elizabeth, the eighth chapter of the 13th Elizabeth, and the ninth chapter of 37th Henry Eighth and which are of a general nature and not local to that kingdom shall be the rule of decisions and shall be considered as of full force until repealed by legislative authority." The legislature fixed the law as it was in England in 1607, the fourth year of James the First, as the period at which the law of England should be made applicable to this country instead of the year of the Declaration of Independence, for the reason that was the time of the institution of the first territorial government in America. The adoption of the common law, as it was in 1607, has been construed as only applicable in cases where that law is applicable to the habits and conditions of our society and in harmony with the genius, spirit and objects of American institutions. By the common law is meant those maxims, principles and forms of procedure that have no written law to warrant them, but are founded on the laws of nature and the dictates of reason and have by usage and custom become interwoven with the written laws. This law is found in the records of the courts, and writings of men skilled in the profession, whose statements of the law are deductions and conclusions gathered from the decisions of the courts.

The practice and procedure in the trial courts, in our times, are but little different from the practice at the time the county was organized or as it was in 1607. The pleadings in courts were then written by the attorneys, now they are usually dictated to stenographers, are typewritten and are more verbose. By the change in office methods, the conciseness and precision that governed in earlier times has been lost. The procedure in the courts both in civil and criminal matters has not advanced and has not kept pace with the improvements in other sciences, but clings to the rule of precedent. Several attempts have been made by the judiciary and the leading lawyers of the state to simplify and expedite the methods of court procedure, but the recommendations of practice commissions, the last of which was made in 1907, have been practically ignored by the legislature. While the statutes of the state make a large volume, that part of them applicable to practice in courts of record is contained within less than forty pages of the present statute. The most important statute modifying the old common law practice is the statute of amendments, which permits any process or pleading in a civil suit to be amended by leave of the court for the furtherance of justice at any time even after judgment.

Knox county is in the military tract of Illinois:—the land in it was set apart by the federal government for the soldiers of the War of 1812 to be located upon by them. The warrants issued to the soldiers were in great part bought up by speculators, who located the warrants on land the title to which was in the government. Many of the soldiers who themselves located their warrants and received the patents for their land, either sold the land, or the land being so far from the settled parts of the country, it was regarded by the owners of so little value that they paid no attention to their property and permitted it to be sold for taxes. The result was that after a patent had been issued to a soldier and the land remained vacant and unoccupied, or it was occupied by squatters without any claim of title, speculators would secure some kind of a title, either a tax title or a deed, either from the soldier, or some one of the same name. It did not seem to be important, whether the maker of the deed was the soldier or a descendant, if he could make a deed in the name of the patentee. Titles to land were very uncertain. Many fraudulent titles were recorded, and frequently there were several titles of record to the same tract of land. The result was, that in 1839 statutes were enacted by the legislature for the purpose of quieting titles. One of these statutes provided that whenever any person, having claim and color of title made in good faith to vacant and unoccupied land, shall pay all taxes legally assessed thereon for seven successive years, he shall be adjudged the legal owner of such vacant land, according to the purport of his paper title. Another section provided that every person in the actual possession of land under claim and color of title, made in good faith, and who shall for seven successive years continue in possession and shall during said time pay all taxes legally assessed against such land, shall be adjudged the owner to the extent and purport of his paper title. The purpose of the passage of these statutes was to perfect and give good title to land, which parties had in good faith bought from others, who had no title or only a fraudulent title, and to put an end to the very general litigation concerning land titles. The courts held that while these statutes purported to be statutes making title, yet they could only be used as a shield to defend the title of the party in possession and could not be used as a sword to destroy the title of others. The case of Hale vs. Gladfelter, which was tried in the circuit court of Knox county before Hon. A. A. Smith of Galesburg, judge presiding, and taken by appeal to the supreme court involved the title to a quarter section of land in Victoria township in this county, secured a construction of the statutes referred to. It was one of the most important civil cases tried in this county and had very able lawyers opposed to each other; Leander Douglas represented T. J. Hale, who was ultimately successful, and Frost and Tunnicliff, P. H. Sanford and Martin Shallenberger of Toulon, represented Levi Gladfelter.

In 1882 Edgar A. Bancroft, then starting in the practice of law, began in Knox county a case of great public importance entitled Jones vs. the Chicago & Burlington Railroad Co., to recover penalties for overcharges on shipment of stocks. F. A. Willoughby and F. S. Murphy were subsequently associated with Bancroft for the plaintiff and O. F. Price and Williams and Lawrence of Galesburg, with Chicago attorneys represented the railroad company. In this cause was tested the validity of an act of the legislature passed in 1873, entitled an act to prevent extortion and unjust discrimination in the rates charged for the transportation of passengers and freight. The act authorized the railroad and warehouse commissioners to make schedules of reasonable and maximum rates for the transportation of passengers and freight, and gave to persons who were injured by any violation of the act, a right of recovery for three times the amount of the damages sustained and attorneys fees. The case was tried in the circuit court of Knox county, Judge Glenn of Monmouth presiding, and a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $2,868.60 and $1,200 attorneys fees. The case was not finally disposed of in the supreme court of Illinois until 1894 because of transfers back and forth between the state and federal courts, when the judgment was affirmed in an opinion by the supreme court of this state establishing the validity of the statute and the control of the state over common carriers.

A history of the trial of judicial matters in Knox county would be incomplete without reference to two judges of the supreme court of the state and a circuit judge who resided in Knox county during their terms of offices. In 1864 Charles B. Lawrence, then a judge of the circuit court of Knox county, was elected to the supreme bench. His record as a nisi prius judge has not been excelled in the state for wisdom and accuracy. His opinions in the supreme court are contained in volumes 36 to 67 and are very concise models of legal literature and learning. They leave no doubt as to the law therein laid down.

In 1873 he was succeeded by Alfred M. Craig, who held a seat on that bench until 1900. His opinions are found in volumes 67 to 186 inclusive and are noted for their clearness and hard common sense. He displayed great legal acumen in adapting judicial principles to new and changing conditions, without being chargeable with judicial legislation. In a case involving the question of the right of school directors to provide separate schools for colored children, in which the supreme court judges were divided in opinion, Judge Craig held with the majority, that while school directors had large discretionary powers, yet they had no right to discriminate between children on account of color or social condition. He wrote the opinion in the famous Illinois Central Railroad case, involving the right of the railroad company under its charter to submerged lands along the lake front in Chicago, in which it was decided that the state held the title to the lands within its boundaries covered by the waters of Lake Michigan, in trust for the people and that the state had no right to sell such lands.

Arthur A. Smith, judge of the circuit court from 1867 to 1894, was born in Batavia, Ohio. He graduated from Knox College in 1853. He studied law for a while in New York and afterwards in Peoria and was admitted to the bar and opened a law office in Galesburg in 1855. At the breaking out of the Civil war he helped to organize the 83rd Regiment of Illinois Infantry, of which he was elected lieutenant colonel. He served his country well until the close of the war, when he was mustered out with the rank of brigadier general. For a short time after the close of the war, General Smith remained at Clarksville, but returned to Galesburg in 1866, where he resumed the practice of law. In the early part of 1867, he was appointed circuit judge to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Judge John S. Thompson of Mercer county.

Judge Smith was succeeded by Judge Hiram Bigelow of Galva, in Henry county, who served out the remainder of Judge Smith's term.

Judge Bigelow was succeeded by the writer of this article, who is now serving his third term as circuit judge.

COURT HOUSES

In pursuance of the policy announced in the preface of this history, it is now our intention to write up the several matters of interest to the people of this county in such detail as to present them as they really occurred.

In our third chapter it seemed natural and convenient to attach an account of the construction of the first court house and jail to the account of the final organization of the courts and the election of the county and township or district officers. We were explicit in everything pertaining to the construction of the court house, but the jail does not appear in so much detail on the record. In fact, it does not seem to have been fully paid for until the year 1838.

Since that time two court houses and two jails have been erected in Knox county. All of these buildings were fine structures for the times in which they were built, and it will be seen from the account here given, that they were all thoroughly well built, and that there was never the slightest evidence or suspicion of fraud or dishonesty in the work. It was the writer's pleasure and honor to have been county clerk during the construction of the present court house, and he wishes here to state that during all that period the men comprising the county board of Knox county were men of honor and ability and would have been a credit to any state legislature of any state of the Union.

We will now proceed with our account of Knox county court house construction.

In December, 1836, it appears from the records that the county commissioners were moved to consider the question of again building a court house. The log structure which was erected at the start, and costing less than $400, was in the very nature of things temporary and designed only to meet the then pressing needs of the county. It does not appear from the records that there had been any previous discussion upon this subject on the part of the people, but we find a simple order directing the preparation of plans with the provision for advertising the same and placing those plans where they would be accessible to such architects as might be found in the then new cities of the state. The following orders appear of record:

ORDERED: That Henry J. Runkle (or some other person whom he may employ) be requested to furnish three copies of a suitable draft for a court house to be erected in the town of Knoxville, of the following description: The main building to be 40 feet wide by 50 feet in length with a portico in front of suitable proportion, supported by stone pillars. The basement story to be of stone and to be divided in the middle lengthwise by a hall or passage and one side divided into three apartments, and the other side in four apartments, and the main building to be of brick, the whole to be of suitable proportion.

ORDERED: That the clerk make out an advertisement and cause the same to be inserted in the newspapers printed at Peoria and Quincy. That sealed proposals will be received at the office of the clerk of this court until the March term of this court for said building in separate contracts: one for the walls and outside of said building, and the other for the inside work of said building, having reference to the said drafts for particular information, the said drafts to be deposited with the clerks of the county commissioners courts of the counties of Knox, Peoria and Adams.

It appears further that the foregoing advertisements did not result in the production of any plans or at least any plans that were satisfactory, for we find the following order entered of record at the March term, to which term of court plans were to be returned.

ORDERED: That Eldert Runkle, one of the commissioners of this court, be and he is hereby appointed and authorized on the behalf of said court to procure a suitable draft or drafts of a court house for said county, previous to the next regular term of this court.

The county commissioners' record does not make any statement in regard to plans and specifications for court house filed pursuant to notice given at the September term of court. Plans and specifications were, however, filed with the clerk of the court, but were probably too elaborate and were therefore not entered of record; but we find a contract for the building of a new court house for the sum of $15,450, made and entered into with Alvah Wheeler and Zelotes Cooley, who at that time lived in Hancock county, Illinois. This contract is given below as it is made for the erection of the building which now stands in the public square at Knoxville, and is therefore of sufficient interest to the people of this county to copy it from the records which are scarcely ever seen, and make it a matter of historic value by including it in this history of Knox county. The following is the contract:

Alvah Wheeler and Zelotes Cooley have entered into contract with the commissioners of Knox county in articles of agreement as follows: This agreement made and entered into this tenth day of March, A. D., 1838, between Alvah Wheeler and Zelotes Cooley of Hancock county, in the state of Illinois of the first part, and Jos Rowe, James Ferguson and Eldert Runkle, county commissioners of the said county of Knox in said state of Illinois on behalf of said county of Knox of the second part, Witnesseth: That the said party of the first part for and in consideration of the covenants on the part of the said party of the second part hereinafter mentioned, hereby covenants and agrees to and with the said party of the second part and their successors in office to furnish the materials for and to erect and build a court house in the town of Knoxville, in said county of Knox (upon such site as shall be designated by the said party of the second part) agreeably to certain plans and specifications by them filed with the clerk of the county commissioners' court of said county of Knox (to which plans and specifications reference is herein had, and they are made a part of this agreement), the said court house to be fully completed and finished (agreeably to said plans and specifications), on or before the first day of May, A. D., 1840.

In consideration whereof, the said party of the second part for themselves and their successors in office hereby covenant and agree to and with the said party of the first part to pay to the said party of the first part, the sum of fifteen thousand, four hundred and fifty dollars at the times and in the manner following, to-wit: To advance to the said party of the first part (when this agreement is executed), the sum of one thousand, four hundred and fifty dollars (which sum is to be secured to the said party of the second part by good personal security to be by them approved), and to make further payments from time to time (as often as once per month as required by the said party of the first part) as the work progresses proportioned to the progress thereof, so that the last payment shall be made when the said court house is completed. And it is mutually understood and agreed by and between the parties that in estimating the progress of said building reference shall be had to the value of the materials provided therefor and of the labor bestowed thereon, so that the said party of the first part may (whenever an estimate is made) be paid a sum proportioned to the advancement of the work, and it is further mutually agreed by and between the parties that if at any time they shall not agree upon the amounts which should then be paid, that then each party shall nominate one person who together shall estimate the progress of said work and fix the amount which is at that time to be paid to the said party of the first part and if the two persons thus nominated shall disagree they two shall appoint a third person to act as umpire, whose decision shall be final in the premises, and the said party of the second part shall thereupon pay to the said party of the first part the sum fixed by said umpire.

And the said party of the first part further covenants and agrees to and with the said party of the second part, that whenever any materials by them provided for said court house shall have been estimated, and they shall have received the payment based upon such estimate, that then the materials so estimated shall be considered and shall be the absolute property of the said party of the second part, subject however to be used in and about the building of said court house by the said party of the first part. It is further mutually understood and agreed by and between the parties aforesaid that if the said party of the second part shall deem it expedient to make any change or alteration in the plans or specifications that then such change or alteration shall be made in such building and if such change or alteration increases the expense of said court house, that then the said party of the second part shall pay the said party of the first part (in addition to the gross sum above mentioned) a reasonable compensation, proportioned to such increased expense, and on the other hand, if any such change or changes shall diminish the expense of said building, that then the said parties of the first part shall make a reasonable deduction from said gross sum, proportioned to such diminished expense. In witness of which said several premises the said parties have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals the day and year first above written.

Messrs. Wheeler and Cooley entered into bond in the penal sum of $28,000 with the county commissioners with Moses Stevens, Sidney H. Little, Wesley Williams, David W. Matthews, Thos. L. Barnes and Jesse B. Winn of Hancock county, state of Illinois as sureties and John G. Sanborn, Parnach Owen, Herman Knox, Enos Pomeroy, Robert L. Hannaman, Geo. A. Charles and George Newman of the county of Knox and state of Illinois also as sureties. The county commissioners at this time were Joseph Rowe, James Ferguson and Eldert Runkle. This court house was completed in good shape by the contractors but it is a little interesting to know that at the start they proceeded to borrow from Knox county the sum of $1,450 and gave a note therefor signed by nearly all of the men who were upon their bond as sureties. The following is a copy of the note.

Alvah Wheeler and Zelotes Cooley presented in court a note in words as follows, to-wit:

$1,450—On or before the first day of July next, we jointly and severally promise to pay to Joseph Rowe, James Ferguson and Eldert Runkle, county commissioners of Knox county, or to their successors in office, the sum of one thousand, four hundred and fifty dollars for value received.

Dated March 10th, 1838.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Alvah Wheeler and Zelotes Cooley for the sum of one thousand, four hundred and fifty dollars, on above note.

This contract for the new court house placed the county where it had to raise money to meet the payments on the same. Accordingly on the same day in which the contract was entered into, the county commissioners entered the following order for the collection of a part of the money which had been loaned out from time to time.

ORDERED: That the treasurer notify all persons (owing money due the county) to pay to said treasurer the twenty-four percentum, as ordered by the commissioners court at March term and interest, and that he notify Lester J. Gillett, Geo. Losey and Gilbert Buckingham, to pay in (as required above) and to renew their bonds with approved securities.

And that the treasurer is hereby authorized to put in suit all notes, that are not paid as above specified and to employ an attorney for that purpose.

The court house plans as originally drawn did not provide for a cupola. It was afterwards concluded that it better have one for then as now a court house without a cupola or a dome did not seem quite in keeping with the architecture of public buildings. Accordingly at the January special term 1839 the following order was entered pursuant to the agreement with the contractors, Wheeler and Cooley.

ORDERED: That the plan and specifications for a cupola on the court house, be filed, plan marked letter A., specifications marked B., and the same be considered a contract in accordance with said plan and specifications, and is made a part of the original contract, for building the court house, with Wheeler and Cooley. The consideration for building said cupola as per specifications to be seven hundred and twenty-five dollars.

A further change was made in the plans and specifications of the building at that time which it is doubtful would be made at the present time considering that the brick then burned were so soft and porous. This order is also given:

ORDERED: That Wheeler and Cooley be and they are hereby requested to alter so much of the court-house contract as requires the furrowing and lathing of the inside walls of the house, and the same be plastered on the brick work, the difference of expense to be deducted from original contract.

By the March term of the county commissioners court 1839 the court house was sufficiently advanced to consider the question of painting the exterior of the building. The following order will show the color agreed upon. Some of our older citizens may remember the first color given the building, which was yellow.

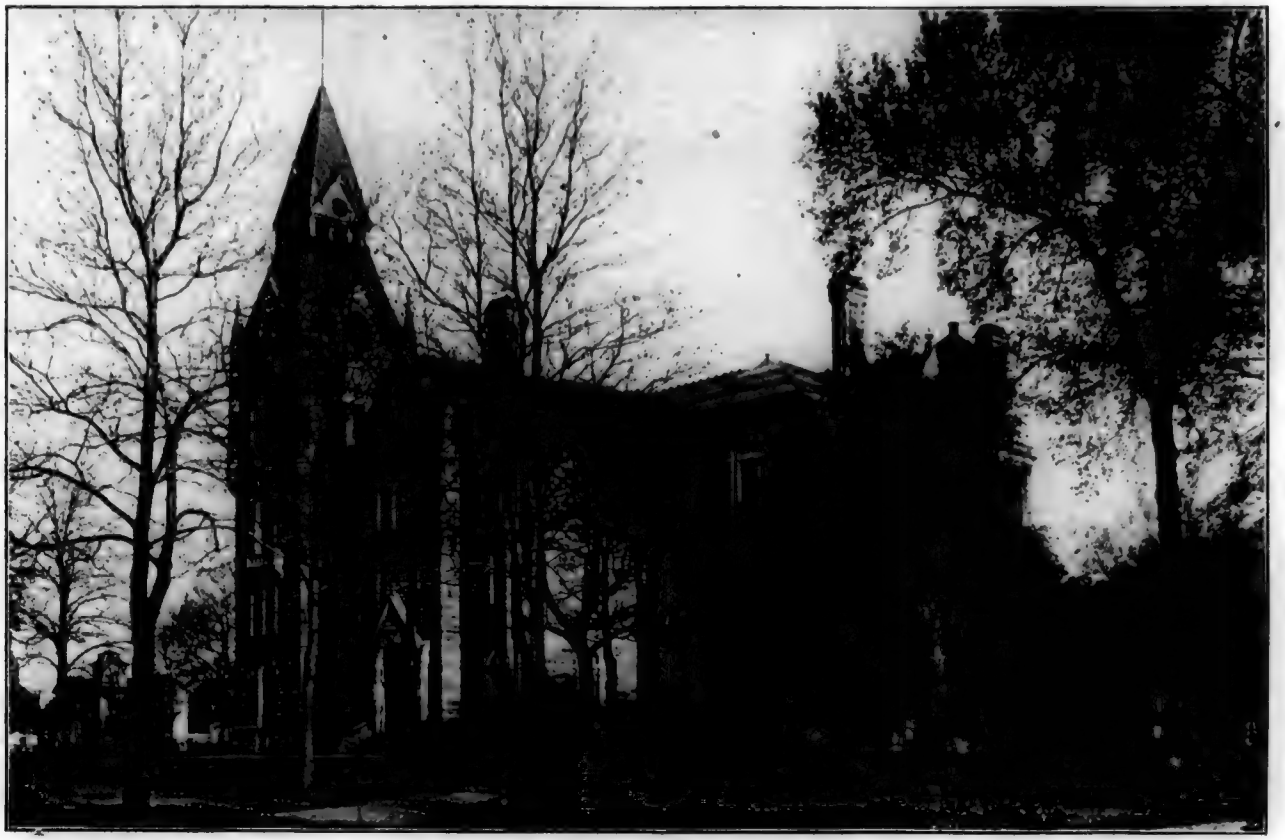
ORDERED: That Wheeler and Cooley be and they are hereby authorized to paint the outside of the court house cream color, the difference of expense of paint to be allowed on their contract.

Again in the June term 1839 the county commissioners decided to add to the plans and specifications with which the contract was originally made. This addition is fully described in the following order:

ORDERED: That Wheeler and Cooley are to be allowed four hundred dollars for putting on the court house venetian blinds for all the windows, except the lower side lights to be finished complete, in proportion to the rest of the building. Also sixty dollars for deafening the court room floor and the stairs, also fifteen dollars for putting in folding doors between the two first offices on the west side, the whole to be finished in a good and substantial manner. An allowance has been made in the above contract for not putting in the two doors in the two north offices as specified in the original contract.

Also at the same term of court it was decided to put a lightning rod upon the building:

ORDERED: That John Eads be and is hereby authorized to furnish a lightning rod for the court house, out of ⅝ of an inch iron, at 19 cents per pound, the silver plating of the points to be allowed for at cost.



At the December term 1839 of the county commissioners court of Knox county on the 4th day of December a final settlement was had with Wheeler and Cooley for the construction of the court house and the following orders were entered:

ORDERED: That at the settlement with Wheeler and Cooley for building the court house in Knoxville, the sum of one thousand three hundred and two dollars is due to Zelotes Cooley on the same and that he be allowed interest on the same at the rate of twelve per centum per annum.

ORDERED: That at the settlement with Wheeler and Cooley for building the court house in Knoxville the sum of one thousand, three hundred and two dollars is due to Alvah Wheeler and that he be allowed interest on the same at the rate of twelve per centum per annum.

At the March term 1840 further action was taken in regard to the court house. A table for the bar in the court room to be covered was ordered at a cost of $12 without the cover. At the same term it was deemed advisable to get some income from the court house and the following orders were entered:

ORDERED: That the clerk of the court rent the two upper jury rooms at one dollar and twenty five cents per month each subject to the use of the jurors

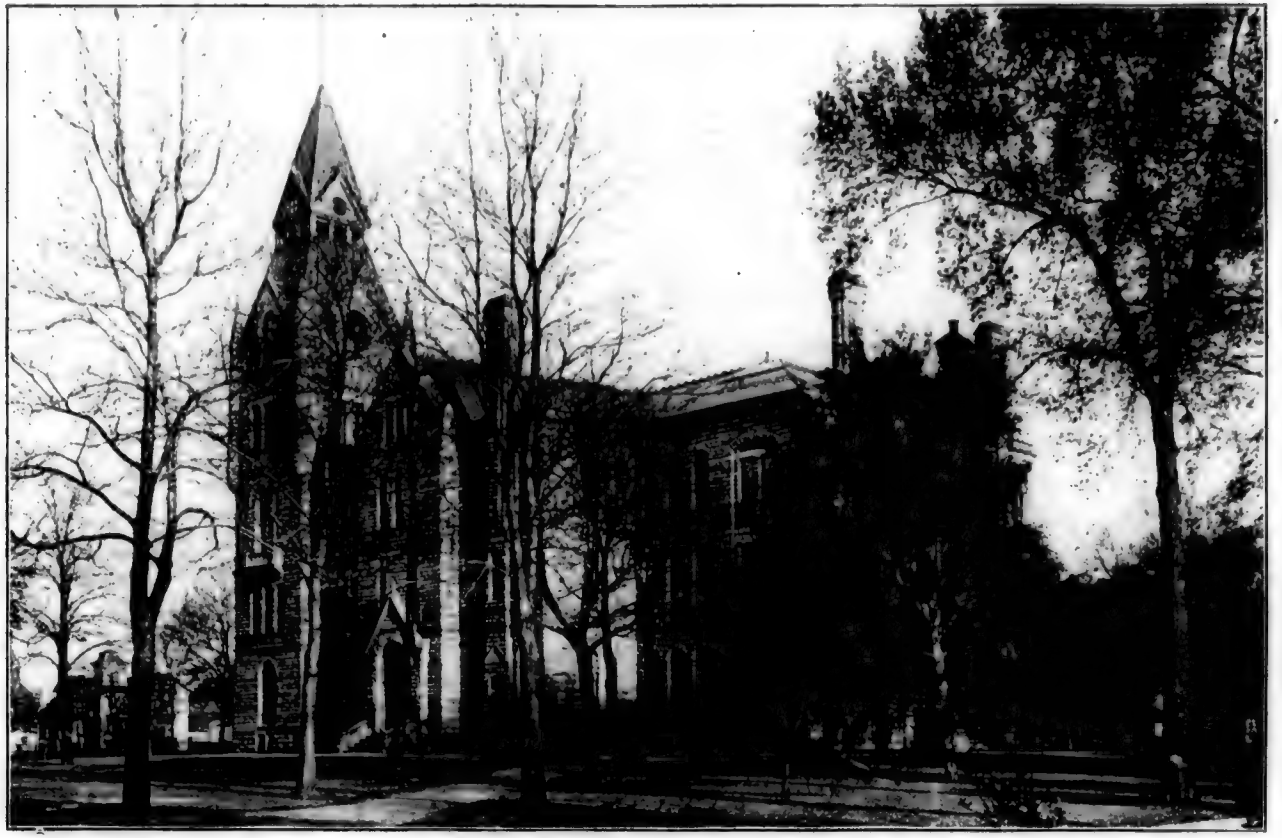
Also at the same term of court it was decided to put a lightning rod upon the building:

ORDERED: That John Eads be and is hereby authorized to furnish a lightning rod for the court house, out of ⅝ of an inch iron, at 19 cents per pound, the silver plating of the points to be allowed for at cost.



At the December term 1839 of the county commissioners court of Knox county on the 4th day of December a final settlement was had with Wheeler and Cooley for the construction of the court house and the following orders were entered:

ORDERED: That at the settlement with Wheeler and Cooley for building the court house in Knoxville, the sum of one thousand three hundred and two dollars is due to Zelotes Cooley on the same and that he be allowed interest on the same at the rate of twelve per centum per annum.

ORDERED: That at the settlement with Wheeler and Cooley for building the court house in Knoxville the sum of one thousand, three hundred and two dollars is due to Alvah Wheeler and that he be allowed interest on the same at the rate of twelve per centum per annum.

At the March term 1840 further action was taken in regard to the court house. A table for the bar in the court room to be covered was ordered at a cost of $12 without the cover. At the same term it was deemed advisable to get some income from the court house and the following orders were entered:

ORDERED: That the clerk of the court rent the two upper jury rooms at one dollar and twenty five cents per month each subject to the use of the jurors and the lower north west corner room at two dollars and eight and a half cents, and if the lessees will put in good cylinder coal stoves, they can relinquish the same to the county at cost in rent if any one wishes to rent the same for office, etc.

ORDERED: That the north east room in court house, lower floor, be rented to Walker L. Bean for twenty-five dollars, and a lease given for the same.

ORDERED: That the middle room in court house lower floor east side be rented to Julius Manning for forty dollars and lease given for the same.

ORDERED: That the middle room in the court house lower floor west side be rented to C. K. Harvey and John Jackson for twenty five dollars subject for the use of the commissioners court for court purposes.

On the 7th day of March of the same year it was decided to sell the old court house independent of the lot.

ORDERED: That the clerk put up notices to sell the old court house without the lot, to be sold to the highest bidder on the 1st day of April, and also the letting of a fence round the court house to be let at the same time, specifications for fence and terms for the sale of the court house will be made known at day of sale.

Upon the first day of April 1840 the sale of the court house was entered of record as follows:

The old court house is hereby sold to Alvah Wheeler for the sum of eighty nine dollars and fifty cents, for which a note is filed, said Wheeler is to have two years use of the lots it now stands on.

An entry is made in the June term 1840 of settlement in part with Wheeler and Cooley for the construction of the court house as follows:

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Alvah Wheeler for four hundred and fifty three dollars and eighty five cents in full of settlement as specified on the record of this court at December term 1839.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Wheeler and Cooley for two hundred and thirty seven dollars and fifty cents for contract for blinds, etc.

At the December term 1840 the county commissioners made final settlement with Zelotes Cooley for his share of the contract for construction of the new court house as appears from the following entry upon our record.

Zelotes Cooley stated an account due him from county of Knox as follows:

Dec. 4, 1839 Amt. as per order Dec. term of this court.....	$1,302.00
Mch. 7, 1840 Interest on same—12%.....	40.36
	1,342.36
Mch. 7, 1840 Amt. paid March term 1840.....	900.00
	442.36
Dec. 10, 1840 9 3/30 months interest at 12%.....	40.25
	$482.61

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasury in favor of Zelotes Cooley for four hundred and eighty two dollars and sixty one cents for account as above stated.

It is interesting to note the care with which every proposition to expend money was formerly considered by the board of supervisors and if a little care be taken to examine the ayes and nays it will be found that the division in the board was shown in a singular uniformity.

At the January meeting, 1858, supervisor Charles offered the following resolution for making certain changes in the court house.

Resolved, that the board deem it expedient to repair and enlarge the court room, by taking out all partition walls in the upper story, and make it one room, and that we appoint an agent to contract and superintend the work and have it done as soon as convenient and render an account to this board.

Resolved, That the chair appoint a committee of three to take into consideration the property or expediency of enlarging, improving or repairing the court house; to take into consideration the different ways of making such alteration or improvement, with the probable expense of such different alterations, and to report to next meeting of this board.

Supervisor Miles read report of committee appointed at last meeting of the board to make estimates of the expense of alterations and repairs to the court house and present plans for such alterations, when on motion of supervisor Charles the report was received and the committee discharged.

Supervisor Charles brought up the matter of enlargement of the court room and repairs to court house, when supervisor Martin offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to make any repairs to the court house at present. Which was discussed at length when Supervisor Charles offered a resolution to postpone action on said motion until tomorrow morning—carried.

Supervisor Charles offered the following substitute, for resolution of Supervisor Martin in relation to improvement of the court house.

Resolved, That this board appoint Z. Cooley to have the court room enlarged and repaired according to plans presented to this board, by the committee appointed at previous meeting and in such manner as not to cost over five hundred dollars, and present bill at next meeting of the board.

The yeas and nays being demanded, resulted, Yeas, Messrs. Routh, Charles, LeBaron, Godfrey, Miles, McCornack, Stuckey, Knable, Jarnagin, Shinn and Tucker, 11. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Kelly, Gale, Brown, Titus, Martin, Holyoke and Gibbs, 8. Resolution substituted.

Supervisor Brown offered the following resolution as a substitute for that of supervisor Charles:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to make the repairs on the court house contemplated in the report of the committee on that subject.

The yeas and nays being called for, the vote resulted—Yeas, Messrs. Kelly, Gale, Brown, Martin, Holyoke and Gibbs, 6. Nays, Messrs. Routh, Charles, LeBaron, Godfrey, Miles, McCornack, Stuckey, Knable, Shinn, Tucker, Jarnagin, 11, so the substitute was lost.

Supervisor Gale then offered the following substitute for Supervisor Charles' substitute:

Resolved, That the subject of repairs and alterations be referred to a committee to report in full at the next meeting, full specifications and estimates of the cost of repairs and alterations according to the plan presented by the committee of the last meeting.

Yeas and nays were demanded on adoption of substitute, resulting as follows: Yeas, Messrs. Meek, Kelly, Gale, Brown, Titus, Martin, LeBaron and Gibbs—8. Nays, Messrs. Routh. Charles, Holyoke, Godfrey, Miles, McCornack, Stuckey, Knable, Shinn, Tucker and Jarnagin—11. So the substitute was lost.

Supervisor Miles then offered the following resolution as a substitute for the resolution of supervisor Charles, which substitute was accepted by supervisor Charles, as follows, to-wit:

Resolved, That Z. Cooley be appointed to have the court room enlarged and repaired according to the plan presented to this board by the committee appointed by a former board, Provided the same can be done in a good and workmanlike manner, according to said plan, and Provided, said repairs and alterations can be done at a cost to the county, not exceeding four hundred and fifty dollars; and if the said Cooley cannot contract for or do the work and have the same completed for that sum, he is not to commence the job.

The previous question being demanded, and the yeas and nays called, the resolution was adopted.

Yeas, Messrs. Routh, Charles, LeBaron, Godfrey, Miles, McCornack, Stuckey, Knable, Shinn, Tucker and Jarnagin—11. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Kelly, Gale, Brown, Titus, Martin, Holyoke and Gibbs—8.

These repairs were made by Mr. Cooley and he was paid $265.77 at the September meeting, 1858, which covered all cost except painting, papering and whitewashing.

September 1866.—The committee appointed at the April meeting of the board to complete repairs and paint halls of court house and offices, made the following report.

To the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee appointed at the April meeting 1866, to complete repairs and painting of the court house halls, sheriff's and jury rooms, would report, That they engaged one Kellar to do the work, that after cleaning the work and puttying up, no painting having been done for some 28 years, and the wood work very much out of repair; they found the work of Mr. Kellar not such as they could approve; and therefore procured other and competent painters, engaging Mr. Ball of Galesburg, to do a job similar to that done in the court room, at the rate of $3.50 per day, which was the lowest we could obtain a competent hand for.

We would therefore recommend the allowance of the following bills, connected with the repairs and painting, amounting to $404.85.

This seems to be the last expenditure ever made on the Knoxville court house by the county. An election for the removal of the county seat to Galesburg was held eleven years later which resulted in removal to that place in February, 1873.

The city of Galesburg was obligated to furnish fire proof county offices, court and jury rooms for ten years after removal so nothing appears on record in regard to court house matters until about the time this ten-year period had expired. There we find the following at the April meeting, 1878.—Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the judiciary committee be directed to inquire and report at the next meeting of the board, whether any measures must be taken during the current year to secure adequate provisions for court and jury rooms for the use of the county, and to make to the board such recommendations as the case seems to require.

July meeting, 1878.—Mr. Temple, from committee on judiciary and clerk's offices, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Gale adopted at the last April meeting of the board in regard to court house, presented the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee would respectfully report in regard to the resolution of Mr. Gale, at the April meeting, under which the committee were instructed to inquire into the necessity of taking action during the coming year, towards securing rooms for circuit court, that the committee met at the county clerk's office and examined papers on file relating to the removal of the county seat; and while it may be an open question as to the expiration of the term of ten years for which the city of Galesburg is bound to furnish buildings for court house purposes, the committee conferred with owners of the present rooms occupied for such purposes, and other proprietors of rooms in the city, and received offers as follows:

From the proprietors of the opera house, they received an offer of the use of the present court room at $1,000 per year. From Mr. John Johnston, proprietor of Caledonia Hall, received an offer of his rooms at $400 per year, the county to be at the expense of any changes required for heating, ventilating, etc. And would respectfully leave it to the board to judge from these offers whether any immediate action is necessary.

On motion of Mr. Hale, the report was accepted, and Mr. Sellon offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Whereas, It seems to be an open question as to when the lease of the opera house for county purposes expires under the contract; therefore

Resolved, That the judiciary committee be directed to examine the papers and investigate the matter, and that said committee report to the board at the September meeting, 1878.

September meeting, 1878.—The following is taken from the report of Mr. Temple, from committee on judiciary and clerk's offices:

Your committee would further report, that in relation to the resolution of Mr. Sellon, referring the subject of providing court rooms, etc., for the circut court, that they have met and discussed the question, and would recommend that in view of the uncertainty and difference of opinion, as to the obligation of the city of Galesburg to furnish buildings beyond the coming spring, a contract be executed between the board and the proprietors of the rooms at present occupied, provided the rooms be furnished on the same terms as at present, said contract to take effect from and after the expiration of the time for which the city of Galesburg is bound to furnish the same.

The committee have decided to present to the board the contract and other papers bearing upon the subject, believing that the information desired can be better supplied by the reading of these documents, than by an expression of opinion by the committee on a matter which is at best a doubtful question of law and equity.

Respectfully submitted,

J. W. TEMPLE,
L. W. BENSON,
W. SELDEN GALE,
THOS. MCKEE.

On motion the report of the committee was accepted and adopted (except as to report in relation to rooms for circuit court), and orders directed to issue in accordance with recommendations of committee.

Mr. Gale made a statement in regard to present contract and obligations on the part of the city, leasing rooms, now occupied for court purposes, and offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the chairman and clerk of this board be authorized to contract with the owners of the opera house in Galesburg, for use of court rooms at the rates now paid by the city of Galesburg and with like conditions, for a term to commence at the end of the term of lease to the city, and to terminate on six months' notice.

Mr. Sellon, wishing to offer a minority report, Mr. Gale withdrew his resolutions, when Mr. Sellon made the following minority report:

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Board:

Your committee appointed for the purpose of investigating the papers and facts as to the extent of the lease of court rooms and offices, having carefully examined all the papers bearing upon the lease of the opera house for county purposes, including the lease and stipulations, find the following indisputable facts to exist:

First. The city of Galesburg is bound by stipulations to furnish, free of cost to the county, suitable rooms for county and court purposes for a term of years not to exceed ten.

Second. A lease was obtained by the city from Messrs. Brechwald & Co. for the use of the opera house for court and county purposes, during the term as specified in the above named stipulations, viz., ten years.

Third. Said lease dated from January 29, 1873, and the county has occupied said opera house for said purpose from that date to the present.

In view of these facts a minority, and perhaps a majority of your committee, are of the opinion that the obligation of the city to the county is not cancelled, and will not be under the contract until January, 1883, and we would respectfully recommend that this board be governed in their action by the facts in the case.

We would further state, that we have had no official communication with the city authorities as to the terms of termination of said lease, and we have reason to believe that the city will, in good faith, fulfill her obligations to the county in this regard.

Therefore, we advise to let the whole matter rest where it is, and respectfully ask the acceptance and adoption of this report as a substitute for the majority report.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

EDWARD SELLON.

Mr. Gale moved that the report of the minority of the committee be accepted and adopted. Carried.

Mr. Gale then renewed the resolution for the adoption of his resolution last before offered, and the resolution of Mr. Gale was also adopted.

January meeting, 1879.—The clerk presented report of special committee, appointed at last meeting of the board, in relation to renting opera house for court purposes; which report was referred to committee on judiciary and clerks' offices.

April meeting, 1879.—Mr. Gale (W. S.) presented the following report of the city council of the city of Galesburg, in regard to furnishing court and jury rooms for the county:

To His Honor the Mayor and City Council:

In regard to the matter of furnishing to the county court and jury rooms, your committee beg leave to report:

By special statute, authority was given the city to contract with commissioners appointed by the county board, upon certain terms and conditions. Under that authority, the city, in March, 1869, contracted with the commissioners to furnish a site for a court house, a site for a jail, a lot for clerks' offices, and to erect on such lot a suitable building; to pay to the county $20,000, to be applied in the erection of a jail, and to furnish the county with suitable court and jury rooms until a court house should be erected, but not to exceed a period of ten years. The contract to be void in case the majority of votes cast at the county seat election in April, 1869, should be against removal to Galesburg; else in full force.

At such April election a majority of the votes cast were for removal; and the city did fully perform every condition except the last named, and did tender to the circuit court at its first term held thereafter, suitable rooms.

The expense to the city of the performance of this contract was about $40,000, all of which was paid immediately after the said election.

But the advantage expected to result from this expenditure was not realized for four years thereafter, owing to the fact that the canvassing board declared the result otherwise than in favor of removal; and until the action of the board was pronounced erroneous in the circuit court, and the decision of the supreme court affirming such decision in the circuit court was published, the county officers refused to recognize Galesburg as the county seat.

During all this time the city of Galesburg was paying interest on its public debt, $40,000 larger than it would have been but for the expenditure above referred to, without receiving any benefit therefrom. The city was ready, willing and anxious to secure the expected advantage at the further cost of providing court and jury rooms. In February, 1873, the county offices were removed to Galesburg, and since that time the city has provided court and jury rooms.

Next month, ten years will have expired since the contract spoken of became in force, and since the city has, so far as it was permitted to, performed its part of the contract; and since that time there has been no default on the part of the city.

If the city has, during that time, in point of fact, supplied court and jury rooms for only six years, it has been because the county, to the great prejudice of the city, refused to occupy such rooms.

Your committee are of opinion—

First, That the city has fully performed its contract, and is not liable to the county to furnish rooms for any greater length of time.

Second, That the power of the city to contract, depending entirely upon the special statute, is exhausted and no new contract can be made.

Your committee have no means of knowing the views that will prevail in the county board, and are of the opinion that if possible all collision with the county board likely to result in expense or inconvenience to the public should be carefully avoided, and recommend,

That the finance committee be authorized and directed to communicate with the county board; to inform the board that the opinion of the council is that the city is not under obligation to further furnish court and jury rooms; and in case the county board shall not concur in such opinion the finance committee be authorized to arrange with the county board for a speedy reference to the courts of the questions in dispute.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true transcript of a report of the finance committee, adopted by the city council of the city of Galesburg at a meeting held on March 8, 1879.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name, and affixed the official seal of said city, this eleventh day of April, 1879.

Upon the reading of such report, Mr. Gale offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That a committee, to consist of Messrs. Aldrich, Benson, Corey, Robson and Harden be appointed to confer with committee of the city council of Galesburg, and arrange for a prompt reference of the question named in the communication of the city council to the courts.

Resolved, That the judiciary committee be authorized, if necessary, to make temporary arrangements for court and jury rooms until the next meeting of this board.

April meeting, 1879.—Mr. Aldrich offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the committee to whom was referred the question concerning court and jury rooms, be authorized to employ counsel to assist the state's attorney, if in their judgment they deem it necessary.

April meeting, 1880.—Mr. Robson, from special committee in regard to the suit between the city of Galesburg and the county, involving the rent of court and jury rooms, presented the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee to whom was referred the communication of the mayor and city council of Galesburg, in regard to the matter of furnishing to the county, court and jury rooms, beg leave to report that they have employed J. J. Tunnicliff, state's attorney, and P. H. Sanford, Esq., as attorneys for the county in said matter, and that they have got an agreed case with Mr. Leach, the city attorney for Galesburg, and that they have agreed to submit said case as agreed to Judge Pleasants for his opinion.

D. W. ALDRICH, Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Gale the report of the committee was accepted, and the committee, so far as the same are still members of this board, be continued.

January meeting, 1881.—Mr. Gale (W. S.), from special committee, presented the following report:

Your special committee to whom was referred the questions of removing the court room, and the future provision for court and jury rooms, beg leave to report—

That while it is the duty of the city of Galesburg to supply the county with court and jury rooms for two years, it is not advisable for the county to make any other provision for that purpose at present, but they recommend that this board authorize the committee to consent to any change in location which the city council may desire to make, which shall be approved by the judges, and, in the opinion of the committee, afford increased conveniences to the people of the county.

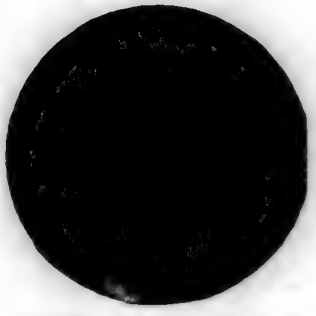
In reference to permanent possession, they have to say that the present scattered accommodations for court rooms and offices have nothing but economy to recommend them. That they are, and always will be, in many ways unsatisfactory, that they have already become in some respects quite insufficient, and are gradually becoming more so, and they should at some time give way to suitable and permanent provision in building specially adapted to the purpose, and owned by the county.

That the present time is in some respects a favorable one for building by the county.

The cost of labor and materials is much less than it has been, the county is fairly prosperous, owes no corporate debt, and is in good credit, the rate of taxation for county purposes being but about one-half of what it was a few years ago.

Should it be thought best to extend the time of payment over a term of years, it would be easy to secure the money at a rate of interest not more than half of what the county has within a short time paid.

They believe the bonds of the county can be disposed of at par, bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 5 per cent; that a series of bonds having from 1 to 20 years to run, can be so negotiated that an annual payment not exceeding 8 per cent will keep down the interest and extinguish the principal within 20 years.



Your committee are further of the opinion that there should be no undue haste in the erection of buildings designed to be permanent; that no expense, except for preliminary examinations, should be incurred until plans and estimates are fully matured and proved to be acceptable to the county; that in building once for all, great care should be taken to provide buildings creditable in their appearance to the taste and good sense of the people of the county, thoroughly substantial, constructed economically, not beyond the real wants of the county, but so as amply to provide sufficient and suitable room for every department.

To procure the necessary information and advice, and to properly mature such plans, will require time and the careful attention of somebody, and, until such time has been taken and improved, the county will not be in a situation to commence building, however favorable the situation may otherwise be.

We recommend that the subject be placed in the hands of a committee, to report to the next meeting of this board such progress as they may be able to make in procuring information, plans and estimates.

On motion, the report of the committee was accepted. It was then moved to adopt the report of the committee, and the yeas and nays being called for, the motion was lost by the following vote:

Yeas—Messrs. Gale (G. W.), Gale (W. S.), McKee, McFarland, Robson, Andrews and Corey—8.

Nays—Messrs. Boydston, Kimball, Dieterich, Rankin, May, Reynolds,Simpson, Woodmansee, Benson, Rebstock, Wyman, Leighton, Mathews, Tucker, Sansbury and Todd—16.

April meeting, 1881.—Mr. May offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee, consisting of Messrs. Dieterich, Mathews and Charles, be authorized to confer with owners of rooms in Galesburg suitable for court rooms, and obtain of them written proposals for rent of said rooms, to be furnished the county for a term of five years next ensuing after the expiration of the present lease of court rooms from the city of Galesburg to the county, and to report said offers of rates at the next meeting of the board in such shape that acceptance by the board shall close the contract for lease.

Mr. Robson offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the chairman of the board of supervisors appoint a special committee of three to report at the next meeting of the board on the expense of building another story on the clerk's office, or building another room on the north side of said office for the use of the county court, treasurer's office and state's attorney. Lost.

The chairman announced the following committee under resolutions of the board:

On resolution in matter of fire-proof offices—Messrs. Mathews, Charles and Wertman.

July adjourned meeting, 1881.—Mr. Deiterich, from special committee in relation to court room, reported:

GALESBURG, August 1, 1881.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee, authorized by a resolution passed by this board, to consult the owners of rooms in Galesburg suitable for court rooms, and obtain from them written proposals for rent of said rooms for county purposes, for a term of five years, next ensuing after the present lease for court rooms shall expire, and report said offers to the next meeting of the board.

In accordance with the spirit of the resolution, we called first to see the owners of the opera hall building, but finding but one of them in, we could accomplish nothing. Our call, however, was the means of assembling them together subsequently for consultation. At that meeting the subject was fully discussed, and the conclusion reached, that as they have no competition in the premises, they would submit the case to the decision of the board, and in order that all the difficulty of obtaining a conference with all the owners of the building might be removed, they authorized Chas. Brechwald to act as their agent in negotiating with the board of supervisors, and whatever agreement the parties may determine upon, shall be binding on their part.

Upon reaching this conclusion, Mr. Brechwald, in the capacity of agent for all interested, submitted in writing, with his name thereto appended, the proposition thus: "We will lease to the county of Knox the needed rooms for county purposes in the opera house building for a term of five years, or less, at the option of the county, at a price of rent per annum that the board of supervisors in its discretion may fix. The rent to cease at any time during the period stated should the people of the county in the meantime build a court house."

I made three efforts to see John Johnston, Esq., owner of Caledonia Hall, but failed to find him, and finally I asked Mr. Greenleaf to send him to see me, which he did not do, but before leaving home, he wrote a letter and addressed it to the committee, which was sent to me, and in which he made the following proposition: "I will rent to the county of Knox, Caledonia Hall for a term of years (not less than five) at an annual rent of $500." Signed John Johnston.

As your committee have not agreed upon any special advantages of either of the rooms in question, we submit that matter to the discriminating judgment of the board, and ask that we be discharged from any further special duty in the premises.

G. V. DIETERICH,
R. G. MATHEWS,
A. G. CHARLES.

On motion the report of the committee was accepted.

Mr. Mathews was called upon for report of the special committee, having the matter of adding a second story to the fireproof offices under consideration, so that the board might consider both matters at the same time.

Mr. Mathews reported as follows:

GALESBURG, Aug. 1st, 1881.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board:

Your committee appointed at our last April meeting to look into the feasibility and probable cost of adding a second story to the present county office building, would, after investigation and consultation with architects report as follows: The probable cost would not exceed $1,800, and in their opinion would not impair the safety of said building.

R. G. MATHEWS,
A. G. CHARLES,
L. F. WERTMAN,
Committee.

On motion the report of the committee was accepted.

Mr. May moved that the proposition of Mr. Johnston for the lease of Caledonia Hall, now known as the "Academy of Music" for five years from the expiration of the present lease of the "Opera House" be accepted.

Mr. Gale offered the following substitute for Mr. May's motion:

Resolved, That there be a committee of five appointed, who shall report to the next meeting of this board plans and estimates for the proposed enlargement of the clerks' offices; such improvement to be made in such manner as not to impair the fire proof character of the rooms;

And also to receive definite propositions from the owners of halls, and estimates of the necessary cost to the county of fitting up such rooms;

And to report upon the relative advantages of each of such rooms.

Mr. May moved to amend the substitute of Mr. Gale by referring the resolution to a committee consisting of the same members of the board as constituted the committee in relation to addition to fire-proof building and rental of half for court room.

After some discussion, Mr. Gale suggested the appointment of Messrs. Robson, Todd, Charles, Mathews, and the chairman, as the committee under his substitute; which was acceptable to Mr. May, and the resolution, as so amended, was accepted by Mr. May, and adopted by the board.

September meeting, 1881.—The special order being the report of special committee on renting court rooms and building addition to clerks' offices.

Mr. Robson presented the following report:

Board of Supervisors—September Meeting, 1881.

Your special committee, to whom was referred the matter of receiving definite propositions from the owners of halls suitable for court house purposes, and estimates of the cost of the county of fitting up such rooms and other duties, would respectfully report.

That your committee has examined the opera house, which has been cleaned and improved since our last meeting and of its convenience this board is cognizant. We find we can rent said room and necessary jury rooms, for the sum of $940 per annum (not including treasurer's office), or at the same rate of rent paid by the city of Galesburg therefor. The lease to terminate at the will of the county.

That we examined the academy of music, and are offered it by Mr. Johnston for the sum of $500 per annum for a term of not less than five years from the first day of February, 1883; with authority to make such alterations therein as may be deemed necessary. That we have estimates of the cost of such changes as we thought necessary to accommodate the court and find they can be made for about $400, and we estimate that an additional $100 will be needed for heating purposes, which would be an average rental of $600 per annum for the five years.

That we examined the commercial college room, and are offered the same, together with three rooms on the second floor for jury rooms, by the owner, Mr. Allen, for the sum of $500 per annum for the term of five years. The cost of fitting up said rooms would be about the same as the academy of music.

At the prices named your committee think the academy of music preferable to the other rooms.

Your committee would further report, that they have had plans for the second story addition to the clerks' office, together with plans for iron roof and iron stairs for said building, drawn, thus providing for maintaining the fire-proof character of the building, and from estimates received from several parties as to cost, we find the expense will be not exceeding $5,000, one estimate being less than $4,000.

That the estimates for said addition with tin roof and wooden stairs, covered with tin roof, are from $1,000 to $1,200 less.

Respectfully submitted,

WM. ROBSON, R. G. MATHEWS, T. J. HALE,
A. G. CHARLES, W. B. TODD,

Committee.

Your committee would further report that since preparing the foregoing, they have received another offer from the owners of the opera house, as follows:

GALESBURG, Sept. 21, 1881.

The undersigned, representing the proprietors of the opera house building, in the city of Galesburg, hereby offers to the county of Knox to extend the same occupancy and use that the county now has in said opera house building, for court house and court room purposes, beyond the termination of the present lease, for such period as the said county may wish to occupy the same for court house and court room purposes, for the annual rental of five hundred ($500) dollars. C. Brechwald.

Which they now deem the most advantageous offer.

Respectfully submitted,

WM. ROBSON,
A. G. CHARLES,
R. G. MATHEWS,
W. B. TODD,
T. J. HALE,
Committee.

On motion of Mr. Dieterich the report of the committee was received.

Mr. May offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That so much of the report relates to the improvement to be made on the record building, and as relates to the rental of the opera house building for five years, be adopted; and that the same committee be continued, and instructed to carry out the plans and provisions of the report and close the contract of lease mentioned.

Mr. Gale offered the following substitute:

Resolved. That the offer of the owners of the opera house be accepted, and that the committee be instructed to procure from said owners a contract for the use of the rooms now occupied by the courts for court and jury rooms, for a term beginning with the close of the present term of occupancy by the county, and terminating at the pleasure of the board.

The yeas and nays being demanded on the substitute, resulted:

Yeas—Messrs. Boydstun, Latimer, Gale, Dieterich, McKee, Robson, Boynton, Leighton and Fredricks—9.

Nays—Messrs. Patch, Smith, May, McCallister, Charles, Montgomery, Sumner, Rebstock, Wyman, Wertman, Mathews, Shaffer, Sansbury and Todd—14. Substitute lost.

And the question recurring on the resolution of Mr. May, on motion of Mr. Gale, the resolution was ordered to lie over and be made the special order for two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At two o'clock the board was called to order, the special business being the consideration of the resolution of Mr. May.

Mr. Dieterich called for a division of the question. Objection being made, the question was voted upon and the division ordered.

Mr. McKee was called to the chair.

Mr. Hale then obtained the floor, and presented the following as a substitute for that portion of the resolution of Mr. May relating to the enlargement of the county offices:

Resolved, That the present committee be continued, and be instructed to procure necessary plans and specifications and proceed to make contracts with the lowest and best bidder for the enlargement of the county offices by the erection of a second story and the necessary approaches thereto to be erected and completed in such manner as shall be satisfactory to said committee, and at a total cost not exceeding five thousand dollars.

Mr. May accepted the substitute, and the resolution was adopted.

Yeas—Messrs. Latimer, Patch, Smith, May, McCallister, Charles, Montgomery, Robson, Sumner, Boynton, Rebstock, Wyman, Leighton, Fredricks, Wertman, Mathews, Shaffer, Sansbury, Todd and Hale—20.

Nays—Messrs. Boydstun, Gale, Dieterich, McKee and Chambers—5.

Mr. Hale offered the following substitute for the second clause of resolution of Mr. May:

Resolved, That this board accept the proposal of the proprietors of the opera house building, dated Sept. 21st, and that the committee be instructed to close up a contract with said proprietors of the opera house building for the occupancy of the same for court house purposes, for a period of not exceeding five years from the termination of present lease.

Mr. May moved to amend the substitute by striking out the words "not exceeding." Carried.

Yeas—Messrs. Patch, McKee, Smith, May, McCallister, Charles, Montgomery, Rebstock, Wyman, Wertman, Mathews, Shaffer, Sansbury and Todd—14.

Nays—Messrs. Boydstun, Latimer, Dieterich, Gale, Chambers, Robson, Sumner, Leighton, Fredericks and Hale—10.

And the substitute as amended was adopted, by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Boydstun, Patch, Dieterich, Smith, May, McCallister, Charles, Montgomery, Robson, Sumner, Rebstock, Wyman, Wertman, Mathews, Shaffer, Sansbury and Todd—17.

Nays—Messrs. Latimer, Gale, McKee, Chambers, Hale, Leighton, and Fredricks—7.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this board the erection of a court house in Knox county should be undertaken at the proper time, with a view to completion six years from the present time.

That no expense should be incurred in such building except upon thoroughly matured plans, which will secure to the county suitable accommodations at reasonable expense.

That we recommend to succeeding board the levy of an annual tax of one mill on the dollar valuation, the fund so raised to be kept invested in government bonds or other suitable securities, and that at a suitable time plans should be procured and fully matured, such plans to be canvassed and acted on by at least two successive boards.

The yeas and nays being called was adopted:

Yeas—Messrs, Boydstun, Latimer, Patch, Gale, Dieterich, McKee, Chambers, Smith, May, McCallister, Robson, Sumner, Fredricks, Todd and Hale—15.

Nays—Messrs. Charles, Montgomery, Rebstock, Wyman, Leighton, Wertman, Mathews, Shaffer and Sansbury—9.

December meeting, 1881.—Mr. Todd, from special committee on court house and clerk's office reported contract made with the owners of the opera house for court and jury rooms at a rental of $500 per annum when Mr. Mathews moved that the lease be accepted at the original proposition, and that the chairman of the board be authorized to execute contract therefor.

The yeas and nays being called for on Mr. Mathews' motion, it was adopted:

Yeas—Messrs. Boydstun, Latimer, Patch, Chambers, Smith, Townsend, McCallister, Charles, Montgomery, Sumner, Boynton, Rebstock, Wyman, Leighton, Fredricks, Wertman, Mathews, Sansbury and Todd—19.

Nays—Messrs. Gale and McKee—2.

January meeting, 1882.—Mr. Robson, from special committee on county buildings, made the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your special committee on county buildings, etc., would respectfully report that all matters referred them have been attended to, and recommend that the clerk be directed to issue orders in payment of allowances made.

Your committee report that the addition to the county building has been accepted by them, the same being as nearly completed as the weather would permit; that of the contract price therefor $4,933.00, the sum of $2,000 was paid by clerk's orders, we recommend that an order now issue to Frost Manufacturing Company, the contractors, for $2,900, and that the remainder of contract price, $33 be retained until the work is completed.

Your committee would further report, that the following extra expenses were incurred in and about said improvements:

Frost Manufacturing Company, for plumbing, gas fixtures, repairing and painting old shutters	$52.18
A. S. Anderson, repairing brick work of lower story and extra stone work	12.62
Babcock & Pierpont, guttering, and conductors for building, and other incidental repairs for offices	46.78
Parry & Stevens, expenses to Chicago and return, and labor on plans and specifications for building	18.00
A. J. Perry, 5 days work on plans and specifications for addition to clerks' offices	20.00

Respectfully submitted,

WM. ROBSON,
R. G. MATHEWS,
W. B. TODD,
A. G. CHARLES,
T. J. HALE.

On motion, the report of the committee was accepted, approved and its recommendations concurred in.

The chairman, as special committee to complete contract for renting the opera house for court purposes, reported that duty performed, and presented the contract.

On motion of Mr. Mathews, the report was accepted and approved, and the clerk directed to have said contract of lease recorded.

April meeting, 1883.—Mr. Gale offered the following resolution and asked that it be referred to the committee on judiciary and clerks' offices.

Resolved, That the chairman of the committee on judiciary and clerk's offices be authorized to allow the city council of Galesburg to hold their meetings in the county court room on such terms as will indemnify the county for any increased expense in case of lighting or heating the room, and in no case to interfere with the use of the room for county purposes, such permission to be only until the further pleasure of the board, and at all times revocable.

The resolution was so referred.

The following is taken from a report of the committee on judiciary and clerks' offices:

We recommend the passage of the resolution referred to as authorizing the use of the court room by the city of Galesburg.

September meeting, 1883.—Mr. Gale moved that a tax of one mill on the dollar valuation be levied on all taxable property in Knox county in accordance with the following resolution, passed at the September meeting, 1881, of the board of supervisors, viz:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this board the erection of a court house in Knox county should be undertaken at the proper time with a view to completion six years from the present time; that no expense should be incurred in such building except upon thoroughly matured plans which will secure to the county suitable accommodations at reasonable expense; that we recommend to succeeding boards the levy of an annual tax of one mill on the dollar valuation, the fund so raised to be kept invested in government bonds or other suitable securities, and that at a suitable time plans should be procured and fully matured, such plans to be canvassed and acted on by at least two successive boards.

The ayes and nays being called the vote stood:

Ayes—Latimer, Paden, Gale, Boydstun, Greenleaf, Hawkinson—6.

Nays—Harden, Rankin, May, Eiker, Charles, Montgomery, Allen, Boynton, Rebstock, Wyman, Leighton, Fredricks, Sloan, Mathews, Wilder, Sansbury, Todd—17. The motion was declared lost.

The final resolution in relation to the construction of a new court house for the county of Knox offered at the September meeting, 1883 by Mr. W. S. Gale, seemed a reasonable one and was offered with the full expectation that it would pass. The use of the opera house for court purposes was never convenient, nor was it ever considered safe. At the September 1881 meeting of the board, a committee was instructed to procure necessary plans and specifications and proceed to make contracts with the lowest and best bidder for the enlargement of the county offices by the erection of a second story and the approaches thereto etc., at a cost not exceeding five thousand dollars. This work was substantially completed by the January meeting of 1882. A committee of the board had canvassed the city for suitable rooms and conveniences for holding court for five years, which resulted in a new contract with the opera house people, ordered at the September meeting 1881. (It is well to remember that the opera house burned in the fall of 1883.) It was not contemplated that the circuit court would be held in the so-called fire proof building for there were no jury rooms. It could not be otherwise, therefore, but apparent to every one that a court house was much needed and must soon be built. Nevertheless, the resolution was beaten by a vote of 6 to 17. The disappointment to the friends of the resolution was great. The difficulty was the resolution originated with a Galesburg man whom the county feared. To the county people, the court house was simply an ornament to Galesburg and not many of the county supervisors cared to act in opposition to that feeling. This was well known to the county officers and they believed that a movement for a new court house originating somewhere in the country would at once be popular and succeed. Acting upon this belief two of the county officers interviewed Mr. Charles P. Sansbury, supervisor of Victoria township, at the close of the January meeting 1884, urging him as coming from a distant township, to head such a movement. Mr. Sansbury went home, called a meeting of his constituents, explained to them the full situation and by a unanimous vote, strong resolutions were passed endorsing the movement for a new court house, calling upon the board to proceed to build and authorizing Mr. Sansbury to use his influence to aid the accomplishment of the same. This action was approved and confirmed by the voters of Victoria township at the April election and he was re-elected to the county board and had the pleasure of aiding in the success of the plan to build, as shown by the following action taken at the April meeting 1884.

April meeting, 1884.—Dr. Foote offered the following resolution, and moved its adoption:

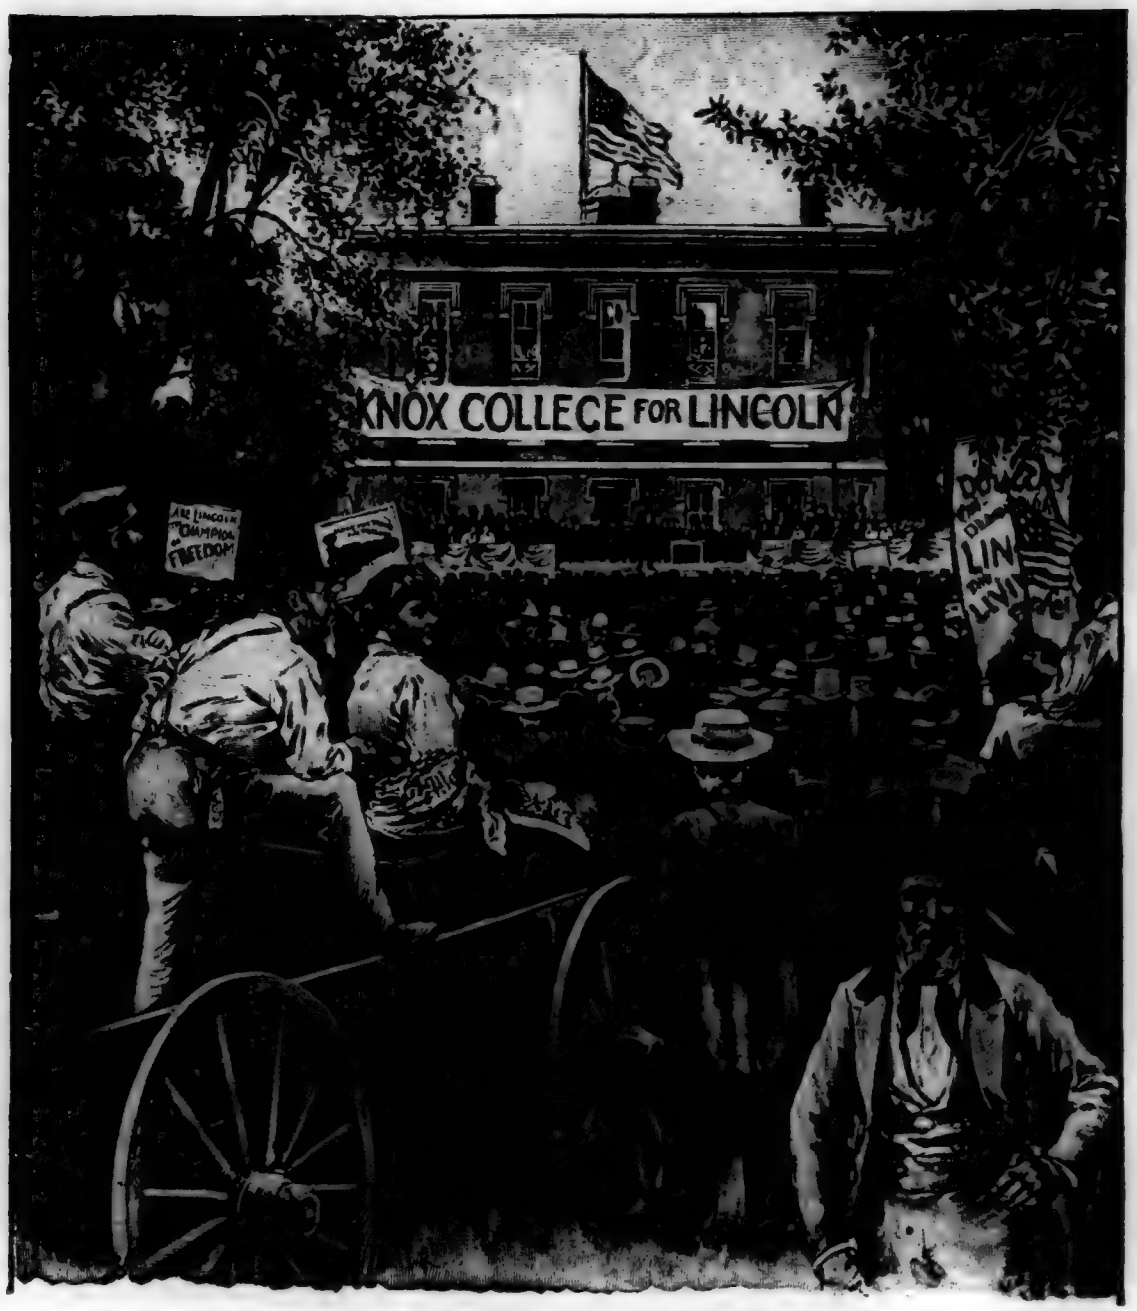
Resolved, That Messrs. Sloan, Robson and Gale be appointed a committee to report to the board a resolution for the appointment of a committee on public buildings, whose duty it shall be to take into consideration the propriety of preparing plans for the building of a court house, or to consider and report to the board plans for such building.

Mr. May moved to amend by adding "and that said committee be requested to report said resolution tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock." Carried.

And thereupon the resolution as amended was adopted.

Thursday morning, April 17, 1884.—Mr. Gale, in behalf of the committee on resolutions in regard to building committee asked leave to report at once.

On motion, leave was granted.



He thereupon reported the following report and resolution:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

Your committee, appointed to draft a resolution appointing a committee on buildings, beg leave to report for the consideration of the board the following resolution. In drafting the resolution the committee have assumed that, however desirable it might be to proceed at an early date with the erection of a court house, the board cannot be prepared to take definite action until after a full and thorough investigation, ascertaining the wants of the county and the best and most satisfactory way of meeting those wants.

They believe the board are unanimously of the opinion that no serious expense should be incurred and no irrevocable steps be taken until all questions connected with building shall have been fully and freely discussed by the board in full session and an intelligent understanding obtained; and that building shall not begin until after full and complete plans are agreed by the board and reliable estimates of the cost obtained.

Resolved, That there be appointed a committee on public buildings, whose duty it shall be to take into consideration the propriety of preparing plans for building a court house; to inquire into the requirements of the county for the proper accommodation of courts and county officers; to inquire into the cost and relative advantages of available materials for building; and if in the opinion of the committee desirable, to procure plans and estimates of a suitable building, which can be erected at a cost not exceeding $100,000, to ascertain what disposal can be advantageously made of the building now occupied by the county offices, by sale to the city or otherwise, leaving possession in the county until other accommodations can be secured; to report to the board at its next regular meeting, or at any meeting, which may be sooner called, whatever progress shall have been made. That the committee be appointed by the chair with the approval of the board, one member to be selected from each of the districts as constituted by the resolution creating the committee on equalization.

JOHN SLOAN,
WM. ROBSON,
W. SELDEN GALE.

Mr. Latimer moved the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. May offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That the question whether measures should not be adopted involving expense to the county, for the purpose of beginning the erection of a court house in this county, is a question properly belonging to the people of Knox county to decide; and that a good and sufficient building can and ought to be erected and finished, ready for use, for a sum not greater than $100,000, and should by no means cost to exceed that amount. Therefore,

Resolved, That the supervisors are hereby instructed to give the proper notice so that the several townships will, at the annual spring election next April, vote for or against the erection of a new court house building, the cost of which, when completed, shall not exceed $100,000.

Mr. Gale objected to the substitute as not being germain to the subject.

The chairman ruled that the substitute was in order, and thereupon the ayes and nays were called on the substitute with the following result.

Ayes—May, Clark, Charles, Montgomery, Rebstock, Wyman, Parker, Todd —8.

Nays—Harden, Latimer, Paden, Gale, Cooke, Olson, McKee, Foote, Rankin, Robson, Allen, Townsend, Boynton, Leighton, Andrews, Sloan, Sansbury—17. The substitute was lost.

The ayes and nays were after a full discussion of the question called on the resolution of Mr. Gale and resulted as follows:

Ayes—Harden, Latimer, Paden, Gale, Cooke, Olson, McKee, Foote, Rankin, Townsend, Robson, Allen, Boynton, Leighton, Andrews, Sloan, Sansbury—17.

Nays—May, Clark, Charles, Montgomery, Rebstock, Wyman, Parker, Todd —8.

The resolution declared adopted.

In pursuance of the resolution adopted yesterday, the chairman announced the following committee on public buildings: Messrs. Sloan, Robson, Gale, Charles, Harden, Leighton.

The first point now to be considered was what shall be the plan of the new building. Immediately after the adjournment of the board, Mr. W. Selden Gale called on the writer, who was then county clerk, and the arrangement of the rooms thoroughly considered. It was agreed that the circuit clerk should have two rooms, one as clerk and one as recorder, with door between and that the sheriff's office should open into the office of the circuit clerk; that the county clerk should have a large office and a work room and that the office of the county judge should be adjacent to and opening into the county clerk's office. The office of the treasurer and superintendent of schools were also provided for on the first floor. The county and circuit court rooms and state's attorneys' office were provided for on the second floor. The supervisors' and jury rooms put on the third floor. With these ideas as a starting point, Mr. Gale went home and the next day returned to the county clerk with the plan worked out, substantially as the building was erected. The committee was called together and approved the plan. The committee thought it advisable to employ an architect to come to Galesburg and develop a general design and work out the details under their inspection and so called a Mr. Hackney of Des Moines, Iowa to Galesburg, who undertook the work. This soon proved unsatisfactory. The committee let Mr. Hackney go and at once advertised for plans, based on the sketch made by Mr. Gale. This resulted in a number of designs from different architects, which were submitted at the July meeting 1884, and upon which the following action was taken.

July meeting, 1884. Mr. Gale stated that the building committee had given considerable attention to the matters referred to it, but were not ready to report; that there were in attendance several architects with designs for court houses, which the committee would like to examine, and he asked that the committee might be excused from the board for a time, to further consider these plans and other matters connected with building.

On motion of Mr. Latimer the building committee was excused.

1:30 P. M.—The building committee asked for further time in which to examine plans and other matters connected with court house construction.

On motion of Mr. May the matter was referred back to the committee with instructions to report to the board in two weeks.

Adjourned meeting July 28, 1884.—Mr. Gale in behalf of the building committee, asked that said committee be excused during the reading of the record and of the bills, as they had some matters to arrange before making a report.

On motion of Mr. McKee the request was granted.

Mr. May stated that the building committee at the meeting of July 14, reported that they had not agreed upon a plan for court house, and asked that they be authorized to select a plan and make the contracts, or that the board grant them more time in which to report a plan to the board, whereas the record simply shows that the committee asked for more time. He desired the record to show the facts.

By agreement the matter was postponed until the building committee should be present.

The building committee having entered, the matter of the correction of the record suggested by Mr. May was brought up.

Mr. Gale having made an explanation of the matter, moved that the record as written by the clerk stand approved. Carried.

Mr. Gale read the following report of the building committee:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The building committee have received and considered the several plans submitted to them by architects in attendance.

Of these plans they recommend to the consideration of the board as their preference the plan submitted by E. E. Myers, of Detroit, the character of the building being fully described in the plans, sketches, estimates and statements herewith submitted.

The estimated cost of the building (furniture and heating apparatus not included) built of brick with trimmings of cut stone and terra cotta is about $90,000. And in the opinion of the committee it can be built in the manner described for a sum within, or not much exceeding the estimate.

The committee are of opinion that the same designs are with slight modification well adapted to stone construction, and may be erected in stone, the walls in rock-faced Gladstone stone, or Bedford stone with cut stone trimmings, for an additional cost of about six thousand dollars.

The committee are of opinion that the stone construction if stone from Gladstone quarries can be obtained or equally satisfactory stone can be elsewhere obtained at a reasonable cost, will give best satisfaction to the board and to the public.

They recommend that the committee be authorized to employ Col. Myers to prepare plans and specifications of the building, substantially as described both in brick and stone construction, preparatory to advertising for contracts.

The employment to be upon the condition that in case the building cannot be let after due advertisement to responsible parties who will promptly come forward and secure the performance of their contracts to the satisfaction of the board for the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, or such sum not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars as the architect and committee may agree on, such plan shall not be accepted or paid for, except at the option of the board.

And if the plans and specifications shall be in any way deficient or incomplete, the said Myers shall be liable for all loss or damage or extra expense occasioned by such defect or omission.

And that the committee be authorized to advertise for bids for construction.

W. Selden Gale,	A. G. Charles,
Wm. Robson,	Wm. H. Leighton,
John Sloan,	M. B. Harden.

Mr. Gale also read the following letter from the architect in regard to the character of the proposed building:

Galesburg, Ill., July 25, 1884.

To the Hon. Board of Supervisors, Galesburg, Ill.:

Gentlemen:—The design I have submitted for your new court house is for a first-class fire-proof building, built of the best and most substantial materials and workmanship, the foundation to be of stone, laid in hydraulic cement mortar. The basement will contain all the water closets, wash basins, the steam heating and ventilating apparatus. The plans of each story will contain the several apartments for all the county offices, court rooms, etc., and to be of the several sizes and forms as shown upon the plans. The exterior parts of the building will be of pressed brick, terra cotta and cut stone for all the surfaces above the basement or first floor line; the basement wall above the grade line will be rock face work; all cornices, belt courses and sills will be cut stone, except such portions thereof as are shown to be terra cotta. The floors of all apartments in each story will be iron beams, with brick arches, to be turned between the beams, and concreted up solid to receive either the wood or encaustic tile floors. The entire frame work of the roof and tower will be wrought iron, and have iron arches between the beams, and concreted up solid to receive the slates of the roof. The entire roof will be covered with extra heavy slate; all gutters and valleys to be lined with the best quality and grade of tin. The stairs will be made of cast-iron. The galleries in the circuit court room will be supported on wrought iron girders concealed within the gallery fronts. The ceiling of this court room will be stained glass sky-light placed within a curved dome, which will afford a direct vertical light either in day-time, or at night, the light being placed over the sky-light. The outer sky-light will be made of heavy hammered glass. The outside door sills will be granite surfaces, patent axe-finish. The steps should be by all means made of the same material, as it is the best that can be used for such purposes, where the material is subjected, not only to so great a wear and tear, but this material in so exposed a surface is decidedly the best to resist not only the uses, but also the action of the elements. All the interior finish of the basement will be long-leaf, best quality, yellow pine. All the interior finish of the first and second stories will be red oak. The finish of the third story will be long-leaf yellow pine, the surface finished in oil and varnish. The glass used in all the windows will be the best quality French plate-glass, full quarter inch thick. The floors of the corridors will be encaustic tile. The floors of all offices, court rooms and galleries will be long-leaf yellow pine, bedded solid on the concrete, and secured to the floor strips with secret nailing. All the walls will be built of brick, laid in a mortar composed of hydraulic lime and hydraulic cement mortar. Pressed brick should be laid with what is termed a steel tucked joint, using glazier's black putty for the tucking of the work; all the backing of the pressed brick, will be brick laid in cement mortar. All interior walls to be hard burned brick laid in cement mortar. This building can be erected, using first class workmanship and materials for one hundred thousand dollars, ($100,000). Should you desire to use in place of pressed brick for the outer walls, rock-faced stone work or scratch mason-work, using either Sagetown marble, Indiana stone, from Elliottsville, or Ohio blue sand stone, the cost of the structure will be increased about six thousand dollars ($6,000), making a total cost of one hundred and six thousand dollars. You can rely upon getting a structure of first-class character, and of a style of architecture and finish that will not be in any respect inferior to any of the first-class modern court houses erected in your state.

The building, either built of pressed brick or stone, will be one of the handsomest structures in your state, and in no wise be inferior either in style or finish to any of such buildings.

Yours truly, E. E. Myers.

Mr. Latimer moved that the report of the committee be adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

Mr. May moved to amend that the report be accepted and the committee discharged.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. Rebstock moved that the report be accepted, except its recommendations. Lost.

On motion of Mr. McKee, the board adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Wednesday morning July 30, 1884.—Board met pursuant to adjournment.

Present—Hon. R. G. Mathews, chairman.

Supervisors—Harden, Latimer, Paden, Gale, Cooke, Olson, McKee, Rankin, May, Clark, Charles, Montgomery, Allen, Boynton, Rebstock, Wyman, Leighton, Andrews, Sloan, Parker, Sansbury, Todd.

The chairman stated that the matter for consideration was the motion of Mr. Latimer to adopt the report of the building committee and concur in its recommendation.

After full discussion and explanation of the matter, the motion of Mr. Latimer was carried.

Mr. McKee offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Resolved, That the present building committee be constituted a permanent building committee, whose duty it shall be to advertise for bids for building a court house, which bids, when received, are to be opened when the board is in session, for the consideration of the board, and to perform all other duties pertaining to the building of a court house.

Resolution adopted.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the chairman of the board be authorized to contract with the city of Galesburg, or its authorized agent for the sale of the county building, and lot occupied by clerks' offices and other uses for the sum of $10,000. The possession to be retained by the county until the completion of the new court house, allowing the city to make such use of the building as may not inconvenience the county officers. The purchase money to be paid when called for, whenever the contract for the completion of the court house shall be made, and $30,000 expended in the erection. The contract to be rescinded at the option of either party, if no commencement shall be made of the building before the first day of January next, and that the building committee be directed not to incur any considerable expense in preparing to build until the completion of this contract.

The bill of Mr. W. F. Hackney amounting to $420.25, for preparing plans, and other services for the building committee, was read and referred to the committee on judiciary and clerks' offices.

Mr. Gale requested to be excused from the committee while considering the bill, and moved that Mr. Latimer be substituted in his place. Carried.

Mr. Todd read the following report of the judiciary committee on the bill of Mr. Hackney.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee on judiciary and clerks' offices would respectfully report that we have examined the bill of W. F. Hackney, and accompanying papers, and we recommend that he be paid $120.25 in full of bill presented amounting to $420.25. Respectfully submitted,

J. W. Allen, J. S. Latimer,
James Rebstock, W. B. Todd.
M. D. Cooke,

On motion of Mr. Harden, the foregoing report was adopted, and its recommendations concurred in.

September meeting, 1884.—Mr. Gale offered the following resolution and moved that it be referred to the miscellaneous committee:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the board of supervisors, that it is for the interest, comfort and convenience of the people of the county that the vicinity of the court house and the usually traveled route from the depot to the court house, and from the court house to the business portion of the city, should be kept free from the presence of dram shops and their disagreeable accompaniments; that this board respectfully call the attention of the city council of Galesburg to the subject, and ask the council to consider the propriety of taking immediate action, before vested interests opposed to such action intervene, to prevent the establishment of dram shops in the vicinity of the court house park, on Broad street between the park and the public square, and on either route from the depot to the court house park by way of South street or Tompkins street; that the clerk of the board be directed to present a copy of this resolution to the city council.

September meeting, 1884.—Mr. Gale asked leave to submit the following report of the building committee.

To the Honorable, the Board of Supervisors:

GENTLEMEN: The committee on buildings beg leave to report that they did on the 1st day of August contract with E. E. Myers in accordance with the instructions of the board, passed at the last meeting; that since that time Col. Myers has been employed in preparing plans and specifications. The committee have not advertised for bids for material and construction for the reason that the plans and specifications have not been completed. The committee are now advised that the plans and specifications will be completed on the 15th day of this month, and the committee recommend that they be directed to advertise at once for bids for materials and construction, such bids to be examined by the board on the 3d of October.

W. SELDEN GALE,
W. H. LEIGHTON,
JOHN SLOAN,
A. G. CHARLES,
M. B. HARDEN.

On motion, the report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

On motion of Mr. Gale, it was ordered that when this board adjourn it adjourns to meet October 3d, 1884.

Adjourned Meeting Oct. 3d, 1884.—Board met pursuant to adjournment. Called to order by clerk.

Present: Messrs. Harden, Latimer, Paden, Gale, Foote, Cooke, McKee, Olson, Rankin, May, Townsend, Robson, Allen, Wyman, Leighton, Andrews, Parker and Todd.

On motion of Mr. Gale, Mr. Paden was elected temporary chairman.

On motion of Mr. Gale, the time in which to file bids for the construction of a new court house was extended to one-thirty P. M.

On motion the board adjourned to one-thirty P. M.

One-thirty P. M.—Board called to order by chairman Mathews.

Present same as this forenoon, with Messrs. Charles, Sloan, Clark, Montgomery, Boynton, Rebstock and Sansbury.

The clerk read a portion of the minutes of the meeting of September 10th, when, on motion, the reading was suspended, and, on motion, the clerk proceeded to open bids for the construction of a court house, which were as follows:

The Young & Farrell Diamond Stone Sawing Co., Brick.....	$183,804.97
Thomas & Hugh Caldwell, Stone	155,099.50
Same, Brick	152,459.00
Same, Brick, with Ohio Sand Stone Trimmings.....	148,059.00
Parry & Stevens, Stone	133,000.00
Same, Brick	128,000.00
Fire Proof Construction Co., Hollow Tile Arches	4,303.20
Union Foundry and Pullman Car Wheel Works, Iron Work..	26,600.00
A. Wallbaum & Co., Stone Work Complete	35,600.00

On motion of Dr. Foote the bids were referred to the building committee.

On motion said committee were permitted to retire for the purpose of reporting on said bids.

The building committee entered and Mr. Gale read the following report:

The committee have examined the bids referred to them, and are of opinion that it is not for the interest of the county to accept either of the bids. They recommend a further advertisement for bids to be opened on October 24th.

W. S. GALE, Chairman.

On motion the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendation concurred in.

Adjourned Sept. Meeting October 24, 1884.—Board met pursuant to adjournment. Present: Hon. R. G. Mathews, chairman.

Supervisors: Messrs. Harden, Latimer, Paden, Gale, Foote, Cooke, McKee, Olson, Rankin, May, Clark, Charles, Montgomery, Boynton, Wyman, Sloan, Parker, Sansbury, Todd.

The minutes of the proceedings of October 3d were read and approved.

A recess was taken to await the arrival of absent supervisors.

Messrs. Robson, Allen, Leighton and Andrews having entered the board was called to order, and on motion, the clerk proceeded to open and read the bids for the construction of a new court house as follows:

Robert C. Greenlee, in best Ohio blue stone for exterior, with Joliet or lime stone for foundation, corrugated iron arches for ceilings, except for corridors and court rooms, where hollow tile will be used .....$	119,444

The Young and Farrell Diamond Stone Sawing Co., Salem, Ind., stone building 160,084.00
Ohio sand stone building 161,584.00
Brick building 154,840.00
Green Serpentine stone 173,084.00

On motion of Mr. Latimer, the foregoing bids were referred to the building committee.

On motion, the board adjourned until half-past one o'clock.

One-thirty P.M.—Board called to order by the chairman.

Present the same as this morning.

Mr. Gale read the following report of the building committee:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee on buildings beg leave to report that they have examined the several bids referred to them, and they find the bid of Dawson & Anderson the lowest and best bid.

This bid being, in stone construction, $114,311.52, and in brick construction, $111,000.

The next lowest and best bid is that of Robert C. Greenlee, $119,444 in stone.

They recommend the acceptance and approval of the bid of Dawson & Anderson for stone construction, and that the committee be directed to conclude a contract with Dawson & Anderson for the erection of the court house, to be completed September 1st, 1886. The committee are satisfied that these bids are as low as the board can expect for this building, and are satisfied that the bidders are men of character and responsibility. They are further of the opinion that the building, if completed according to the plans, will be a credit to the county, and they do not believe it is for the interest of the county to reduce either the size or character of the building.

W. SELDEN GALE, W. H. LEIGHTON,
WM. ROBSON, A. G. CHARLES,
M. B. HARDEN, JOHN SLOAN.

Moved by Dr. Foote, that the foregoing report be accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

Ayes and Nays demanded by Mr. McKee.

The roll being called, resulted as follows:

Ayes—Harden, Latimer, Paden, Gale, Foote, Cooke, Olson, Charles, Robson, Allen, Boynton, Leighton, Andrews, Sloan, Sansbury and Todd, 16.

Nays—McKee, Rankin, May, Clark, Montgomery, Wyman and Parker, 7. Motion adopted.

And thereupon, said committee entered into a contract with Dawson & Anderson of Toledo, Ohio, for the construction of the court house according to the full plans and specifications prepared by said architect, E. E. Myers, of Detroit, Michigan, and on file with the county clerk.

Said contractors immediately made preparations to begin the work of construction and in pursuance thereof, the ground for said building was broken October 26, 1884, and before building preparations were suspended on account of cold weather, the footings, and quite a portion of the foundation, were put in.

January Meeting, 1885.—Mr. Gale read the following report of the building committee:

To the Hon., the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, January Meeting, 1885.

GENTLEMEN:—Your building committee beg leave to report that upon the day after the close of the October meeting they proceeded to locate the court house. That immediately after work was commenced by the contractor, and between that time and the second Wednesday of December the excavation for the building was made, the trenches for the outside walls and a portion of the inside walls were dug and filled with concrete and covered with footing stone.

A considerable amount of material for the foundation is collected upon the ground. Since the date last mentioned no work has been done, it being thought better for the interests of the county and the contractor to suspend operations till settled weather in the spring. By the terms of the contract, the contractor is entitled on the second Wednesday of each month to receive from the county payment for the work done up to that time, less 10 per cent. and less amounts already paid. No provision was made by the board at the last meeting to meet such payments, unless the very general authority given to the committee might be considered as authorizing them to order payment.

It appears that the contractor had expended about $2,500 prior to the second Wednesday of December. It was thought desirable to avoid the expense of a special meeting of the board, and the committee took the responsibility of advising the issuing by the clerk and payment by the treasurer of orders to the amount of $1,800 to the contractors. They also procured the clerk to issue to the chairman of the committee an order for $14.65 to cover the incidental expenses incurred by the committee since its appointment.

The committee ask the approval of the board of their action in making payments, and desire that some provision may be made to provide for payments coming due during the interval of the meetings of the board. They recommend the passage of a resolution that the clerk be authorized to issue to the contractor on court house orders for such amounts as by the terms of the contract the contractors are entitled to receive, upon the request of the building committee.

They also advise that the building committee be authorized to appoint a superintendent of the work. It is well understood that the work cannot be allowed to proceed with safety to the county except under the constant supervision of a capable and reliable builder. During the progress of the work already performed, the committee requested Samuel J. Parry to take temporary charge and it being from day to day doubtful how far the work would proceed without interruption by winter weather, it was for the time found necessary, the price named by Mr. Parry as satisfactory to him was 50 cents per hour for the time actually spent.

M. B. HARDEN,	JOHN SLOAN.

On motion of Mr. Latimer, the foregoing report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

April Meeting, 1885.—Mr. Gale offered the following resolution which was adopted and its recommendation concurred in.

RESOLVED: That the building committee be directed to procure suitable plans of the heating apparatus for the new court house and advertise for bids for its construction, such bids to be opened and passed upon by the board at the July meeting.

July Meeting, 1885.—On motion of Mr. Gale, the building committee was authorized to make such temporary arrangement for jury and circuit rooms as may be necessary, and that the sheriff be directed to have the telephone now at the opera house, moved to the county court room.

On motion of Mr. Gale the opening of the bids for steam heating at new court house was made the special order for tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. Gale read the following additional report of the building committee:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The building committee desire to call the attention of the board to the necessity of the construction of a cistern for rain water at the court house, and the importance of undertaking it while the ground is comparatively free from water. They have not given the subject the consideration necessary to express an opinion as to the necessary capacity of the cistern, but recommend that the committee be directed to procure the construction of a cistern of such size and at such time as they may think best.

W. SELDEN GALE, JOHN SLOAN,
W. ROBSON, M. B. HARDEN,
R. W. MILES, WM. H. LEIGHTON.

On motion of Dr. Foote the foregoing report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

The chairman called Mr. Harden to preside while he read the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The undersigned, who, by virtue of a resolution of your honorable body at the July meeting, 1884, was made special committee to dispose of the county building to the city of Galesburg, would beg leave to offer the following report: That he conferred with the honorable mayor of the city of Galesburg, who was empowered by the city council to act for the city, and that the city attorney at our dictation drew a contract selling to the city the county's interest in said building and lot for a consideration of $10,000, the money to become due when $30,000 was actually expended in the erection of the new court house, the county to retain possession until the completion of the same, the city of Galesburg to have such present use of said county building as would not inconvenience the county. Said contract was duly signed and placed on record by Mayor Stewart for the city of Galesburg, and by the undersigned for Knox county, August 14, 1884.

R. G. MATHEWS.

On motion of Mr. Miles the foregoing report was accepted and the clerk directed to place the same on record.

Mr. Gale read the following corrected report of the building committee on steam heating:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The building committee beg leave to report the following substitute on steam heating:

The lowest bid is that of Samuel I. Pope & Co., of Chicago, who propose to furnish the entire heating and ventilating apparatus as specified for the sum of $8,911.27, with privilege to the county to make any additions or deductions at the rates named in the schedule accompanying the bid. The committee recommend the acceptance of this bid, and that the committee be authorized to contract with them on the terms of the bid, deducting from the amount above named one gas engine, $1,400, two fans with belting, $657.56, as per schedule, leaving cost $6,853.71. The omitted items are designed simply for ventilation. We are advised that by a very simple and cheap expedient all that is surrendered can be secured without that expense. Considering the fact that the building is both by its location and mode of construction easily ventilated and a cool building in summer, we do not advise an outlay so great when so little necessity exists.

W. SELDEN GALE, W. H. LEIGHTON,
WM. ROBSON, JOHN SLOAN,
R. W. MILES, M. B. HARDEN.

On motion of Mr. Latimer, the foregoing report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

Mr. Gale read report on contract for heating new court house:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The building committee desire to report that they have, as directed by the board, entered into a contract with Samuel I. Pope & Co., of Chicago, to put in the apparatus for heating the court house, which contract they herewith submit as follows:

Articles of agreement made and concluded at the city of Galesburg, in the county of Knox, in the state of Illinois, this, the eighteenth day of August, A. D., 1885, by and between W. Selden Gale, Wm. H. Robson, John Sloan, Rufus W. Miles, Wm. H. Leighton and M. Harden, constituting the court house building committee, appointed by the supervisors of Knox county, Illinois, said committee being hereinafter known as the party of the first part, and Samuel I. Pope & Co., of Chicago, Cook county, Illinois, second part as follows, to-wit:

The said party of the second part do hereby agree to, and with the said party of the first part, or their successors in office; that they, the said party of the second part shall, and will execute all the work and furnish all the materials of every character required by the plans and specifications, to heat and ventilate the Knox county court house, said building situated in the city of Galesburg, within the county and state as first above written. Said plans and specifications are hereby constituted as a part and parcel of this contract as much so as if each and every part thereof was at length herein set forth and fully described.

The said party of the first part does hereby agree to, and will, in behalf of the board of supervisors of said county, pay or cause to be paid unto the parties of the second part, the sum of six thousand, eight hundred and forty-three, seventy-seven one-hundreths dollars for all of said work and material. Payments on said work shall be made on the several parts of the work and material in accordance with the prices stated in the schedule hereto connected; said schedule being only for the purpose of setting forth the payments to be made to the contractor, and for no other consideration; on each and every payment on work and material that twenty-five per cent. of the amount for all cost of work, labor and material, shall be retained until the final acceptance of the contract, subject to the conditions stated in the general instructions to bidders. Being understood that payments on all work and material shall be made once each month. Upon such payments being made unto the party of the second part for any work or material, then such material and work shall be deemed in the possession of the party of the first part, and shall be by them in their possession as part security for moneys advanced, and in guarantee in addition to that required by bond.

The said party of the second part does hereby agree to commence said work in said building as soon as the condition of the building permit of, and not later than when the roof is completed on said building, and to finish the same as soon thereafter as possible within the limited time named in the specifications and general instructions. The eliminations marked in the specifications of the omissions of the gas engines and fans was made at schedule prices, before execution of this contract.

In witness whereof, the parties hereinbefore named, in behalf of the board of supervisors of said county, and the party of the second part, each have hereto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written; this contract only to take effect when the said party of the second part has furnished his bond and approved security.

Witness our hands and seals,

R. W. MILES, JOHN SLOAN,
W. H. LEIGHTON, SAM'L I. POPE & CO.
WM. ROBSON,
(Witness) ALBERT A. PERRY, County Clerk.

Mr. Anderson, of Dawson & Anderson, contractors of new court house, appeared and by permission addressed the board, asking assistance in procuring water. On motion of Mr. Latimer, the matter was referred to the building committee with power to act.

September Meeting, 1885.—Mr. Gale from the committee on building, stated that no arrangement had yet been made for the construction of a cistern at the court house. He read the proposition of A. P. Anderson to construct a cistern 13 feet 6 inches in diameter in the clear, 9 feet deep in the clear between inlet and overflow pipes, walls and arch 8 inches thick, bottom 3 bricks thick laid flatwise, all of hard burned brick, thoroughly cemented inside and out, with 8 inch overflow pipe connected with present sewer, stone and iron top at grade line, for $285, to be constructed under the supervision of the superintendent at the court house.

On motion of Mr. Latimer the proposition was accepted.

January Meeting, 1886.—The following report of the building committee was read and referred to the committee on revenue:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Gentlemen:—The committee on building court house beg leave to report that the cistern authorized by the board at its last meeting has been completed and order issued by the clerk, by instructions of the committee, to A. P. Anderson, contractor, for the sum of $301,50. Until within the last ninety days, the progress has been satisfactory, but since that time much less has been done than the committee had reason to expect would have been done sixty days ago. The delay seems to have been caused by failure of the sub-contractors, who were to put on the framework of the roof to use due diligence. There now seems no prospect of doing more than to complete the framework of the roof before the coming of warm weather. The committee have used all the means in their power to hasten the operations of the iron contractors, and regret that their efforts have not been more successful. The committee have authorized the clerk to draw orders in favor of Dawson & Anderson to apply on contract, amount aggregating $46,610.54.

Respectfully submitted,

W. SELDEN GALE,
Chairman of Committee.

April Meeting, 1886.—Thursday, April 22, one-thirty P. M.—Board called to order by chairman. Present same as this forenoon.

Mr. Gale called up the report of the building committee, and read that portion of said report pertaining to the laying off and grading of the court house grounds. On motion the recommendation in relation thereto was concurred in.

Mr. Gale then read that portion of said report pertaining to the advertisement for bids for furniture. A motion by Mr. Boydstun to concur in the recommendations, was withdrawn.

Mr. Gale then read that portion of said report pertaining to the assignment of rooms. On motion the recommendations of the committee were concurred in.

Mr. Gale moved to strike out the recommendation of the committee in regard to furniture, and insert the following:

That the committee be directed to advertise at once for bids for furniture, the bidders to furnish the designs. That the bids be required to be made subject to the examination of the committee and the acceptance by the board. That the committee be directed to examine and carefully compare the bids, and when any shall be received, which the committee shall deem worthy of attention, they shall notify the chairman of the board, who shall call the board together. That when this board adjourn it shall adjourn subject to the call of the chairman.

On motion of Mr. Rebstock, the foregoing resolution amendatory of said report, was adopted.

Moved by Mr. Sisson that said report as amended be adopted, and its recommendations concurred in, and that it be spread upon the records of the board.

The ayes and nays being called for, the vote stood as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Hunter, Mosser, Paden, Gale, Cooke, Boydstun, Olson, McKee, Sisson, May, Townsend, Luther, Clark, Robson, Hurd, Miles, Leighton, Andrews and Sloan—18.

Nays—Messrs. Simpson, Glisson, Cooley, Rebstock, Parker, C. S. Clark and Gibbs—7.

The motion prevailed.

The report of the building committee, as amended, is as follows:

The committee on building beg leave to report:

The condition and progress of the building will be best understood by members of the board by actual inspection. While the progress made has been less than was hoped for, they think the construction so far is fairly satisfactory, and they are still of opinion that whether there be considered its substantial character, its convenience, its beauty or its cost, the building will prove satisfactory to those specially concerned in its erection, and to the citizens of the county.

Messrs. Dawson & Anderson sublet the contract for the iron construction to other parties, who in turn sublet the construction of the frame work of the roof. This work should have been completed early in November, which would have enabled the work to go on all winter, and made the completion of the building within the contract time, the 1st of September, entirely within the power of the contractor. The neglect to complete this work in time, has so far delayed the entire work as to make its completion within that time no longer a possibility.

An effort should be made to secure the completion of the offices so as to permit the clerks to remove before the pressure of fall work on their offices, and to secure one court room for the October term. But we believe it better to suffer some inconvenience from delay rather than hasten the completion at the risk of getting anything but permanent work.

The time within which it may be expected to complete the building may be estimated, by calculating the time necessary for the work of plastering, now just beginning.

2nd. The time the work should stand to become sufficiently dry to receive the woodwork, and 3rd, the time necessary to set up the woodwork then already prepared.

The other portions of the work should be carried on simultaneously so as to cause no delay.

It is perhaps hardly worth while to refer to various reports which have obtained some currency, of danger to the county from failure on the part of the contractors.

We have only to say that we have no reason to question the perfect good faith of the contractors, or their ability to complete their undertaking. And that advanced as the work now is, it is not possible the county can suffer any disasterous loss in any contingency.

The work already done is undoubtedly much more expensive, compared with the originally estimated cost than that which is to be done.

The committee had hoped to find the plans so complete that no changes whatever could be called for. But they cannot conceive it profitable to perpetuate an error, and there is no time when a mistake or oversight can be so easily corrected as in time of construction. When they consider the magnitude of the work, the unusual and complicated plan and character of the building, the various uses to which it is to be put, the difficulty, owing to distance, or consultation with the architect, the fact that the plans were required to be made in a limited time and in two different modes of construction, the committee thought they were hardly warranted in expecting a realization of such hopes. They have thought necessary, in process of construction, to require changes as follows: On the 1st floor a door to be made in the tower room, connecting it and permitting it to be used in connection with the room next south of it. A double glass door in place of the single one connecting the two rooms of the county clerk for the better lighting of the inner room.

The filling up of space in the basement under the vault for greater security. In the second story a change in the partition between the judge's room and the library, and dispensing with the water closet, and substituting a wash bowl and urinal in the judge's room.

In the third story another door connecting two jury rooms in south wing, to be opened when necessary to secure better accommodations for a jury detained all night, and providing one of the rooms with a wash bowl and urinal. A change in partition at north end of corridor so as to shut off the stairway leading to the attic.

These changes all told, will cost but little, but the cost will be an addition to the contract price.

The committee also accepted the offer made by the contractor, believing it to be advantageous to the county, to substitute red oak for yellow pine, where yellow pine is specified, in all doors above the basement, and all wood work in second story corridor and smaller court room for $300.

In the exterior of the building, the contractor claimed the minarets and upper cornice of the tower were to be of iron. The architect said they were to be of stone. The committee thought to finish the most conspicuous part of the building with an inferior material would detract too much from the appearance, and directed the contractor to use stone.

An examination of the specifications shows that in the original or brick construction, iron was called for; that in changing to a stone construction the same specifications were used, substituting other language when necessary, that the section affecting this work seemed to be overlooked in making the changes.

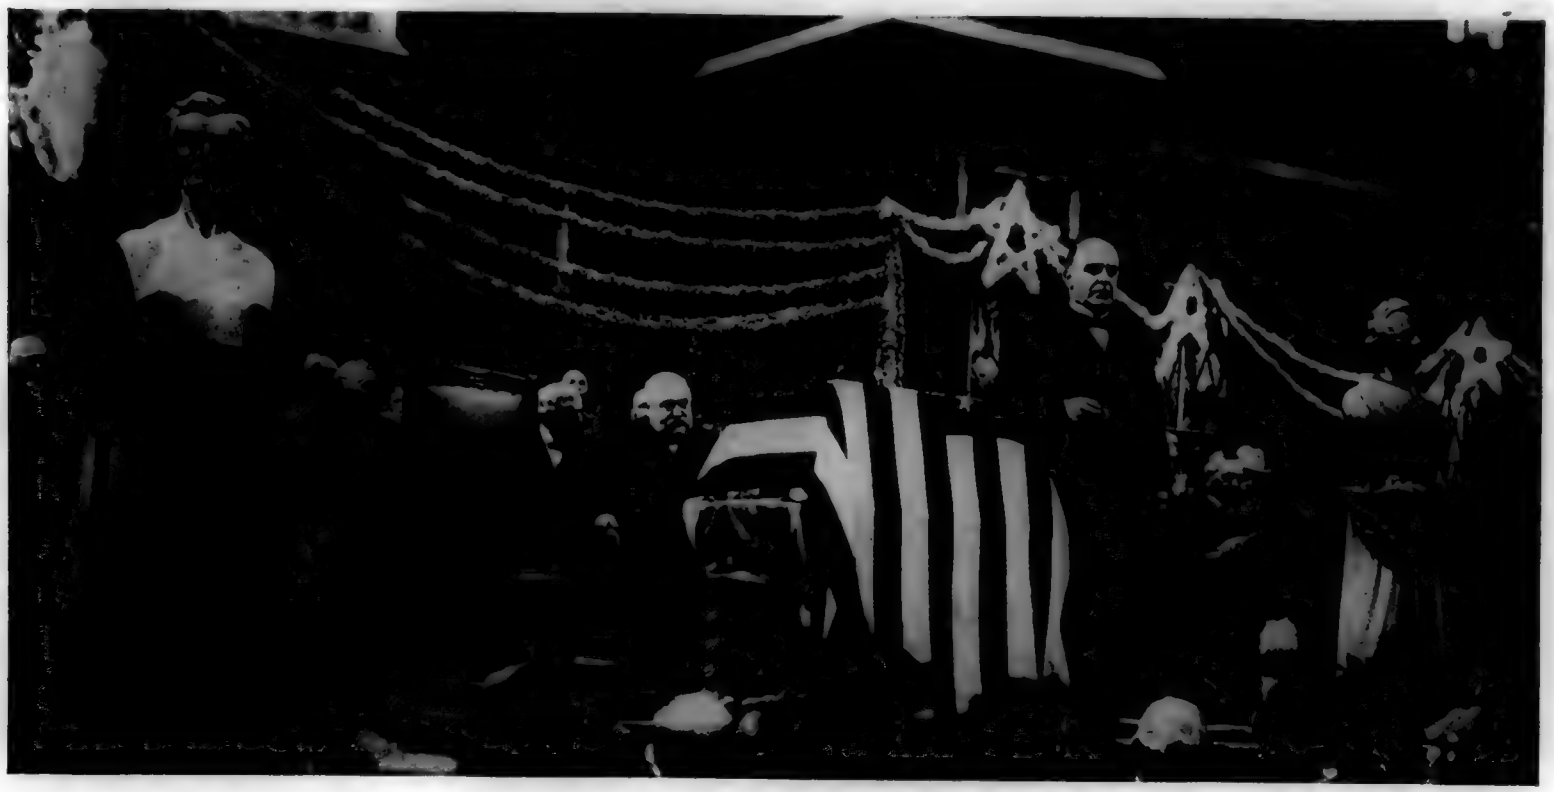
The contractor evidently made the estimates on which his bid was founded, for iron work, the language misled him, if it did not justify him, and it does not seem unreasonable for him to claim compensation for the difference.

The committee required the diamond shaped stones in the gable to be rubbed stone; the contractor claimed they were to be rockfaced. The committee thought it would be as required, leaving the contractor to make his claim if the terms of the specifications were not clearly in our favor.

Besides these changes ordered, the committee were called upon to settle the terms of the contract as to the ceilings. In the original specifications the cealings in the basement were to be brick arches; in the first, second and third stories to be hollow tile, plastered.

The bid accepted, made by Dawson & Anderson, substituted iron arches for all brick and hollow tile, except in the court room; provided brick or hollow tile might be substituted for the iron ones at the difference in price named in the schedule. The committee determined to substitute brick arches, plastered, for the iron mentioned in the bid and the hollow tile required in the original specifications, in the corridors in the first and second stories, at the additional expense of $2.50 per square over the cost of iron.



The cost of all changes and additions made and proposed is small, and made at the time the building is in progress, will add no more to the cost than if contained in the original specifications. The difference in cost would have probably appeared in the estimates of contractors on which the bids were founded.

It will be necessary to provide for laying off and grading the court house grounds and paving the necessary walks. The committee have availed themselves of an opportunity to purchase a small amount of earth, delivered on the grounds, and other opportunities to purchase on favorable terms may appear. They recommend that the committee be authorized to prepare or procure plans for laying off the grounds, to be reported to the board for consideration, and in the meantime they be authorized to purchase earth when they can do so to manifest advantage.

The committee have not heretofore called the attention of the board to the subject of furniture for the court house for the reason that the delay in the completion of the building justified a postponement of preparation for furnishing. It is, however, desirable that the county should not be delayed in the occupancy of the building when completed for want of furniture.

It is also desirable that time enough should be taken to settle carefully on plans, to secure competition, and to give ample time to the contractor to furnish perfect work.

We recommend that the committee be directed to advertise at once for bids for furniture, the bidders to furnish the designs. That the bids be required to be made subject to the examination of the committee and the acceptance by the board. That the committee be directed to examine and carefully compare the bids, and when any shall be received which the committee shall deem worthy of attention, they shall notify the chairman of the board who shall call the board together. That when this board adjourn it shall adjourn subject to the call of the chairman.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM McKINLEY

Delivering an address in front of the Main Building of Knox College on the anniversary of the Lincoln-Douglas debate, October 7, 1899. President McKinley's cabinet officers were present on the platform, and thousands of people thronged the College Campus.

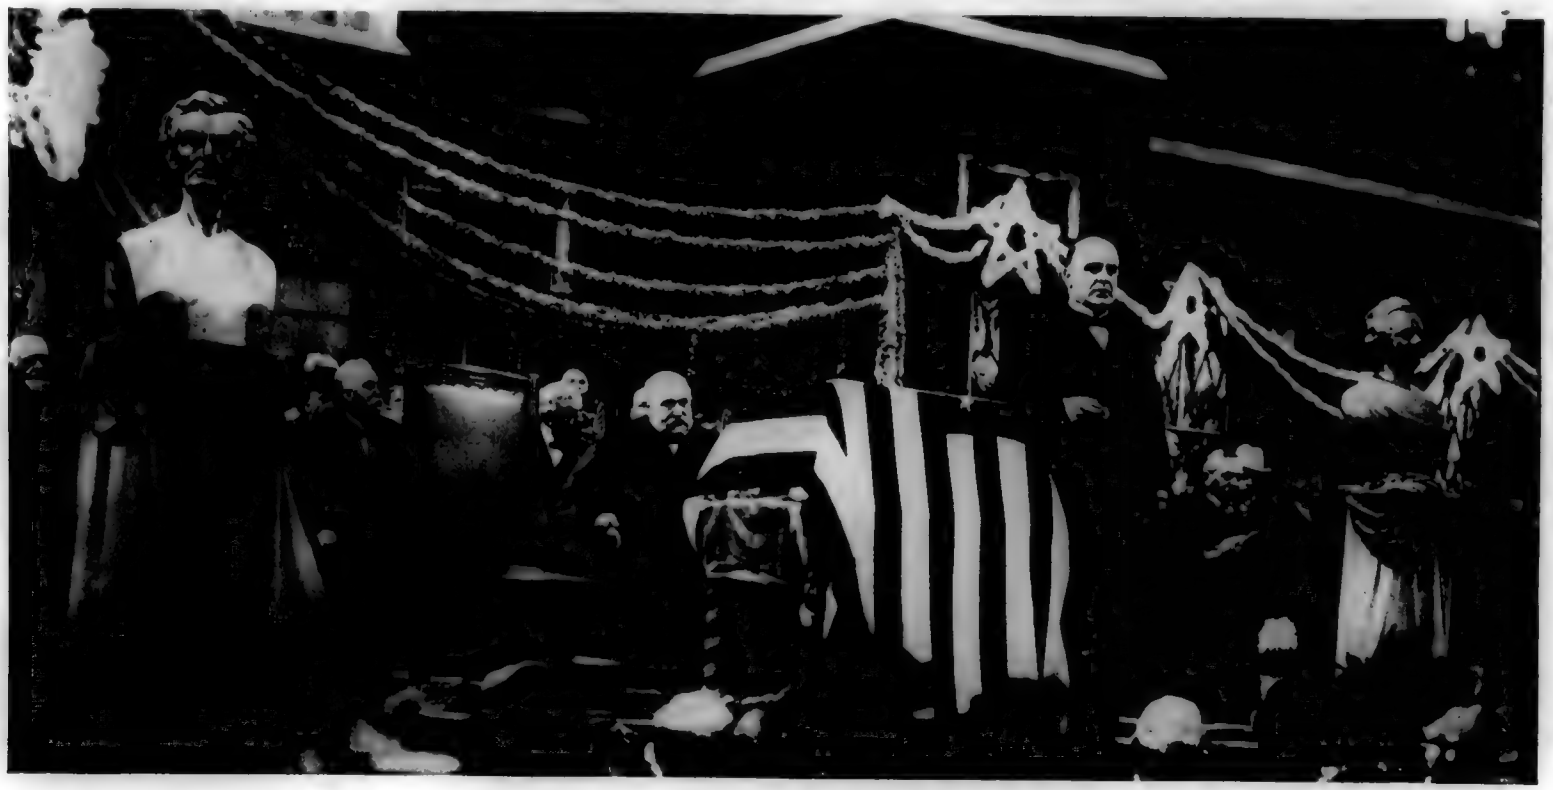
struction, iron was called for; that in changing to a stone construction the same specifications were used, substituting other language when necessary, that the section affecting this work seemed to be overlooked in making the changes.

The contractor evidently made the estimates on which his bid was founded, for iron work, the language misled him, if it did not justify him, and it does not seem unreasonable for him to claim compensation for the difference.

The committee required the diamond shaped stones in the gable to be rubbed stone; the contractor claimed they were to be rockfaced. The committee thought it would be as required, leaving the contractor to make his claim if the terms of the specifications were not clearly in our favor.

Besides these changes ordered, the committee were called upon to settle the terms of the contract as to the ceilings. In the original specifications the cealings in the basement were to be brick arches; in the first, second and third stories to be hollow tile, plastered.

The bid accepted, made by Dawson & Anderson, substituted iron arches for all brick and hollow tile, except in the court room; provided brick or hollow tile might be substituted for the iron ones at the difference in price named in the schedule. The committee determined to substitute brick arches, plastered, for the iron mentioned in the bid and the hollow tile required in the original specifications, in the corridors in the first and second stories, at the additional expense of $2.50 per square over the cost of iron.



The cost of all changes and additions made and proposed is small, and made at the time the building is in progress, will add no more to the cost than if contained in the original specifications. The difference in cost would have probably appeared in the estimates of contractors on which the bids were founded.

It will be necessary to provide for laying off and grading the court house grounds and paving the necessary walks. The committee have availed themselves of an opportunity to purchase a small amount of earth, delivered on the grounds, and other opportunities to purchase on favorable terms may appear. They recommend that the committee be authorized to prepare or procure plans for laying off the grounds, to be reported to the board for consideration, and in the meantime they be authorized to purchase earth when they can do so to manifest advantage.

The committee have not heretofore called the attention of the board to the subject of furniture for the court house for the reason that the delay in the completion of the building justified a postponement of preparation for furnishing. It is, however, desirable that the county should not be delayed in the occupancy of the building when completed for want of furniture.

It is also desirable that time enough should be taken to settle carefully on plans, to secure competition, and to give ample time to the contractor to furnish perfect work.

We recommend that the committee be directed to advertise at once for bids for furniture, the bidders to furnish the designs. That the bids be required to be made subject to the examination of the committee and the acceptance by the board. That the committee be directed to examine and carefully compare the bids, and when any shall be received which the committee shall deem worthy of attention, they shall notify the chairman of the board who shall call the board together. That when this board adjourn it shall adjourn subject to the call of the chairman.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM McKINLEY

Delivering an address in front of the Main Building of Knox College on the anniversary of the Lincoln-Douglas debate, October 7, 1899. President McKinley's cabinet officers were present on the platform, and thousands of people thronged the College Campus.

As a preliminary to calling for bids, we ask the board to assign the rooms to their various uses, and we recommend:

That the three court rooms be arranged and furnished so that they may each of them serve for either of the courts, for the meetings of the board of supervisors and for such other assemblies of officers and citizens on county business, as should be provided for.

That on the first floor, the room on the right of the east entrance be assigned to the school superintendent,

The room on the right of the north entrance, to the county judge.

The room on the left, to the treasurer.

The room on the right of the west entrance, to the recorder.

The two rooms opposite, to the county clerk.

The large room in the south wing, to the circuit clerk.

That there be assigned to the sheriff either the room to the left of the east entrance, or the adjoining room in the south wing, the other to remain for the present unassigned.

The room in the tower, to the treasurer and school superintendent, the treasurer to have prior right of occupancy when necessary to his business.

That each county officer have a case in the vault for the storage of valuable papers, or property requiring special security.

That in the second story, the room next south of the tower room, to the master in chancery.

The tower room and room west, to the county attorney.

The other two north rooms to be ladies' waiting rooms.

The south wing for judges' room, consultation room and library.

The rooms in the third story to be used as jury and witness rooms. The room next north of the smaller court room to be the grand jury room.

WM. ROBSON, JOHN SLOAN,
M. B. HARDEN, WM. H. LEIGHTON.

The building committee beg leave to report, that in reply to the resolution of the board calling for information as to cost of changes in the building, ordered by the committee, they have procured from the contractor the following estimates:

Expense of door in tower room	$ 71.25
Double door in clerk's office	30.00
Door in third story	30.00
Change in partition 2d story
Extra wash basin and urinal	40.00
Change in attic stairs	50.00
Substitution of oak for pine	300.00
800 feet concrete filling in vault, at 20c	160.00
Cost of changes ordered by committee	$681.25
Substituting for iron 3,450 feet brick arches, at $2.50	86.25
	$767.50

Amount claimed for stone cornice and minarets in place of iron, difference in cost:

4 stone minarets, $130 each	$520.00
40 feet tower cornice	40.00
88 feet gable cornice, at $1.60	140.80
4 carved finials	60.00
	$760.80

Amount claimed for extra work on diamond shaped stones:

246 feet, at 50c	$123.00
106 feet, at 70c	74.20
	$197.20

W. SELDEN GALE,
Chairman.

Special May Meeting, 1886.—The chairman stated that the meeting was called at the request of the building committee for the purpose of examining proposals and designs for furniture for the new court house, and considering the report of the building committee thereon.

The clerk then read the proposals of A. H. Andrews & Co., of Chicago. Also the proposal of Conant Bros., of Toledo, Ohio.

During the reading of the last named proposal, Mr. Chas. Glisson, of Knox, entered.

The clerk then read the proposals of the Phoenix Furniture Company, of Grand Rapids, Mich., and of Thos. Kane & Co., of Chicago.

Each of said proposals were accompanied with schedules of furniture and prices referring to the designs submitted, all of which were laid before the board.

The report of the building committee was then read as follows:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee in compliance with the resolution of the board, advertised for proposals for furniture, to be opened by the committee on the 4th inst. They felt justified in fixing an early time from the fact that several of the best houses in the country had visited the building in anticipation of such a call, and were known to have prepared plans; and it was thought no further delay need be made to secure fair competition. Special notices were sent to all who had by personal application or correspondence indicated an intention of giving attention to the job.

The committee received a communication from the Mitchell Furniture Co., of Cincinnati, asking a postponement of the letting, on account of the labor troubles and the consequent temporary closing of their works. Proposals were received from Thos. Kane & Co., of Chicago; the Phoenix Furniture Co., of Grand Rapids, Mich.; A. H. Andrews & Co., of Chicago, and Conant Bros., of Toledo, Ohio, all of which proposals, with the accompanying samples and exhibits are submitted to the board.

The bids, except the first named, were presented in person by a proprietor or agent of the firm interested.

It was agreed that the bids should not be disclosed until presented to the board, but that each party should have the fullest opportunity to explain his proposal to the committee, sitting with closed doors. There were present with the committee, for advice and assistance, the architect of the building, the county clerk and the circuit clerk.

The bid of Thomas Kane & Co. was accompanied by very few designs and no samples. No gross amount is mentioned, but items are given and prices attached with reference to the designs furnished and printed catalogue of goods and prices published by the firm. The other bids are accompanied by schedules, substantially alike in items, admitting of ready comparison.

The bid of the Phoenix Co. is exclusive of all seats, $7,765.40.

The bid of Andrews & Co. is in two forms. With one set of designs it is $11,123.80; with plainer designs and cheaper work, $9,193.65.

The bid of Conant Bros. gives no gross amount, but affixes to each item in the schedule from two to eight prices, according to design, workmanship and material. Reviewing these schedules for comparison, and taking the items recommended by the committee, as herinafter stated, we find them, as nearly as we have been able to calculate, to compare as follows:

Phoenix Co., about $7,200.

Andrews & Co., highest bid, $7,610.

Andrews & Co., lowest bid, $6,655.

Conant Bros., from less than $6,000 to over $8,000.

It is at once evident that, taking medium prices in the bids of Andrews & Co. and of Conant Bros. there is but very little difference in the bids of the three houses. The bids of Conant Bros. are both the highest and the lowest.

The bid of the Phoenix Co. is higher than one bid of Andrews & Co. and lower than the other, and it is only by careful examination of the descriptions and designs that it can be determined from which the most satisfactory selection can be made, and it is perhaps proper here to say that it has been generally remarked by persons examining the building, with reference to bidding on the furniture, that the building being architecturally different from all other court houses (the Cincinnati court house is said to be of similar style), it could only be well and tastefully furnished from designs specially prepared to conform to its peculiar style.

The committee think Conant Bros. have had a better appreciation of the building or have been willing to take more pains than others. They believe the board will find their designs finer and more in keeping with the building than any others presented, and the committee believe that at same cost the best selection may be made from their bid.

The committee recommend that the board authorize the committee to contract with Conant Bros. for the articles of furniture in the list herewith presented, to be selected by the committee in walnut, cherry and oak, in such proportions as they may think best at a cost not exceeding $7,250.

In the matter of chairs, the committee are not satisfied that the best or most economical selection can be made from these proposals. That unlike the other furniture they will not be made expressly for the building, but that they can at any time be bought in the market, and that plenty of time may safely be taken to make selection and purchase.

The committee have received bids for file cases from Schlect & Field and from Conant Bros. These are to contain the papers put into each pigeon hole. Both their patterns are decided improvements on those in common use obtained from stationers. But in judgment of the committee, the advantage to this county from their use are by no means commensurate with the increased expense.

L. A. TOWNSEND, WM. ROBSON,
W. SELDEN GALE, W. H. LEIGHTON,
JOHN SLOAN, RUFUS W. MILES.

The foregoing report was placed before the board to be considered and examined in connection with the proposals and designs above submitted.

On motion the board took a recess until one-thirty P. M.

One-thirty P. M.—Board called to order by chairman.

Present, same as this morning.

The board having examined and considered the several proposals and designs for furniture submitted and the report of the building committee, it was moved by Mr. Paden that the board accept said report and concur in its recommendations, and that said committee be authorized to purchase such chairs and seats as may be needed in the new court house at a cost not to exceed $2,500, which motion was adopted.

Thereupon, they entered into contract with Conant Brothers Furniture Company, on the 17th day of May, 1886.

July Meeting, 1886.—Mr. Gale read the following report of the building committee:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

GENTLEMEN:—The building committee beg leave to call the attention of the board to the necessity of providing mantels and grates for the building; nineteen are required. The committee have had proposals sent them from several parties. They are of opinion that slate mantels may be obtained with grates, and all complete and in place suitable for the situation, for from $700 to $800. The committee wish to be advised if any action in the case on their part is desired.

W. SELDEN GALE, Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Paden, the committee were authorized to contract for grates and mantels on the best terms obtainable.

January Meeting, 1887.—Mr. Gale made a verbal report in behalf of the building committee stating that it had been hoped that all contracts for matters connected with the building could be closed up at the present meeting. This cannot be done and the committee would recommend that when the board adjourns, it adjourn for about two weeks. It is desirable that Mr. Myers be present, and he has informed the committee that he can be here at about that time. The committee were requested at the last meeting of the board to prepare a detailed statement of orders drawn for all work connected with the court house. In consequence of the unfinished condition of the work the committee are unable to comply, but a verbal statement may be made which will give the board the information necessary to enable the members to act understandingly upon any question which may arise until such time as a full written statement can be made.

Mr. Gale then stated, to the board, the condition of the various contracts and the amounts paid upon each, respectively, which he requested the supervisors to take down each for himself.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

RESOLVED: That there be a reception held at the court house, by the board of supervisors, on the 26th inst., from 10 o'clock A. M. until ten o'clock P. M., and that citizens of the county and their friends be respectfully invited to attend.

January Adjourned Meeting, 1887.—On motion of Mr. Gale, the board took a recess subject to the call of the chairman.

During recess, dedicatory exercises were held in the circuit court room, which were attended by a large concourse of people. Brief addresses were made by the architect, Col. E. E. Myers, the contractor; John Anderson; Hon. R. G. Mathews, chairman of the board; Hon. Clark E. Carr; Judge J. J. Glenn; Judge Sanford, and Messrs. E. P. Williams, W. Selden Gale, and R. W. Miles.

During the exercises, the following resolution was offered by Mr. F. Christianer, of Abingdon, which was unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That we, the people of Knox county, in mass meeting assembled, do offer our thanks to the board of supervisors of the county of Knox for their successful efforts in the erection of this court house, and for their thorough honesty and integrity in the building of the same, and we ask that these resolutions be spread upon the records of said board.

Mr. Gale stated that the building committee were ready to report on a portion of the matters before them if the board desired. On motion of Mr. May the building committee were requested to report.

Mr. Gale then reported a bill in favor of Col. E. E. Myers, of $1,000, balance of architect's fees, and asked that it be referred with other matters pending.

The motion of Mr. Gale was adopted.

Mr. Gale then read the following additional report of the building committee:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The building committee have rendered a partial settlement with Messrs. Dawson & Anderson, court house contractors.

The contract was originally taken at the sum of	$114,311.52
To this was added by direction of the board, at the April meeting, 1886	1,725.50
Under the authority of the board to make some improvements in the basement the committee have directed plastering and wainscoting and places for washbowls and sinks, and have allowed Dawson & Anderson	53.70
The committee thought best to make some changes in the supports for the gallery, involving the casing of supporting beams, for which they allowed D. & A.	88.00
The committee also allowed for work apparently not belonging to the contract, but necessary to be done in fitting woodwork around furniture	8.05
Around mantels	17.15
For putting up strips for hooks on the walls and bulletin boards, and assisting in repairing and removing furniture from old building	83.03
For alteration in stone coping to steps	42.00
Making a total of	$116,328.94

In the matter of stained glass in the ceiling to main court room, the contractors proposed to put in plain cathedral glass.

The committee did not consider this arrangement suitable, and it appearing on examination of the contract that it was stipulated that the glass should be of such pattern as the architect should require, the committee applied to Col. Myers to furnish patterns.

Under his direction patterns were sent, costing $960. The committee found that the contractors had, in making the estimate on which their bid was based, allowed themselves only $200. The committee were, considering that the real cost of the building to the contractors was already far beyond the amount estimated by them for the work at the bidding, very reluctant to require so large additional cost. At the same time they believed the fulfillment of the contract according to the views of the contractors would not be satisfactory to the public.

The conclusion of the committee was to contract with Geo. A. Misch for putting in the light in less expensive patterns than those proposed for $506.

This amount, paid by county, might be deducted from the contract of Dawson & Anderson. The committee are, however, prepared to recommend that only so much be charged the contractors as the cost by them estimated at the bidding, say $200.

At the meeting of April, 1886, the committee reported that Dawson & Anderson had proposed to substitute oak finish for pine throughout the building for $500, or in the halls and one court room for $300; that the committee had accepted the last proposition. This action of the committee was approved by the board and $300 added on that account to the contract. Dawson & Anderson have substituted oak throughout the building, though without promise of extra pay beyond the $300 already allowed.

They ask the board to allow $200 additional. That the change is worth that amount to the building the committee believe, and recommend it be allowed.

Should the board concur in the recommendation as to glass and oak finish, it will leave the amount due on the contract of Dawson & Anderson unchanged, at $116,328.94—the county paying Misch $506.

This amount is subject to offset for want of completion within the contract time, it being stipulated that the building should be completed by Sept. 1st, 1886, and a penalty of $20 per day for any delay.

The county began to have a very limited use of a small part of the building about Nov. 15th. It was not till the last of December the clerks were able to move into their not quite finished offices, and not till now that the county has full use of the building.

Dawson & Anderson claim allowance for items of work required by the committee, which the committee claimed the right to require under the contract, which the contractors insisted were not required by a fair construction of the terms of the contract, and which were performed by them under protest.

For 15,000 brick required to be put in tower in excess of what appeared to be shown in paper	$255.00
For extra cost of hardware in door trimmings, committee requiring better quality than contractors expected to furnish	424.50
For changes in window casings	292.00
	$971.50

As to these items, the committee required them because they thought they ought to be done, even if at the cost of the county, and that the contract gave them the right to require it.

They are not, however, quite sure that the right to require the work is altogether free from doubt, and are satisfied the cost was not included in the contractor's estimate when he made the bid.

While the committee have not felt authorized to admit the claims, they think it entirely proper that the board should consider the propriety of giving the contractors the benefit of the doubt.

Dawson & Anderson have further stated to the committee, and the committee have examined the schedule, on which the bid was made, and found the statement correct, that in making the schedule important items were omitted, and while the contract required the performance of the work and to have been done without other compensation than the profits, if any, on the enumerated items.

First, a clerical error appeared by which their bid was unintentionally reduced $2,000.

The items of plastering were estimated at $4,200 and so appear in the schedule, but the amount is carried into the general summary at $2,200.

The following items were overlooked and omitted entirely from the schedule:

2,825 fee concreting under inside walls	$ 570.00
6,800 fee basement floor	682.50
3 extra granite steps	90.75
154 feet gallery front at $5	770.00
4 clock dials in tower	120.00
1 vault door of iron	110.00
Difference between lime and cement used in concreting floors	489.00
	$2,831.25

In the estimate of the stone work very large under-estimate of items were made, and some errors of calculation.

It is difficult and not perhaps profitable, to go over the whole calculation.

The work is so complicated that none but an expert, with plenty of time at his disposal could correctly estimate it.

It is undoubtedly placed in the schedules at several thousand dollars less than it was done for, or could be done for.

The committee has not felt authorized to do more than allow the contractors for each item as the county was clearly under obligation to pay by the strict terms of the contract.

How far it is proper for the board to go on giving liberal interpretation to the terms of the contract, or in allowing extra compensation for work done, required to be done by the contract, yet omitted from the contractor's estimate, each supervisor should judge for himself. The committee desire only to present the facts without recommendations, leaving each member of the committee as well as every other supervisor to act independently.

Some facts in the case are as follows: While the work is not entirely free from criticism, it is on the whole well done, much of it better than might have been expected.

The contractors have been held to strict compliance, without the favors and indulgences commonly, if not usually, given on public buildings by architects and superintendents. While it cannot be said nothing has been lost by neglect or bad management, on the whole, fewer mistakes than are usual on such buildings have been made, and great care has been taken in procuring the best terms in subcontracts and purchase of supplies, and on the whole, such business has been successfully done.

If held to the strict construction of the contract the contractors are heavy losers on the job, even with all the allowance they suggest to the board, they will not be indemnified.

The contract was made by both the county and contractors, in good faith, with the expectation that it could be performed for the money stipulated.

The errors in the schedule were not discovered till the work was well under way. Much allowance must be made for the seeming carelessness of the contractors in this. The plan of the building is different from that of any similar building. It is very complicated, and although the plans and specifications are unusually complete, a careful and complete estimate of all its parts requires an amount of care, skill and time very difficult for the contractors to give in the time limited.

The next lowest bid, at the letting, to that of Dawson & Anderson, was $4,500 higher, and was made by a contractor of experience in building court houses, and based on simple comparison of size of building with that of others erected by him.

It may be properly said that in offering to erect the building at the amount named in the proposals (a lower figure than would represent the cost), the board was misled, that while the board was willing to contract at that price for this building, the plan might have been modified or abandoned if it had been shown to cost any larger sum.

On the other hand, perhaps, the building is worth all it cost, with such additions as the board may make to the contractors' compensation, and no one would wish to lose the building for the price.

Nobody offered to perform the contract for less than $4,500 more than these contractors, and if to that party the contract had been let, the same questions might have arisen with him.

If the proposition to build the house at less than what the county is ultimately called upon to pay, induced the acceptance of the contract, and if no bid being received for less than is now proposed to pay, the board would have refused to go on with the plan. It may be fortunate that the board was deceived and led into what has proved for the advantage of the county.

On motion of Mr. May, the clerk was directed to get the foregoing report printed for the use of the board.

Mr. Gale then read the following further report of the building committee:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The building committee recommend that the committee be instructed to retain the control of the building to such extent as they shall find necessary until the next meeting of the board. That they be instructed to see that the erection and finishing of the building be completed according to existing contracts and in compliance with the instructions of the board, and to settle contracts made by them in accordance with the instructions of the board and to order the issuing of county orders when necessary to fulfill such contracts.

They recommend the assignment of rooms as follows:

Rooms 1, 2 and 3 to the county judge and county clerk.

Rooms 4 and 5 to the circuit clerk.

Room 6 to the sheriff for an office.

Room 8 to the school superintendent.

Room 10 to the county treasurer.

Room 9 to the treasurer and school superintendent, the treasurer to have precedence, so far as the duties of his office make it necessary.

Rooms 12 and 13 to the state's attorney, conditional that he occupy the same in person, keeping his office open during the business hours the year around.

Room 11 to the master in chancery on like conditions.

Room 17 to the circuit judge as private room.

Room 18 as a library and waiting room for the use of the bar.

Room 19 to be attached to 18 for like purposes.

That 14 be set apart for the exclusive use of ladies. 15 for a waiting room for ladies and their attendants. 21 for the grand jury. 22 and 23 to be in control of grand jury when required.

That the court rooms 16, 20 and 30 be at the disposal of the circuit and county courts, the circuit court to have precedence in 16 and the county court to have precedence in 20 unless the circuit court be first in possession.

That the board of supervisors meet and organize at each regular or special meeting, when no other provision has been made, in room 20; or if room 20 be occupied by one of the courts, then in room 30; or if both be so occupied, then in room 16.

That the rooms assigned to the county officers be in the control of the officers to whom they are severally assigned; that the other rooms be in the care of the sheriff to be made ready and opened, when required for their proper uses; that the rooms not otherwise occupied be used as may be needed for witness, jury, committee or consultation rooms, and by the county officers when needed for work not conveniently done in their respective offices.

That the sheriff be directed to open the rooms in the court house, when not in use for county purposes, for such public or political meetings as according to the custom and practice of the county, may properly be held therein, such privileges to be exercised under such conditions and limitations or extensions as the board may from time to time provide, or as may, between the sessions of the board, be ordered by the chairman of the board or the building committee.

They recommend that the desk formerly in use by the deputy county clerk be given to the coroner and placed in the building as the coroner may, with the approval of the building committee, designate.

W. SELDEN GALE, Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Simpson, the foregoing report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

Moved by Mr. Luther Clark that Col. Myers be requested to state to the board, if, in the items of extras claimed by the contractor on account of better material having been furnished than is required by the contract, the material so furnished is better than required.

Friday Morning, Jan. 28th, 1887.—The board then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the building committee in relation to a final settlement with Messrs. Dawson & Anderson.

Pending the remarks of Mr. Anderson on said report.

On motion the board adjourned to one-thirty this afternoon.

One-thirty P. M.—Board called to order by the chairman.

Present same as this forenoon.

The board then resumed the consideration of the report of the building committee, and Mr. Anderson proceeded in his remarks.

At the close of Mr. Anderson's remarks, Mr. Gale offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Resolved, That the building committee be authorized to settle with Dawson & Anderson for the work done by them, and yet to be done by the terms of the contract, to make such allowance for extras and errors as they think just, and to determine the amount to be charged them for delay in completion of the building, but the entire amount allowed for work heretofore done on the building or to be done on the contract as contracted by the committee shall not exceed the amount of $121,328.90 in excess of the amount charged for damages by reason of delay.

Mr. May moved as a substitute that the matter of final settlement with Dawson & Anderson be postponed until the April meeting of the board.

Mr. Rebstock offered the following resolutions as an amendment to the motion of Mr. May:

RESOLVED: 1st, That the building committee is instructed to settle with Dawson & Anderson on the terms of the contract.

2nd, And if the committee find on examination of Mr. Anderson's claims for extra work done on the court house (any portion of said claims are valid), that they settle with him as far as the county is liable for extra work done.

(The words in brackets above are added by the clerk to express the full meaning of the resolution.)

Moved by Mr. Gibbs that the items of extras claimed by Dawson & Anderson be passed upon severally.

And thereupon the chairman ruled the action to be upon the motion of Mr. May.

The votes by ayes and nays was as follows:

Ayes—Hunter, Mosser, Paden, Boydstun, McKee, Sisson, May, Townsend, Luther Clark, Simpson, Hurd, Parker and Chas S. Clark—13.

Nays—Gale, Cooke, Olson, Glisson, Robson, Rebstock, Miles, Leighton, Andrews, Sloan and Gibbs—11.

Motion was carried.

On motion of Mr. Gale the recommendation of the committee in relation to the oak finish and the ornamental stained glass furnished by Geo. C. Misch was adopted.

Mr. Gale stated that the building committee had expected to present a detailed statement of expenditures on all matters connected with the court house, but owing to the unsettled condition of accounts, had been unable to do so. He moved that the committee be directed to prepare such a statement as soon as possible and cause the same to be published. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Paden that we reconsider the motion of Mr. May to postpone action on the report of the building committee in the matter of final settlement with Dawson & Anderson until the April meeting.

Ayes and nays were called as follows:

Ayes—Paden, Gale, Boydstun, Cooke, Olson, McKee, Sisson, Townsend, Simpson, Robson, Hurd, Rebstock, Miles, Leighton, Andrews, Sloan and Gibbs —17.

Nays—Hunter, Mosser, May, Luther Clark, Glisson, Parker and Chas S. Clark—7.

The motion prevailed and the report reconsidered.

On motion of Mr. Paden, it was ordered that the board pass on the disputed items severally, and that the building committee be authorized to settle with Dawson & Anderson, paying such claims as may be allowed by the board.

The clerk then read the first disputed claim for 15,000 brick placed in the tower of the building, $255.00.

Moved by Mr. Gale that the claim be allowed. Carried.

The next item was read, claim of $424.50, for extra cost of hardware in door trimmings.

Moved by Mr. Cooke that the claim be allowed.

Ayes and nays were called as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Paden, Gale, Boydstun, Cooke, Olson, Townsend, Glisson, Robson, Hurd, Miles, Leighton, Andrews, Sloan—13.

Nays—Messrs. Hunter, Mosser, McKee, Sisson, May, Luther Clark, Simpson, Rebstock, Parker, Chas. S. Clark and Gibbs—11.

The motion prevailed and the claim was allowed.

The next claim, $292, for change in window cases, was read.

Mr. Miles moved to allow $192 on the claim.

Ayes and nays were called as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Paden, Gale, Boydstun, Cooke, Olson, Townsend, Glisson, Robson, Hurd, Miles, Leighton, Andrews and Sloan—13.

Nays—Messrs. Hunter, Mosser, McKee, Sisson, May, Luther Clark, Simpson, Rebstock, Parker, Chas. S. Clark and Gibbs—11.

The motion prevailed.

The next item, $2,000 clerical error in addition, was read.

Mr. Olson moved to allow the item.

Ayes and nays were called as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Gale, Cooke, Olson, Robson, Leighton and Sloan—6.

January Meeting, 1887.—The following are the duties assigned to the janitor by the committee and adopted by the board:

It shall be the duty of the janitor:

To receive and store the fuel.

Take charge of the heating apparatus and grates, and to keep each room in the house suitably warm, and heat turned off when not needed.

To attend to the water supply and take care of all closets and wash-bowls.

To keep all offices, corridors, court rooms and jury rooms well cleaned and in good order, and to keep in order the basement and attic.

To light the corridors and public rooms when needed, and turn off the lights at proper time, the work to be done at proper hours so as not to interfere with the use of the rooms; to remain in the building all night to guard the same, or to employ for the purpose a suitable person capable of taking charge of the heating apparatus.

To keep the walks and lawns, when constructed, in proper condition, to employ at his own expense so much help as may be needed to properly perform the whole work.

It shall be a condition of the agreement that he shall not leave the employment on his own motion, except on thirty days' notice to the board in session, but shall be liable to removal by the board at anytime.

And your committee would recommend that the compensation be $1,200 per year.

On motion of Mr. Gale, the building committee was authorized to allow on the disputed claims of Dawson & Anderson a sum not exceeding the amount of damages which may be claimed by the county, of Dawson & Anderson, by reason of delay in the completion of the building.

July Meeting, 1887.—Mr. Gale read the report of the building committee on walks, which was also laid over for future consideration.

Mr. Gale presented a list of all orders drawn on the treasurer on account of construction of court house and all matters pertaining to the same, including heating, architect's fees, advertising, cistern, furniture, superintendent's salary, expenses of building committee, grading, gas fixtures, mantels and sundries, which was laid over for the inspection of the board and future action.

The report of the building committee in relation to walks being called up, was read by the clerk as follows:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee have made inquiry as to cost of various materials for pavement of walks on court house grounds.

They find the cost of hard burned brick, such as is used in the city, will not exceed 10 cents per square foot. That the cost of Berea stone flagging laid, will not exceed 27 cents.

That the competing propositions, something may be saved on the brick and possibly on the stone.

That the cost of asphalt concrete is not far from that of brick, and that concrete of Portland cement is about the same as stone.

The area of walks, exclusive of sidewalk on outside of the grounds, will be 12,000 to 16,000 feet, according to the plans to be adopted and width of walks.

The committee consider the concrete walks out of the question.

That the preference should be given to stone, except for the excess of cost.

That on grounds of economy, the committee recommend the use of brick for material.

They recommend the plan of walks heretofore proposed and now presented, be adopted, subject to such modification as the committee may find expedient, not materially increasing expense.

That the committee be authorized to contract for the materials and work on the best terms practicable, by advertisement or otherwise.

That the committee be authorized to build one-half the walks through the center of the park and to agree with the city for the construction of sidewalks and street curbing, the county paying the proportion of such expense paid by other proprietors of frontage in like cases.

W. Selden Gale, Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Mathews, the report was accepted, and its recommendations concurred in, and the committee was instructed to contract and complete the walks in accordance with the plans submitted, said walks to be made of good hard burned brick, and to be completed as soon as possible.

A list of all orders to date on the county treasurer on account of labor and material used in the construction of the new court house was presented, aggregating $146,453.51.

Court house	$113,631.16
Miscellaneous items	503.40
Steam heating	7,072.67
Architect	4,120.25

Sundries	327.55
Gas fixtures	908.06
Sundry expenses and furnishings	722.33
Total	$146,453.51

September Meeting, 1887.—The clerk read the report of the building committee showing claims amounting to $684.53.

On motion of Mr. Gale the report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

Mr. Sisson stated that Prof. Richards, of the city council of the city of Galesburg, was present and desired to present a matter to the board in regard to the walks to be built in the city park and bordering on the court house grounds.

By consent Prof. Richards addressed the board, stating that it had at one time been contemplated that a walk 12 feet wide would be built on the center line of Broad street continued through the park; that it was not probable that a street would be opened through the park and be paved between the elm trees, making a driveway of about 16 or 18 feet wide and a walk laid on each side of this driveway outside of the elms. He asked that the county board waive the formality of a special assessment proceeding in court and arrange with the city to bear the expense of this improvement equally.

And thereupon, on motion of Mr. Gale, the following resolution was adopted:

That the building committee be authorized to confer with the representative of the city and agree on such division of the management and care of the park and court house grounds as may seem to be most advantageous, and on a equitable division of the cost thereof.

(In offering the above resolution, Mr. Gale stated that the title to the ground to be occupied by the proposed street or driveway, was somewhat doubtful, it not being certain just where it rested, and before definite action on the proposition of Prof. Richards, the matter should be investigated.—Clerk.)

January Meeting, 1888.—Your committee to whom was referred sundry bills for labor and material in construction at court house and grounds would beg leave to submit the following report on the matters before them. They have examined the bills, and finding them correct, they recommend that orders issue for their payment, aggregating $1,104.26.

On motion of Mr. Gale the report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

Mr. Gale read a further report of the same committee on other matters referred to them for consideration and action during vacation.

To the Hon. Chairman and Gentlemen:

The building committee beg leave to report as to their proceedings in vacation.

They have caused to be built of brick the walks on the grounds heretofore contemplated by the action of the board, except the walk in the center of the park; they have furnished brick for sidewalks on the three sides of the county grounds which have been laid by authority of the city. In this the rule usually adopted in the construction of brick pavements in the city is followed, the practice in such case being for the city to build the sidewalks and the proprietors furnishing either in part or wholly the brick. Upon constructing the pavements, it was found that additional filling was necessary for proper grades. This was increased by some changes made by the city in the grade of the city's portion of the park. They have made such additional filling and grading as seemed necessary.

As directed by the board, the committee have sought to make some agreement with the city government for such division and management of the park and court house grounds as might seem advantageous, and for an equitable division of the cost.

The park and court house grounds consist of what appears on the original plat of the town in blocks 38 and 39 and a strip of land 6 rods in width appearing as a street and separating the blocks.

This street seems to never have been worked as a street, but the two blocks and intervening space have been for more than thirty years inclosed together for a park, most of the ground previous to that time being always open and in a state of nature. At the time of the vote on the removal of the county seat, the city as authorized by law, pledged to the county in case of removal, the east half of the park grounds as a court house site, the title and occupancy then being in Knox college. The city procured from the college a deed to the county of block 39, conditioned on its occupancy by a court house, and afterwards secured from the college a deed of blocks 38 and 39, subject to the county's claim, to be used exclusively as a park.

The location of the court house has been made with regard to the situation as supposed to be secured by these proceedings.

As seemed to the committee equitable, the proposition was made to the city council that the county and city should each care for one-half of the grounds, the county building, all necessary walks to accommodate persons approaching the court house or crossing the grounds in any direction on the east half and joining the city equally in the cost of such walk as might be convenient on the dividing line. No direct answer has been received to the proposition.

The committee learned through the newspapers that the city council had ordered the opening of Broad street through the park, and the paving of the street and sidewalks on each side of the street, the entire cost to be assessed against the property abutting on the street.

The committee were advised that the right of the council to open Broad street through the park was at most doubtful. It seemed to the committee that so far as the interests and convenience of the county at large was concerned, it was very undesirable. They failed to see the justice and propriety of compelling the taxpayers of the county outside the city limits to contribute to the expense of such construction, of no use whatever for the purpose of approach to the county buildings. The injustice seemed greater in the fact that the universal rule in the city in like improvements has been to charge only one-half the cost of improvements against the abutting property. They found the cost assessed against the county would amount to about one thousand dollars. Under these circumstances the committee thought it their duty to ask for an injunction, which would at least delay the matter until the meeting of the board. An injunction was asked for and obtained. The committee desire to refer the question to the board to consider what further action should be taken. The committee made request of the council to curb Cherry street on the east side of the grounds according to the plans adopted two years ago, and for which the county paid an assessment. They also asked that Tompkins and South streets be curbed, the county paying the proportion of expense usually paid by holders of frontage for like improvements. So far as is known to the committee, no action has been taken by the city.

In carrying out the instructions of the board, there has been expended on the grounds by the committee:

Allowed and paid by the board at the September meeting to Neeley C. Woods for brick	$ 304.02
Sundry bills for sand, cinders, earth and labor	386.51
Orders have been issued by the clerk since last meeting by direction of the committee for items of earth delivered, for grading and work on court house grounds, as shown by clerk's report of orders issued, to the amount of	511.85
There have been also presented at this meeting bills the the payment of which the committee has recommended	1,113.46
	$2,315.84

W. SELDEN GALE,
R. W. MILES,
L. A. TOWNSEND,
J. W. ANDREWS,
JAMES PADEN.

On motion of Mr. McKee the foregoing report was accepted and the action of the committee in relation to the matters therein contained approved.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution which was adopted.

That the building committee be instructed to purchase suitable beds and beddings to lodge a jury in the court house.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution in regard to the enlargement of the jury box, which was adopted.

That the building committee be directed to secure a proper enlargement of the jury box in the circuit court room.

April Meeting, 1888.—Mr. Gale moved that the standing committees of the board be the same in number, name and duties as last year.

Mr. May moved to amend by adding, except the building committee, and that that committee be dispensed with.

The ayes and nays being called for were taken with the following result:

Ayes—Messrs. Hunter, George, Boydstun, Rearick, Cooke, Sisson, May, Clark, Simpson, Sipherd, Stephenson, Allen, Rebstock, Becker, Mason, Baird, Shaffer, McCrea and Barlow—19.

Nays—Messrs. Latimer, Gale, McKee, Townsend, Robson, Andrews—6. Carried.

And thereupon Mr. Gale's motion as amended was adopted.

Mr. May moved a vote of thanks to the members of the board heretofore composing the building committee for their efficient and faithful services connected with the construction of the court house. Carried.

Mr. Simpson moved that a committee of five be appointed on court house and grounds. Carried.

Mr. May moved that the committee be appointed by ballot. Carried.

Mr. Stephenson moved that the five supervisors receiving the highest number of votes be declared elected. Carried.

The chairman appointed Mr. Richey and Mr. Stuckey tellers.

There were twenty-four full votes cast for the committee and one blank.

Of which Mr. Gale received 20, Mr. Townsend 14, Mr. Robson 12, Mr. Sisson 9, Mr. Miles 8, Mr. Rebstock 8, Mr. May 7 and the others scattering.

Messrs. Gale, Townsend, Robson and Sisson, being the four receiving the highest number of votes, were declared elected. Messrs. Miles and Rebstock each receiving eight votes, Mr. Rebstock withdrew his name, and on his motion Mr. Miles was declared elected.

April 18, 1888.—Letter of Dawson & Anderson and agreement between Dawson & Anderson, Pittsburg Bridge Co., and Eagle Iron Works in regard to final settlement of iron contracts for court house were read and referred to the same committee; also copy of letter of county clerk to Dawson & Anderson, showing statement of account in the matter of construction of court house.

April 19, 1888.—Statement of Dawson & Anderson asking for an allowance of $4,741.50, on account of errors in estimates and of items furnished but claimed not to be required by the contract for the construction of the court house was read.

One P. M.—The hour for the special order of the afternoon having arrived, Mr. E. A. Bancroft appeared and addressed the board in behalf of Dawson & Anderson.

Mr. Bancroft having concluded his remarks, Mr. Latimer moved that the matter be referred to the committee on court house and grounds to report at next meeting of the board.

The ayes and nays being called for resulted as follows:

Ayes—Hunter, Latimer, George, Gale, Boydstun, McKee, Rearick, Cooke, Sisson, Townsend, Clark, Simpson, Sipherd, Robson, Stephenson, Rebstock, Becker, Andrews, Mason, Shaffer, Barlow, McCrea.

Nay—Allen.

The motion prevailed.

Mr. Gale read the following report of the same committee in relation to matters pending with Messrs. Dawson and Anderson.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS, APRIL TERM, APRIL 18, A. D. 1888.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee on court house and grounds in the matter of claims connected with the contract with Messrs. Dawson & Anderson, beg leave to report:

It appears that the amount found due Dawson & Anderson in February, 1887, as appears by the record of the proceedings of the board, and by the account kept by the county clerk, was.....$117,797.19

Less payments which to this date amount to..... 113,631.16

Leaving a balance.....$ 4,166.03 which amount has been held back to indemnify the county against any possible claim against the county by parties sub-contractors for the iron work on the court house.

The papers referred to this committee show a settlement between these parties and Messrs. Dawson & Anderson.

The committee recommend that these papers be filed and made matters of record and that orders issue in conformity to such settlement as follows:

To Eagle Iron Works, Detroit.....$3,750.00
The Frost Manufacturing Co..... 136.83
Williams, Lawrence & Bancroft..... 100.00
Dawson & Anderson..... 179.20

The committee further recommend that inasmuch as Messrs. Dawson & Anderson were entitled to receive the amount of $4,166.03 one year and more ago, and the amount has been withheld for the protection of the county, and it seems but just that interest be allowed for this detention; that a further order issue to Dawson & Anderson on account of interest to the amount of $250 or six per cent. on the amount due them last year.

In the matter of petition of citizens who have sat on jury for enlargement of jury box, we recommend that the request be complied with.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. SELDEN GALE, Chairman.
DETROIT, MICH., MARCH 27th 1888.

W. Selden Gale, Esq., Chairman Building Committee and the Commissioners of Knox County, Galesburg, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN:—We attach hereto authority to Dickenson and Thurber, of Detroit, Michigan, to settle for all claims in connection with the building of the court house on behalf of the Pittsburg Bridge Company; also enclose a letter directed to you signed by the Eagle Iron Works and Dickenson and Thurber, attorneys for the Pittsburg Bridge Company, empowering our firm to make settlement with you and your county for all claims for building your court house at Galesburg; also enclose a letter from Messrs. Dawson and Anderson directed to you embodying an order that you pay to us the sum of $3,750.00, and charge the same to their account.

Acting under the authorities shown by these letters we do hereby for and on behalf of the Eagle Iron Works, and on behalf of the Pittsburg Bridge Company, fully and completely discharge you as chairman of the building committee, and the building committee of the county commissioners of Knox county, and the commissioners of Knox county and the county of Knox from all claims and demands whatsoever growing out of, or in any way connected with the building or building contracts for the building of the Galesburg court house.

We trust this will enable you to call your committee together and act upon it. This discharge, however, to take effect only upon the acceptance and payment to us of the sum of $2,750, in accordance with the enclosed order of Dawson and Anderson, otherwise these papers to be returned to us.

If you need anything further from us kindly inform us, or let your attorneys draw such papers as will answer the purpose.

Very truly yours,

MOORE & MOORE.

PITTSBURG, March 17th, 1888.

Commissioners of Knox Co., Galesburg, Ill.

GENTLEMEN:—We hereby appoint our attorneys, Messrs. Dickenson and Thurber, of Detroit, Mich., to receipt for us, and in our name, in full for all amounts due us on our claims against the Eagle Iron Works, Dawson & Anderson, and yourselves.

Yours truly,

THE PITTSBURG BRIDGE CO.,

(SEAL) J. H. SAWYER, Sec'y.

DETROIT, MICH., March 27, 1888.

W. Selden Gale, Esq., Chairman of Building Committee of Knox Co., Ill.

DEAR SIR:—Terms of settlement having been agreed upon between the Eagle Iron Works and ourselves for work done and material furnished by them for the Galesburg court house, you are hereby authorized to pay them or their order three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars ($3,750), and charge same to our account.

Very truly yours,

DAWSON & ANDERSON.

DETROIT, March 20, 1888.

W. Selden Gale, Esq., Chairman Building Committee, Galesburg, Ill.

DEAR SIR:—Terms of settlement having been agreed upon between ourselves, we hereby empower Moore & Moore to complete settlement with your county for all claims for building court house and to give full discharge therefor.

Very truly yours,

EAGLE IRON WORKS,

by C. J. O'HARA, Sec. and Treas.

Dickenson & Thurber, attorneys for Pittsburg Bridge Co.

On motion of Mr. Cooke the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which on motion of Mr. McKee was adopted.

That the committee on court house and grounds be authorized to procure an enlargement of the jury box in circuit court room.

A suitable book case to hold the law books owned by the county and kept for use of circuit court.

A suitable case as asked for by county clerk for his office.

Such furniture as may be necssary for sheriff's office.

That the committee be authorized to make arrangements to procure water for use of court house from the city, and have the stone work of the court house repointed where needed.

That the same committee be authorized to join the city in the construction of such walks as may be agreed on at the boundary of the county portion of public grounds.

That the same committee be authorized to consent to such assessments by the city as are just and proper for pavements and curbing adjacent to court house grounds, and be directed to protect the county from assessments which may seem to be unjust or of doubtful propriety.

September Meeting, 1888.—Mr. Gale presented the following report of the building committee which was read, and action thereon deferred until the next meeting of the board.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

The building committee, in reference to the claims of Dawson & Anderson, court house contractors, beg leave to report:

Messrs. Dawson & Anderson claim an allowance not yet made them by the board of the sum of $1,741.50. This sum is composed of three items:

Concrete under inside foundation walls	$570.00
Basement floor	682.50
Lime and cement in iron ceilings	489.00

This is work the committee required, believing it necessary to the proper construction of the building, and claiming with some reason that it was included in the specifications and plans. The work was done by Dawson & Anderson under protest, they claiming their contract did not require it. The committee did not feel authorized to order or allow for extra construction, and after settling with the contractors for such claims as were indisputably due, referred these matters to the board, believing if it shall appear to the board, that the terms of the contract did not require the work. its necessity would be recognized, the action of the committee approved and payment ordered. Upon re-examination of the matter by the committee, under the reference made at the July meeting, the committee is satisfied that the right to demand this work is at least doubtful, that the contractors in bidding did not contemplate doing it, and in fact, have done the work without pay for it.

They are of the opinion that there is at least a strong probability that the contractors can legally recover, and they recommend that these items be paid. These items include all that the contractors claim to be legally entitled to, beyond the payments already received.

They claim, however, that the county ought to allow them a further sum, a claim not based on any legal right, but due them on grounds of equity and fair dealing.

Their bid for construction was accompanied by a schedule in which was set down the estimated cost of each item of work and material. The amount bid was the sum total of these items, with addition of 5 per cent. to cover cost of superintendence and contingent expenses. In this schedule there were three important omissions.

Nothing was set down for the gallery front which cost them	$ 770.00
The iron door of the vault costing	110.00
The dial faces in the tower costing	120.00
Total	$1000.00

The bid was further reduced in amount by an error in addition, the plastering being carried with the column of totals $2,000 less than the estimate.

As to these claims the committee made no recommendation. They do not believe that the county can be legally obliged to make any allowance for these errors of calculation. The appeal is made by them to a sense of justice and such an appeal should be answered by each member of the board for himself, regarding, as he should, the opinion and wishes of his constituents.

It may be said in behalf of the contractors, the woodwork in the building being very superior, both in workmanship and material, and although the contractors succeeded in getting it very cheaply, considering its character, its cost to the contractors, aside from the gallery front, exceeded the estimate in the schedule, and it is the opinion of that member of the committee, who is best qualified to judge of such work, Mr. Robson, that the contract might have been filled with work sufficiently inferior and cheaper to have saved the loss, even including the gallery front. The vault door is very cheap—the result of a fortunate opportunity to buy at a bargain.

The contractors have been held to a rigid performance of the contract to a degree unusual in public work. They have done honest and faithful work. If all their claims were allowed, the cost of the building to the county would be less than anybody else offered to do the same work for. The contractors would still be large losers, and the committee do not believe the work could have been done, and as well done by anybody at the cost.

Respectfully submitted,

W. SELDEN GALE,
LEON A. TOWNSEND,
WM. ROBSON,
R. W. MILES,
H. M. SISSON.

January Meeting, 1889.—On motion of Mr. Gale, the report of the building committee in relation to Dawson & Anderson, filed at the last meeting of the board, was taken up for consideration and read by the clerk.

Mr. Gale moved that the three items:

Concrete under interior walls of court house .....$ 570.00
Concrete floor in basement of court house 682.50
And a difference in cost of concrete used over iron arches in the court house over that claimed to be required by the contract..... 489.00
And aggregating 1741.50

be allowed and paid, on condition that the amount be received in full of all claims, whatsoever, by said Dawson & Anderson against Knox county, on acconut of the construction of the court house and of all matters growing out of the same. Carried.

Mr. Gale read the following report of the committee on building and grounds:

State of Illinois, } ss.
Knox County. }

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS, JANUARY SESSION, JANUARY 9, A. D., 1889.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee on building claims would beg leave to report that they have examined all claims presented to them, and recommend the payment of the following, and that the clerk be directed to issue orders on the county treasurer to the claimants for the several amounts allowed as follows, to-wit:

Conant Bros. Furniture Co., jury box, bill $28.15, allow .....$ 23.65
Same, new furniture for offices 743.67

Robert A. Ross, setting up furniture 10.45
Parry & Stevens, work on jury box 17.42
All of which is respectfully submitted,

W. SELDEN GALE,
R. W. MILES,
H. M. SISSON.

On motion of Mr. Sisson, the foregoing report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

At the January meeting, 1889, a final report of the committee on buildings and grounds was made and a final payment was made Dawson & Anderson, general contractors on account of the building. Final settlement was also made for furniture and putting same in place. These two payments were the final payments and completed the building so far as it had been planned up to that time.

At the April meeting, 1889, there was a reorganization of the committees, when the committee on buildings and grounds was dropped.

Full reports of the progress of the work on this court house have been incorporated in this history, but we deem it a matter of historic value to add a complete copy of the annual report of the county clerk, which was submitted to the board of supervisors at the September meeting, 1889, as it shows the financial condition of Knox county after the payment of every bill incurred in the construction of the court house. Not a bond had been issued in aid of this construction. An annual tax, sufficient to care for the annual progress in the work on the building, had been levied and many of the tax payers of the county found it difficult to believe that the work was completed and paid for. There was cash on hand September 1, 1884, the sum of $23,089.36. The board made a levy that fall of $80,000 for all purposes. Out of this all bills for court house construction were paid besides all bills for the current expenses for the county the ensuing year, leaving $22,034.43 on hand, September 1, 1885. The city of Galesburg owed the county $10,000 for the fire-proof, which would make $32,034.43 at the disposal of the county board for the ensuing year. The board thereupon again levied $80,000 for all purposes, which made an aggregate of $113,034.43, with which to pay current expenses and work on the court house from September 1, 1885 to September 1, 1886. The financial statement for September 1886, shows amount on hand $13,474.75. It was thought best to levy a tax for $80,000, which would make an entire clean-up of all expenditures on account of the new court house and all furnishings connected therewith. This was done and the following report shows the result:

September, 1889.—The following is the county clerk's annual statement:

GALESBURG, Ill., Sept. 10, 1889.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

I herewith present the county treasurer's financial statement for the year ending September 1, 1889, showing cash on hand $18,788.62. This amount according to past experience will probably be sufficient to pay all demands upon the treasury until receipts are realized from the collection of taxes.

The proceedings of the board have been published and distributed as provided by law.

It will be remembered that Dawson & Anderson claimed a balance due them of about $4,840.50, which the board had refused to allow. At the January meeting of 1889, the matter was again considered, and three items of said claim. aggregating $1,741.50, were allowed on condition that the amount be received in full of all claims whatsoever by said Dawson & Anderson against Knox county on account of the construction of the court house, and of all matters growing out of the same. The amount was paid and accepted on the terms named. The sheriff's office has also been equipped with furniture at a cost of $313.17. At the July meeting of 1887, a detailed statement of orders issued on account of court house construction was presented and published, aggregating $146,453.51. All orders issued since then have been published in detail, but it will doubtless be interesting to the board and the people to see a summary of the whole thing, including the items above mentioned. I therefore present them as follows. viz:

Court house	$120,293.59
Steam heating	7,072.67
Architect	4,120.25
Advertising	81.50

The ordinary accumulation of papers and files has made it necessary to procure some furniture not included in the above. They are omitted because they are such as will be called for from time to time in the future, and are not properly chargeable to the account of construction, unless the account is to be kept open for all time, as is the practice of railway companies.

The following is a statement of the amount of claims allowed during the year compared with those allowed during the year 1888. It should be borne in mind that in making these statements, the year is reckoned from September 1st to September 1st:

It is gratifying to note that the expenditures of the county have returned to a normal figure; that even with the purchase of nearly $800 worth of new furniture and the payment of $1,740 to Dawson & Anderson, the amount expended is somewhat below the usual levy of six years ago.

It would seem that a levy of $40,000 would be sufficient for the year.

It is with pain that I mention the fact that the office of the clerk of the circuit court became vacant by the death of Mr. Josiah Gale by a railroad accident near Esterbrook in the state of Colorado on the 29th of August last. The sad news reached us in the forenoon of the 30th. His honor, Judge Glenn, of the circuit court, was appraised of the occurrence and after consultation with the attorneys and others interested, the appointment of Mr. George W. Gale, brother of deceased, to fill vacancy until a successor shall be elected, was made by Judges Glenn and Pleasants, and the governor was notified of their act.

Respectfully submitted,

ALBERT J. PERRY, County Clerk.

Thus was completed and equipped with every convenience for the county of Knox an elegant court house, thoroughly well built in every particular, for the sum of $156,261.00. It has one fault. It was thought that glass was more expensive than stone, the windows were made small to lessen the cost and therefore the halls and some of the rooms are rather dark. With larger windows the building would be almost faultless.

The writer here desires to make a few statements in addition to all the record history given in relation to the building of this court house. At the commencement of this work the board of supervisors was composed of the following individuals:

M. B. Harden, from Indian Point township.

J. S. Latimer, from Cedar township.

James Paden, from Galesburg township.
W. Selden Gale, from city of Galesburg township.
Milo D. Cooke, from city of Galesburg township.
S. H. Olson, from city of Galesburg township.
Thomas McKee, from city of Galesburg township.
Geo. W. Foote, from city of Galesburg township.
Samuel Rankin, from Henderson township.
Samuel W. May, from Rio township.
Leon A. Townsend, from Chestnut township.
Luther Clark, from Orange township.
A. G. Charles, from Knox township.
Harvey Montgomery, from Knox township.
William Robson, from Sparta township.
J. W. Allen, from Ontario township.
Joshua Boynton, from Maquon township.
James Rebstock, from Haw Creek township.
E. J. Wyman, from Persifer township.
Wm. H. Leighton, from Copley township.
John W. Andrews, from Walnut Grove township.
John Sloan, from Salem township.
A. G. Mathews, from Elba township.
W. H. Parker, from Truro township.
C. P. Sansbury, from Victoria township.
W. B. Todd, from Lynn township.

Mr. R. G. Mathews was elected chairman and the building committee was composed of the following persons: Sloan, Robson, Gale, Charles, Harden, Leighton. In 1885 Mr. Miles was placed on the building committee in the place of Charles, not in the board. In 1886 Mr. Townsend was placed on the building committee in the place of Harden, not re-elected. In 1887 Mr. Andrews was placed on the committee in the place of Miles and Mr. Miles was added to the committee by vote of the board. In 1888 the name of the committee was changed to court house and grounds. The new committee consisted of Gale, Robson, Townsend, Sisson and Miles. It will be seen that Mr. Gale and Mr. Robson were the only members who remained on the committee from the beginning until the completion of the court house. The only members who are still living who were on the board at the time the work was begun are S. H. Olson, Samuel Rankin, Samuel W. May, Leon A. Townsend, Harvey Montgomery, James Rebstock and John W. Andrews—seven members still living and nineteen gone to their long home.

As already stated, it was the writer's privilege to have been county clerk and clerk of the board of supervisors during the period of court house construction, and therefore to have been intimately acquainted with all of these men, and he feels at liberty to speak somewhat freely in regard to them. The long contest over the removal of the county seat from Knoxville to Galesburg had divided the county into two opposing camps, each camp made up of selected men who were elected for the express purpose of looking closely after that one interest. The board contained an unusual proportion of bracing men. It ranked high for its business capacity and strict integrity. Not a man was placed there through his own machinations, but purely because the people wanted him. It is doubtful if the legislature of the state of Illinois, or in fact any other state, ever contained a higher percentage of upright and capable men. Each man had fought to the limit for the people he represented in the county seat contest, and when the battle was over and the order to build was voted, there was not a single obstructionist in the board, but all turned their attention and their best efforts to securing a good building at the lowest price. Not one dollar of graft was ever paid to anyone on account of any work connected with that job. The actual cost of the building was about $7,000 more than the county paid for it, and it was only by the careful management of the building committee that the job was completed at all by the contractors. If the committee had done differently, the contractors would have failed before the close of the year 1885, and the work have been relet to some other parties at a much higher price. The contract provided that monthly estimates of work done should be made and paid for, less 15% to be retained by the committee. It soon became evident that the stone work would cost many thousands of dollars more than was bid, and that if the contract were adhered to strictly, the work could not be finished. It was made to appear to the committee that a good profit would come to the contractor in the plastering, glass, iron and woodwork. This work was to be done and paid for later, so the committee, rather than bankrupt the contractor at the start, take the job off his hands and find some other way to complete it, chose to pay the full amount of each monthly estimate, and on one occasion overpaid the sum of $2,000. This assistance enabled the contractor to complete the job, but owing to his mistakes in figuring, omissions and possibly bad management, his profits on the other classes of work did not make him whole.

The next work of importance connected with the court house, was the installation of the electric lighting plant, the telephone system and the remodelling of the heating plant, which covers the extension of these three conveniences to the jail. If the board had realized the full cost of this work, it is somewhat doubtful whether it would have been done, but they are very great conveniences, we may almost say necessities, under the modern way of living and doing business. After more or less discussion in the board, the work was begun in the summer of 1906, and the first report was made to the board at the September meeting. These reports are sufficiently explicit to show the improvements and are therefore given without further comment.

December Meeting, 1906.—Your committee on the installation of the electric light and power plant have examined the report of Adkins-Smeeton Co., and find:

1. That there is an error in said report in stating the cost of the light and power plant and the office telephone system as follows: The item amounting to $557.95, with credits of $134.52, leaving a balance of $423.43, in the bill of Henry Newgard & Co., is stated in the auditors' report to be for "extra work, feeders underground," whereas, the bill of this item shows that every dollar thereof was for material for the underground system and none of it for labor.

This error is misleading in that it apparently increases the labor bill by the sum of $423.43.

2. We further note that the auditors' report shows an alleged overcharge for labor on the jail feeders of $1,114.83.

In order to reach this result, the auditors have, evidently by unintentional mistake, duplicated an item of $799.50, expended for labor, charging this amount first to the telephone system, and again afterwards to the jail feeders.

The auditors' report makes an "analysis of cost," in which the total cost of the telephone system is figured at $1712. In this amount is included a bill of Henry Newgard and Co., for $1542.85, consisting of materials amounting to $514.35, and labor as follows:

Colly, 282 hours	$211.50
Nordberg, 365 hours	219.00
Hall, 333 hours	199.80
Johnson, 284 hours	113.60
Krouse, 280 hours	168.00
Crane, 224 hours	89.60
Allen, 2 hours	1.20
Carpenter, 18 hours	10.80
Plasterers, 25 hours	15.00
Total	$1,028.50

When the auditors come to analyze the cost of the jail feeders, they again include a labor item amounting to $799.50. This item consists of the same labor above mentioned and already charged to the telephone system, apparently as follows:

Colly, 282 hours	$211.50
Nordberg, 365 hours	219.00
Hall, 333 hours	199.80
Krouse, 280 hours	168.00
Allen, 2 hours	1.20
Total	$799.50

Thus according to the auditors' "analysis," this item of $799.50 is duplicated and charged to the jail feeders when in fact it has already been charged to the telephone system. In this way, by adding this sum of $799.50 to the correct bill for the jail feeders which amounts to $448.16, the auditors' report figures the total labor cost of the jail feeders to be $1,247.66, or nearly three times the true amount thereof.

It is therefore evident that the auditors' finding as to the over charge of labor, being based on these incorrect figures, is also incorrect.

3. We further report that in figuring the alleged overcharge the auditors have estimated the labor cost on the jail feeders to amount to $138.83. This estimate is not based on any inspection of the work actually done, nor upon any expert knowledge of its cost or its value, but is based solely upon an estimate as to the time required for the work apparently founded on Mr. Allen's report. Mr. Allen's report in this particular is evidently defective and incomplete, inasmuch as the auditors estimate the time of work required on the jail feeders at 271½ hours when it is evident to any one who will carefully inspect the work, that it could not, by any possibility, have been completed in that length of time.

Your committee further calls the attention of the board to the fact that the total labor cost on the jail feeders is $448.16 instead of $1,247.66, as stated in the auditors' report; that this item of $448.16 includes not only the digging of the ditch for the conduits, but also cutting through the heavy foundations of the court house and jail, repairing the same with concrete and cement, and putting them in as good condition as before, taking up and relaying the side walk in three places, taking up and relaying the pavement on Cherry street, which was crossed diagonally, and the placing and tamping down of three iron pipes constituting the conduit. This work was done in the winter when the ground was frozen and in refilling the trench, the dirt had to be dissolved in water. In addition to the cost of laying the conduit there was the labor of pulling the cable and wires through the conduits and putting them in place.

E. P. ROBSON.

An extended discussion followed relative to matters pertaining to the special reports of the lighting committee by Supervisors McDowell, Gale, Latimer, Robson, Epperson, McWilliams and Burkhalter.

On motion of Mr. McWilliams the board adjourned until one o'clock p. m.

One o'clock p. m.—Board met pursuant to adjournment.

Present—Same as this forenoon.

Mr. Robson of the jail committee then made further verbal statements relative to the lighting plant for the court house and jail and the discussion of that subject and the telephone system was resumed by various members of the board.

December meeting, 1906.—Statement of the cost of the purchase and installation of the electric light and power plant for the court house and jail and telephone system for same buildings.

Contract price with Henry Newgard & Co., which included wiring of buildings, engine, generator and storage battery, and the connecting of the engine with the steam plant of the court house	$ 5,311.00
Extra on larger engine and generator than stated in original contract	150.00
Contract price with David J. Braun Mfg. Co., fixtures	2,834.20
Hanging fixtures (Henry Newgard & Co.) not in original contract	200.00
Material and labor on underground conduits not contemplated when original specifications were made	871.59
Light bulbs, glass shades, and fuses, not included in contract	594.48
Total cost of lighting plant	$9,961.27
Material and labor necessary for repairing and remodeling the steam plant and placing same in safe condition for furnishing power, which said material and labor was found to be necessary only after the work of connecting the steam plant with the engine was begun	$ 2,635.25
The telephone system, which was a separate job from the others and not contemplated when the original contract was let, was installed along with the wiring for lighting plant because deemed an economy of time and labor	$ 1,712.60
Edwin A. Allen, superintendent, which item of cost covers the superintendence and inspection of the three foregoing jobs, viz: wiring and installing of electric plant, hanging fixtures, remodeling heating plant, and installation of telephone system	654.28

Extra janitor service..... 664.90

Total cost of lighting and power plant, heating plant and telephone.$15,628.30
One bill, "Job No. 8888 contract" included in auditors' report and which bill is not allowed or to be allowed..$74.62
Error in statement of American Electric Supply Co., and amount actually paid 1.00 75.62

Making the total as per auditors' report $15,703.92

The bills for all the above amounts, and the receipts for the payments thereon, or for county orders issued therefor are on file in the county clerk's office.

Out of the total cost of the lighting plant, $9,961.27, there might be deducted an amount of about $2,500.00, being the estimated cost of engine, generator and storage battery, making a cost of $7,461.27 as the amount necessary to have been expended in order to purchase electric current.

Amounts paid Galesburg Gas & Electric Light Company for lighting county jail and court house:

For the year 1901	$ 643.38
For the year 1902	882.10
For the year 1903	947.54
For the year 1904	1,023.10
For the year 1905	1,253.26

FIRE PROOF BUILDING—KNOXVILLE

An account of the construction of the building known as the fire proof at Knoxville may properly be considered as a supplement to the account of court house building. It was begun in the summer of 1854 and was settled for in full February 9, 1856, although the receipt was not filed until the May meeting, 1856.

The following is the brief record history of the construction of this building:

June meeting, 1854.—At the June meeting of the board of supervisors 1854 bids for the construction of fire proof offices were presented, opened and acted upon as follows:

The board in pursuance to notice given now proceeded to open the bids for building fire proof offices, two bids only were offered, Samuel Fox having made a bid for building the said offices of $5,375.00 and Edson Huggins for the sum of $5,700.00.

On motion of Mr. Reynolds it was voted that the bid of Samuel Fox for the fire proof offices be referred to the committee on public buildings to consult with Mr. Fox in regard to the payments and the time of completing the same, etc.

The committee on public buildings and grounds to whom was referred the proposition and to consult with Mr. Fox in reference to the building fire proof offices now filed a report which was read and adopted by the board.

Resolved, That the bid of Samuel Fox be accepted upon the basis of the report submitted this morning, in relation to the fire proof buildings, and that Z. Cooley be appointed to superintend the building, construction and completion of the same, and that the committee on public buildings close the contract, and take bond of the contractor.

Mr. Gale moved to lay the resolution on the table till the next September meeting of this board.

Mr. Reynolds called for the yeas and nays on the motion, which resulted as follows:

Yeas—W. S. Gale, J. McMurtry, R. Heflin, T. H. Taylor, J. Hammond, J. G. Hamrick, G. W. Manley, J. H. Nicholson. Nays—Daniel Meek, H. A. Kelly, S. Collins, H. G. Reynolds, Wm. M. Clark, I. O. Stanley, A. Ward, M. B. Mason, T. H. Ross, J. L. Jarnagin, Jonathan Gibbs.

The vote was then taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution which resulted as follows:

Yeas—D. Meek, H. A. Kelly, S. Collins, H. G. Reynolds, Wm. M. Clark, I. O. Stanley, A. Ward, M. B. Mason, T. B. Ross, J. L. Jarnagin, Jonathan Gibbs. Nays—W. S. Gale, J. McMurtry, R. Heflin, T. H. Taylor, J. Hammond, J. G. Hamrick, G. W. Manley, J. H. Nicholson.

Resolution adopted.

By the December meeting the construction of the fire proof building had reached a point where the board of supervisors found it advisable to adopt the following resolution:

On motion it is ordered that the superintendent of the building of the fire proof offices be authorized to draw orders in favor of Samuel Fox from time to time in such sums as he shall judge advisable in accordance with the contract between said Fox and the building committee.

The board of supervisors again took action on the fire proof building at the January meeting 1856, as follows:

To the Hon. Body of Supervisors of Knox county, Ill.:

Report of the committee to whom was appointed to examine the account of Samuel Fox in building of the fire proof building do report that we have examined said account and find according to the best information we can get to be correct, the said Fox agrees to have the two offices ready for occupancy in two weeks and to have the building completed by the 1st day of May for the performance of which he agrees to give sufficient security, in consideration of which your committee recommend that the board of supervisors make a final settlement with said Fox and allow him over and above his account $500 for his time and work not presented in his bill. Your committee find from examination of the building and all the information that we can get that the work is done in the most satisfactory manner.

Knoxville, July 15, 1856.

GEO. A. CHARLES,
F. B. ROSS,
I. R. JOHNSTON,
Committee.

Mr. Gale moved that Mr. Fox be allowed $500 above the contract price, $350 to be paid now and $150 on the completion of the building.

Mr. Johnston moved to amend the motion of Mr. Gale by substituting the report of the committee.

Motion on the amendment carried.

Moved that the report of the committee be adopted and that Samuel Fox be allowed $1,167.39 above the contract price. Adopted.

ORDERED: That Geo. A. Charles be and he is appointed by the board to settle with Samuel Fox on the completion of the fire proof offices according to contract.

On the 7th of January, 1856, the fire proof building was again the subject of action by the board:

ORDERED: That Messrs. Morey and Cooley be authorized to have the fire proof office fitted in a suitable manner and render bill at the next meeting of this board.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of Geo. A. Charles for twenty-seven hundred dollars to pay to Samuel Fox on his contract for building the fire proof offices upon said Fox filing and giving good security for the finishing of said offices to be by him approved.

May meeting, 1856.—Geo. A. Charles, who was appointed at the last meeting of the board (in January last) to settle with Samuel Fox for building the clerk's offices and to whom an order was passed by this board at that time for the sum of twenty-seven hundred dollars for the purpose of making such settlement upon said Fox completing his contract, now files and presents to the board receipts from said Fox for said sum which receipts are in the words and figures following:

It appears that Mr. Charles paid Samuel Fox upon said fire proof building on February 9, 1856, the sum of $2,700 and receipts for the same having been presented to the court his report of settlement with said Fox was received and the following order entered:

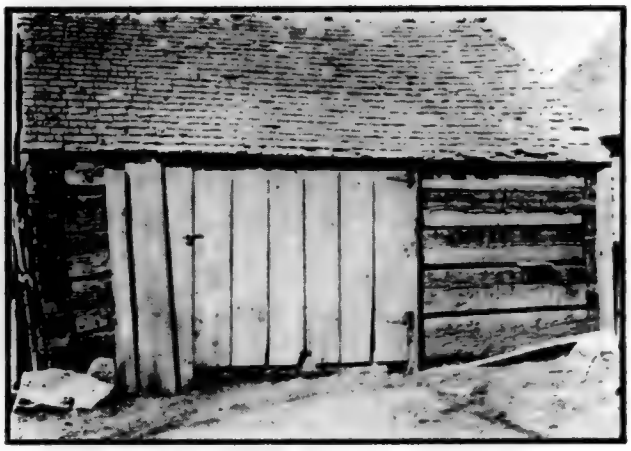
On motion it is ordered that the report of Geo. A. Charles in the business of settling with Samuel Fox be received and that he be discharged.

This building was used as a fire-proof depository for the valuable records of Knox county from the time of its completion until February, 1873, a period of about seventeen years, when the county seat was removed to Galesburg. The books were then put into a building also called the fire-proof, situated on South Cherry street on the lot now occupied by the new city hall. This building was used for the safe keeping of the county records until the new court house was ready for occupancy. The county offices moved into the new court house about January 5, 1887.

THE COUNTY SEAT FIGHT

The struggle for the final location of the seat of justice of Knox county was characterized by much the same tactics on the two sides as has always attended such social wars. It has been related in this history that the first courts and elections were held at the house of John B. Gum, Esq., who resided on Section 32 in Henderson township at that time. On March 24, 1830, Rees

Jones was employed to go to Springfield, Illinois, to purchase the southwest quarter of Section 28, Knox township, which had been designated by law for the permanent seat of justice for the county. This land was bought and paid for and the court house and jail erected upon it. A portion, at least, of the land so purchased was surveyed into streets and lots and sold at auction and thus the town of Henderson (afterwards the name was changed to Knoxville) was started as the permanent "seat of justice." The town of Galesburg was started in 1836. Knox college was chartered in 1837 and thus there was established a competitor with Knoxville only five miles away. Both towns increased in population at about the same rate and did not differ very much until the advent of the railroads in 1854 as the result of negotiations which had been in progress for three or four years. No sooner had the railroad reached Galesburg than she turned her covetous eyes to the county seat and quietly laid plans for wresting the prize from Knoxville. The centering of the railroads from the north, south, east and west and the location of shops and round houses at Galesburg gave the town a boom that raised the population rapidly, doubling that of Knoxville several times.



From that time on may be seen in the acts of the board of supervisors, sometimes dimly, sometimes vividly, the out-cropping of this contest, each side taking the aggressive and acting upon the defensive as the case demanded. The aggressive policy of Galesburg was directed to an increase of its power and influence in the county board; its defensive policy to prevent all further improvements at Knoxville. The policy of Knoxville was upon the whole defensive in resisting the growth of the power and influence of Galesburg. Both parties sought legislative relief; Galesburg by obtaining a bill for the division of the township from the city in such a way as to increase its representation in the county board; Knoxville by inserting a clause in the new constitution touching the removal of county seats from a point away from the center of the county to a point nearer the center of the county.

Quite a large part of this struggle will be found in the chapters on court houses, jails and the alms house and poor farm. This chapter gives those proceedings of the county board which have a more direct bearing on the conflict and it is therefore given under the heading "The County Seat Fight." The first move was made by Galesburg in the spring of 1856.

At the spring election of 1856 an assistant supervisor for the town of Galesburg was voted for. Samuel W. Brown was elected and he presented his certificate of election at a special May meeting of the board and the following action was taken.

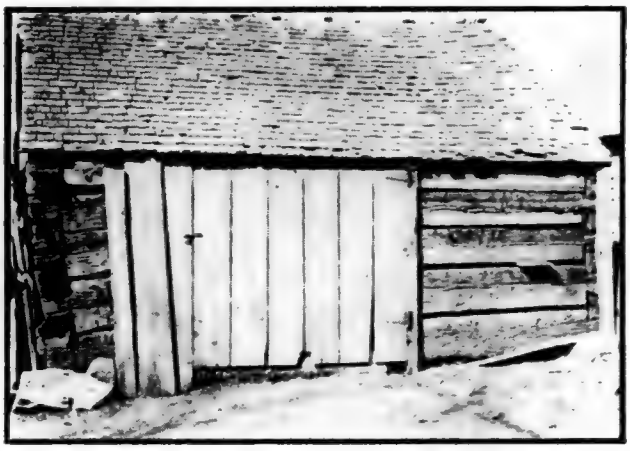
Samuel W. Brown now presents to the board his certificate of election as assistant supervisor of the town of Galesburg, together with a list of legal voters of said township made under the authority of the township officers with the appointment of said officers to take the same from which it appears that said township contained 829 legal voters on the 1st day of April last—when on motion it was voted that Samuel W. Brown be entitled to his seat as a member of this board.

January, 1866.—Mr. Gale presented a petition of citizens of Galesburg asking a division of said town, which on motion of Mr. Gale was referred to a committee, the chair appointing Messrs. Gale, Vaughn and Dunlap, with instructions to report to the present meeting of the board.

THE FIRST KNOX COUNTY JAIL

THE OLD COURT HOUSE AT KNOXVILLE

Jones was employed to go to Springfield, Illinois, to purchase the southwest quarter of Section 28, Knox township, which had been designated by law for the permanent seat of justice for the county. This land was bought and paid for and the court house and jail erected upon it. A portion, at least, of the land so purchased was surveyed into streets and lots and sold at auction and thus the town of Henderson (afterwards the name was changed to Knoxville) was started as the permanent "seat of justice." The town of Galesburg was started in 1836. Knox college was chartered in 1837 and thus there was established a competitor with Knoxville only five miles away. Both towns increased in population at about the same rate and did not differ very much until the advent of the railroads in 1854 as the result of negotiations which had been in progress for three or four years. No sooner had the railroad reached Galesburg than she turned her covetous eyes to the county seat and quietly laid plans for wresting the prize from Knoxville. The centering of the railroads from the north, south, east and west and the location of shops and round houses at Galesburg gave the town a boom that raised the population rapidly, doubling that of Knoxville several times.



From that time on may be seen in the acts of the board of supervisors, sometimes dimly, sometimes vividly, the out-cropping of this contest, each side taking the aggressive and acting upon the defensive as the case demanded. The aggressive policy of Galesburg was directed to an increase of its power and influence in the county board; its defensive policy to prevent all further improvements at Knoxville. The policy of Knoxville was upon the whole defensive in resisting the growth of the power and influence of Galesburg. Both parties sought legislative relief; Galesburg by obtaining a bill for the division of the township from the city in such a way as to increase its representation in the county board; Knoxville by inserting a clause in the new constitution touching the removal of county seats from a point away from the center of the county to a point nearer the center of the county.

Quite a large part of this struggle will be found in the chapters on court houses, jails and the alms house and poor farm. This chapter gives those proceedings of the county board which have a more direct bearing on the conflict and it is therefore given under the heading "The County Seat Fight." The first move was made by Galesburg in the spring of 1856.

At the spring election of 1856 an assistant supervisor for the town of Galesburg was voted for. Samuel W. Brown was elected and he presented his certificate of election at a special May meeting of the board and the following action was taken.

Samuel W. Brown now presents to the board his certificate of election as assistant supervisor of the town of Galesburg, together with a list of legal voters of said township made under the authority of the township officers with the appointment of said officers to take the same from which it appears that said township contained 829 legal voters on the 1st day of April last—when on motion it was voted that Samuel W. Brown be entitled to his seat as a member of this board.

January, 1866.—Mr. Gale presented a petition of citizens of Galesburg asking a division of said town, which on motion of Mr. Gale was referred to a committee, the chair appointing Messrs. Gale, Vaughn and Dunlap, with instructions to report to the present meeting of the board.

THE FIRST KNOX COUNTY JAIL

THE OLD COURT HOUSE AT KNOXVILLE

Mr. Gale from committee to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Galesburg for a division of said town, made the following report which was adopted:

ORDERED: That so much of the territory of the town of Galesburg as is contained in Sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and the west half of Section 3, and the west half of Section 10, in township 11 north of range one east, be constituted a town to be called the town of West Galesburg.

April meeting 1866.—This meeting opened with L. E. Conger supervisor elect from the town of Galesburg.

Mr. Rhea of Salem moved that a committee of three be appointed to examine and report as to the rights and qualifications of assistant supervisors from the towns of Galesburg and West Galesburg. Carried. When the chair appointed Messrs. Rhea, Dunlap and Meek said committee.

The committee to which was referred the rights of the assistant supervisors in Galesburg and West Galesburg to their seats, reported that they had made the necessary examination, and would report that each of said towns are entitled to a supervisor and assistant supervisor each. Report accepted and approved.

April meeting, 1867.—At this meeting of the board, the struggle over the location of the county seat had advanced to a point where the representation of Galesburg in the board was challenged. It was conceded that A. C. Clay was duly elected a member—other members from Galesburg were voted for whose names were not put on the roll of supervisors. After the organization of the board, Mr. Clay therefore made the following motion:

Mr. Clay moved that a committee of five be appointed by the chair, from different towns, to examine credentials, with power to send for persons and papers. Adopted, when the chair appointed Messrs. Clay, Vaughn, Beadle, Dunlap and Shaffer said committee.

On motion the board took a recess to enable the committee to investigate the credentials of members claiming seats from the city of Galesburg, Knoxville and elsewhere.

Board called to order by temporary chairman.

The committee on credentials made the following report which was on motion accepted, and the committee discharged:

Your committee would report that the following is a list of supervisors duly elected:

Indian Point	Daniel Meek
Cedar	E. S. Harden
Galesburg	A. C. Clay
Henderson	A. J. Dunlap
Rio	John Wycoff
Chestnut	Thomas Newell
Orange	T. W. Sumner
Knox	George A. Charles
Sparta	J. M. Holyoke
Ontario	Orin Beadle
Maquon	J. G. Hamrick
Haw Creek	Wm. Swigart

Persifer ..... R. W. Miles
Copley ..... James Johnson
Walnut Grove ..... J. S. Chambers
Salem ..... C. M. Hall
Elba ..... H. H. Wood
Truro ..... B. B. Shaffer
Victoria ..... H. J. Vaughn
Lynn ..... Joseph D. Gibbs

Your committee would further report in the case of the persons claiming seats from the city of Galesburg, that we find by examining the poll lists of the city of Galesburg, that 1,375 persons voted at the last city election; and Isaac Delano, F. R. Bartlett, Holcomb, Stewart, C. P. West, J. R. West, Stanley, L. E. Conger, Crocker, Hickey, Bates, Robinson, Chaplain, Troman, Morse, Russell, Nash, Chaplain, Bergen, Williams, Comstock, Ekins and Owens, swear that they are acquainted with, and personally know 292 persons that are legal voters, whose names do not appear on the poll list, making in all 1,667 legal voters residing in the city of Galesburg. It also appears that there are 49 names of persons residing in the city of Galesburg, in addition to the above, that are not properly certified to, which may or may not be legal voters. And your committee would report that W. Selden Gale, Henry R. Sanderson, L. E. Conger, and Richard H. Whiting, are duly elected supervisors, and are entitled to seats in this board from the city of Galesburg.

And your committee would further report, that there has been no evidence produced to show that Knoxville is entitled to more than one supervisor.

A. C. Clay,
Chm. of Committee.

Mr. Dunlap moved that the report of the committee be adopted.

Mr. Charles moved to amend that the members elect from the city of Galesburg be rejected until they produce a certified copy of the act under which they claim to be elected. Lost.

Mr. Gibbs moved that the board adjourn until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. Lost.

Mr. Charles appealed from the decision of the chair and demanded the yeas and nays thereon. The chair being sustained by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Dunlap, Wycoff, Newell, Sumner, Holyoke, Beadle, Hamrick, Swigart, Miles, Johnson, Chambers, Hall, Wood, Shaffer, Vaughn and Gibbs, 19. Nays—Mr. Charles, 1.

The question being on the adoption of the report of the committee, the yeas and nays were demanded, resulting:

Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Dunlap, Wycoff, Newell, Sumner, Charles, Holyoke, Beadle, Hamrick, Swigart, Miles, Johnson, Chambers, Hall, Wood, Shaffer, Vaughn, and Gibbs, 20. Nays—None.

On motion of Mr. Miles the same committee were reappointed to investigate the credentials of the assistant supervisor from the town of Knox.

On motion adjourned until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The next day the board elected a permanent chairman, Mr. Holyoke, of Sparta: The vote stood: Holyoke, 12; Miles, 10.

Thereupon Mr. Holyoke was declared elected.

Mr. Clay from committee on credentials made the following report.

The committee appointed on the credentials of members ask leave to report: That H. N. Keightley is entitled to his seat as assistant supervisor from Knox.

A. C. CLAY, Chairman.

Mr. Miles moved that the report of the committee be accepted and adopted. Carried.

Mr. Gale moved that the credentials of Mr. Thomas McKee, claiming a seat as one of the supervisors from the city of Galesburg be referred to the committee on credentials.

Mr. Vaughn offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That hereafter, when any town shall claim an extra member of this board, over and above the representation said town has heretofore had, that the votes actually cast at the town meeting at which such extra member claims to have been elected, shall be deemed by this board as the number of actual legal votes in said township.

On which resolution, the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Newell, Sumner, Charles, Keightley, Hamrick, Swigart, Miles, Johnson, Hall, Wood, Shaffer and Vaughn, 12. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Hardin, Clay, Gale, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Dunlap, Wyckoff, Beadle, Chambers, Gibbs and chairman, 13. Lost.

The question recurring on Mr. Gale's motion, it was adopted.

Mr. Clay, from committee on credentials, reported as follows: Your committee appointed on credentials, ask leave to report, That they have examined the credentials of Thomas McKee from the city of Galesburg, and find him entitled to a seat as supervisor in this board upon substantially the same evidence that entitled the assistant supervisor of Knox to a seat in this board.

A. C. CLAY, Chairman.

On motion, said report was accepted and the committee discharged and action thereon postponed until this afternoon.

Mr. Whiting moved the adoption of the report of the committee on credentials, and that Thomas McKee be admitted as a member of this board. Adopted. Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Gale, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Dunlap, Wyckoff, Beadle, Chambers, Vaughn and Gibbs, 13. Nays—Messrs. Sumner, Charles, Keightley, Hamrick, Swigart, Johnson, Hall, Wood and Shaffer, 9. Absent Mr. Newell; excused, Mr. Miles, 2.

Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter when any town shall claim an extra member of this board, over and above the representation said town now has, that the votes actually cast at the town meeting at which such extra member claims to have been elected, shall be deemed by this board as the number of actual legal votes in said township.

Laid upon the table: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Gale, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Wyckoff, Charles, Keightley, Beadle, Chambers, Hamrick, Hall and Gibbs, 15. Nays—Messrs. Dunlap, Swigart, Miles, Johnson and Vaughn, 5. Absent—Messrs. McKee and Newell, 2. Excused—Messrs. Sumner, Wood and Shaffer, 3.

September, 1868.—Mr. Wood from select committee appointed at the last meeting of the board reported as follows:

We, the committee, appointed to investigate and inquire into the number of legal voters in the city of Galesburg, and in the town of Knox, beg leave to report, that we have partially investigated the matter, but are not now prepared to make a full report, and would respectfully ask further time.

H. H. Wood,
T. W. Sumner,
O. Beadle,
C. H. Jackson,
E. S. Harden,
Committee.

On motion of Mr. Lanphere, the report was accepted and further time granted the committee.

Mr. Sumner, member of the committee to inquire into the number of supervisors the city of Galesburg and town of Knox are entitled to in this board, presented the following report:

The undersigned, members of the committee at the last meeting of this board to inquire into and ascertain how many supervisors the city of Galesburg is entitled to in this board, under an act entitled "An Act to divide the Towns of Galesburg and West Galesburg," as said city is at present districted; also to investigate the rights of the assistant supervisor of the town of Knox to a seat in this board; after considering the report made yesterday, which does not embrace the subject matter under consideration by said committee, and being desirous of being excused from further service on such committee, would ask leave of this board to report their action up to the present time.

The undersigned would therefore state, that in regard to the rights of the assistant supervisor of Knox to a seat, a register of voters of the town of Knox was presented to the committee, containing 850 names, and that witnesses were produced who recognized 823 persons named in such register as voters in said town of Knox at the time of holding the election for supervisor and assistant supervisor.

The undersigned, with other members of the committee, met at Galesburg to investigate into the number of supervisors the city of Galesburg is entitled to under the act, as at present districted. Registers (together with the names of voters sworn in), were presented, not sustained as any evidence that the names thereon were all legal voters, but given as the best evidence in the possession of the parties, by which appears that the 1st and 5th wards comprise one election district, has 762 voters; that the 2d, 3d and 6th wards comprise another election district, and has on the register 784 voters; and the 4th ward is another election district and has 596 voters on register. That the district composed of the 1st and 5th wards elect two supervisors; that composed of the 2d, 3d and 6th wards elect two supervisors, and the 4th ward elects one supervisor.

The law provides "at each annual city election there shall be elected in the city of Galesburg, one or more supervisors. The number shall not exceed the number of wards in such city, and shall not be greater than one for every four hundred legal voters in said city. The city council may from time to time divide the city into districts for the election of supervisors, each district to elect one or more, as the council may provide, but in forming districts no ward shall be divided."

We have now reported the facts as we found them; and must leave this board to determine whether the clerk of said city in granting certificates of election to two supervisors from each of the following districts, to-wit: that composed of the 1st and 5th wards, with only 762 names on the register, and that district composed of the 2d, 3d and 6th wards with 784 voters registered, performed his duty according to such law, or whether he exceeded his powers in granting such certificates, when it appears by the evidence that there were not twice four hundred voters in either of said election districts, even by the showing of the registers.

Believing that any further examination is unnecessary, and that the object of yesterday's report, being only for delay, the undersigned members of the committee desire to be relieved from any further examination of the subject.

THOS. W. SUMNER.

Mr. Charles moved that the report be accepted, and Mr. Sumner relieved from further action on said committee, when Mr. Clay moved, that the whole matter be laid upon the table. Carried.

January Meeting, 1869.—Mr. Wood, from select committee, to whom was referred the matter of the number of supervisors the city of Galesburg and town of Knox are entitled to in this board, reported as follows:

"We the committee appointed to investigate the claims of Knox and Galesburg, as to their claims for the number of supervisors in the board, after examining papers, and hearing evidence, find that Knoxville is entitled to two and the city of Galesburg to five supervisors.

H. H. WOOD,
E. S. HARDEN,
O. BEADLE,

Report accepted and committee discharged.

MARCH SPECIAL MEETING, 1869

State of Illinois, } ss.
Knox County }

March Special Meeting

Special meeting of the board of supervisors of Knox county held in the court house, in the city of Knoxville, in said county, called by the clerk of the county court, in pursuance of the following notice:

To James J. Egan, Esq., Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, State of Illinois:

The undersigned, being one-third of the members of the board of supervisors of said county of Knox, do request that a special meeting of said board be held, to convene on the 23d day of March, A. D., 1869, at the court house in the town of Knoxville, in said county.

Dated this 15th day of March, A. D., 1869.

HENRY R. SANDERSON,
E. S. HARDEN,
G. C. LANPHERE,
D. H. FRISBIE,
L. E. CONGER,
R. H. WHITING,
JOSEPH D. GIBBS,
J. S. CHAMBERS,
J. M. HOLYOKE,
O. BEADLE,
A. C. CLAY.

The following supervisors answered to their names: Hon. Joseph H. Holyoke, chairman; Messrs. P. H. Smith, E. S. Harden, A. C. Clay, D. H. Frisbie, L. E. Conger, H. R. Sanderson, R. H. Whiting, G. C. Lanphere, C. H. Jackson, Daniel Robertson, Owen Betterton, T. W. Sumner, G. A. Charles, P. H. Sanford, Orin Beadle, A. Humphreys, Peter Lacy, James Dossett, James Johnston, J. S. Chambers, J. M. Corey, H. N. Wood and Joseph D. Gibbs.

Board opened by proclamation.

JAMES J. EGAN, Clerk,
W. S. SEACORD, Sheriff.

On motion of Mr. Lanphere, the clerk read "An act to provide for the removal of the county seat of Knox county."

Mr. Sanderson moved that Messrs. P. H. Smith, of Indian Point, J. M. Holyoke, of Sparta, F. C. Smith, of Ontario, Amos Ward, of Walnut Grove and D. Corey, of Salem, be appointed commissioners of public buildings, under said act.

Mr. Sanford moved to amend by substituting the name of H. J. Vaughn, of Victoria, for that of Amos Ward. Lost.

On motion of Mr. Charles further action on the motion of Mr. Sanderson was postponed until afternoon.

Yeas—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Jackson, Robertson, Betterton, Sumner, Charles, Sanford, Beadle, Humphreys, Lacy, Dossett, Johnston, Corey and Wood, 15. Nays—Messrs. Clay, Frisbie, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Lanphere, Chambers and Gibbs, 8.

The motion of Mr. Sanderson for the appointment of commissioners of public buildings, being the special order, was called up.

Mr. Lacy moved to amend by substituting Rufus W. Miles, as one of said commissioners, in place of F. C. Smith, which amendment was lost. Yeas—Messrs. Betterton, Sumner, Charles, Sanford, Humphreys, Lacy, Dossett, Johnston, Tucker and Vaughn, 10. Nays—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Clay, Frisbie, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Lanphere, Jackson, Robertson, Chambers, Corey, Wood and Mr. Chairman, 14.

The question recurring upon the adoption of the motion of Mr. Sanderson, appointing Messrs. P. H. Smith, J. M. Holyoke, F. C. Smith, Amos Ward and D. Corey, Jr., as commissioners of public buildings, the same was adopted. Yeas—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Clay, Frisbie, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Lanphere, Jackson, Robertson, Beadle, Johnston, Chambers, Corey and chairman, 15. Nays—Messrs. Betterton, Sumner, Sanford, Humphreys, Lacy, Dossett, Wood and Vaughn, 9. Excused—Mr. Charles, 1.

Mr. Lanphere offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That if the vote about to be taken on the question of moving the county seat to Galesburg, shall be in favor of such removal, that then the commissioners having such matter in charge, shall not under any circumstances move from the building they are now in, the records and files in the respective office of county and circuit clerk, until a building is completed and ready for use in Galesburg, as secure and suitable as the one in which said records and files are now kept.

Mr. Vaughn moved to amend by striking out all after the word "resolved," and insert "that this board will not meddle with business properly belonging to the next board of supervisors," which was lost by the following vote. Yeas—Messrs. Betterton, Sumner, Charles, Sanford, Humphreys, Lacy, Dossett, Johnston, Corey, Wood, Tucker and Vaughn, 12. Nays—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Clay, Frisbie, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Lanphere, Jackson, Robertson, Beadle, Chambers and Gibbs, 13.

The resolution of Mr. Lanphere was then adopted by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Clay, Frisbie, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Lanphere, Jackson, Robertson, Beadle, Chambers, Corey and Gibbs, 14. Nays—Messrs. Betterton, Charles, Sanford, Humphreys, Lacy, Dossett, Tucker and Vaughn, 9. Messrs. Sumner and Johnston, excused.

Mr. Charles in explanation of his vote, said he voted no, because he did not believe it was right for the board of supervisors to amend or change the law as passed by the legislature, and would recommend that the resolution be referred to the legislature, to be passed as a supplemental act to the enabling act.

Mr. Sanford explained that he voted no, because the law provided for, and expressed the duties of the commissioners, and the board had no right to alter or modify the requirements of the law.

Mr. Humphreys explained that he voted no, because he objected to the board passing resolutions for the purpose of making capital to be used in the election.

Mr. Wood explained that he voted no, because he believed it right to do so.

May Meeting, 1869.—There were present at this meeting, Messrs. P. H. Smith, M. C. Bates, A. C. Clay, H. R. Sanderson, Geo. C. Lanphere, L. E Conger, Geo. V. Deiterich, M. Belden, H. M. Sisson, Daniel Robertson, Thomas Newell, Thomas W. Sumner, George A. Charles, P. H. Sanford, J. M. Holyoke, Orin Beadle, B. H. Morgan, Wm. Swigart, James Dossett, James Johnston, J. S. Chambers, John Sloan, L. A. Lawrence, John Wilson, H. J. Vaughn, O. M. Gross; James J. Egan, clerk, by J. S. Winter, deputy; Wilkins Seacord, sheriff.

Mr. Sumner moved to make the temporary chairman the permanent chairman. Lost.

Mr. Sanderson moved that the board proceed to ballot for chairman. Carried.

The chair appointed Messrs. Smith and Sumner tellers.

Messrs. H. J. Vaughn and J. M. Holyoke were put in nomination, the ballot resulting, J. M. Holyoke fourteen votes, H. J. Vaughn twelve votes. Hon. J. M. Holyoke was declared duly elected chairman.

Mr. Sanderson offered the following resolution:

RESOLVED: That Supervisors Lanphere, of Galesburg; Sanford, of Knox; Lawrence, of Elba; Sisson, of Henderson, and Gross, of Lynn, be appointed a committee to investigate the result of the election on the removal of the county seat, and report to the board at this meeting.

Mr. Charles moved to lay the resolution on the table, and the yeas and nays being called, the motion was lost. Yeas—Messrs. Newell, Sumner, Charles, Sanford, Morgan, Swigart, Dossett, Johnston, Sloan, Lawrence, Wilson and Vaughn, 12. Nays—Messrs, Smith, Bates, Clay, Sanderson, Lanphere, Conger, Deiterich, Belden, Sisson, Robertson, Beadle, Chambers, Gross and Chairman, 14.

The question recurring on the adoption of the resolution of Mr. Sanderson, the same was adopted. Yeas—Messrs. Smith, Bates, Clay, Sanderson, Lanphere, Conger, Deiterich, Belden, Sisson, Robertson, Beadle, Chambers and Gross, 13. Nays—Messrs. Newell, Sanford, Morgan, Johnston, Sloan and Vaughn, 6. Excused—Messrs. Sumner, Charles, Dossett, Lawrence and Wilson, 5. Refused to vote, Mr. Swigart, 1.

Explanation of votes—Mr. Sumner wished to be excused because he thought the board had no power to appoint such committee. Mr. Charles wished to be excused for a similar reason. Mr. Swigart refused to vote because the board had no power to canvass the vote, or delegate such power to a committee; that the action was entirely without authority of law, and he would not vote unless some law or precedent could be produced; that he was already ready to vote one way or another on any question that might arise, when the board had a legal right to act, but on this question he would not vote, nor did he want to be excused. Mr. Dossett wished to be excused for reasons given by others; and Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Wilson were excused for similar reasons.

Mr. Charles also presented the following, requesting that it be entered of record:

To the Hon. Board of Supervisors: The undersigned, in behalf of citizens of Knoxville and vicinity, would respectfully report that prior to the election on the county seat question (April 6, 1869), a subscription was made by them, of twenty thousand dollars, to aid in the erection of a county jail at the city of Knoxville, should the vote be in favor of the city of Knoxville; and whereas, the result of said election was in favor of said city of Knoxville, we will state that said subscription is in the hands of the county treasurer, with the payment fully guaranteed, to be used by the board of supervisors on the conditions named in said subscription. GEORGE A. CHARLES.

Mr. Swigart introduced a resolution that the board accept the donation of $20,000 offered by citizens of Knoxville and vicinity, and proceed to erect a jail at Knoxville.

On motion of Mr. Sanderson, the resolution was laid on the table, the vote being the same as on other questions pertaining to the county seat contest.

Mr. Lanphere, from the committee appointed, twenty-four hours previously, "to investigate the result of the election on the removal of the county seat," presented a voluminous "report," signed by three members of the committee, embracing a number of lengthy affidavits in regard to the election in Knox township only, and moved its adoption by the board.

Mr. Sanford made a statement in regard to the conduct of the committee, showing there had been no meeting of the committee; that the "report" as presented was ex parte and one-sided, and had evidently been prepared before the committee was appointed; and that if it was within the functions of the board of supervisors to institute an investigation of this kind, the inquiry should extend to other precincts, as well as Knox township.

The "report of the committee" was then adopted, by the usual vote—yeas, 14; nays, 12.

Sheriff Seacord served upon the board a summons to appear at the June term of the circuit court, to answer a bill of complaint filed by Geo. Davis, of Galesburg, in regard to the county seat election.

It being moved that the board authorize Mr. Sanford to employ counsel in the case on behalf of the board.

Mr. Sanderson moved to amend by substituting Mr. Lanphere and the other members of the judiciary committee for that duty. The amendment was adopted —yeas, 14; nays, 12.

Mr. Lanphere, from special committee appointed yesterday, made the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

Your committee appointed to investigate and ascertain the result of the election on the removal of the county seat, beg leave respectfully to report that they have given to the subject such consideration as the limited time at their disposal has permitted.

They find that the law providing for the removal of the county seat makes no provision for officially determining the result of the election, beyond the simple canvass of the returns made by the several boards of election; this canvass to be made by the county clerk and two justices. The law makes no provision for the issue of any certificate by the clerk, and it seems to be admitted on all hands, in accordance with the doctrine in the case reported in the 20th Ills., that even if such a certificate had been provided for, it would not be entitled to be regarded as evidence.

The board of supervisors being absolutely required to perform certain duties if the result of the vote has been for removal, and having other important duties to perform if the result be against removal; and as either by the design or imperfection of the law, no person has been appointed to determine the result, they are, of necessity, put upon their inquiry.

The most available evidence in the reach of the committee are the returns of the boards of election. In the absence of anything to contradict the certificates of the boards of election, your committee believe they may properly be taken as prima facie evidence. These returns show, in the aggregate, a majority of 247 against removal.

Your committee, however, in examining these returns, find disclosed the startling fact that the town of Knox returns 1,520 votes, all but 17 against removal; a number more than three times the usual vote of that town, about three and one-half times as great as was cast by the same town four years before on the same question; a number about two and one-half times as great as the number of white males over twenty years of age, residing in that town less than four years before, as appears by the census returns.

The committee believe from their own knowledge of the town, and from the general opinion as they hear it expressed, that the growth of the town of Knox during the four years last past has been far from rapid. They can but regard such a return as so manifestly false on the face of it, as to entitle it to very little consideration in arriving at the number of votes actually cast in that town.

Your committee are also in possession of affidavits of persons of entire respectability, which affidavits your committe beg leave to submit as part of this report, showing that the election in the town of Knox was conducted not only without any regard to the usual forms of elections, and without the usual safeguards against illegal and fraudulent voting, but was evidently intended and arranged for a fraud from the outset.

Taking into account, first, the absolutely incredible character of the returns from the town of Knox, and second, the gross character of the frauds openly practiced, as appear from the affidavits referred to, the committee are of opinion that the returns of the town of Knox should be entirely set aside as affording no evidence whatever of the number of votes actually cast in that town.

What the number of legal votes actually were, or how cast, your committee can only ascertain, by instituting inquiries which would consume very much more time than has been put at their disposal.

They are disposed in the absence of other data, to take the vote of last November as a basis, the vote at that time being 639, a number a little greater than was returned by Mr. McGowan, who took the census three and one-half years before the April election, as the number of white males in that town over twenty years of age.

Your committee think that the number equal to the white males in their 21st year, added to the number of alien white males over 20, to the number of short residents, and the number of those who are kept from the polls by absence from home, sickness, indifference as to the result, and other causes, is a very large allowance for the growth of the voting population of the town of Knox in that period.

They are also in possession of testimony that at the November election the feeling ran high; extraordinary efforts were made to get out voters, and many persons not legal voters were allowed to vote.

Deducting from the returns the excess returned in April, over the number returned in November, from the town of Knox, which is 884, and the majority of 247 against removal, is converted into a majority of 634 for removal.

In all the towns giving majorities for removal, with one exception, we find a large vote given against removal, enough perhaps, to guard reasonably well the purity of the polls. From none of these towns has any complaint come to the knowledge of your committee.

In most of the towns giving majorities against removal, the adverse vote was small and the opportunity and temptation to illegal voting had not the usual check of a vigilant opposition.

With one exception, however, these towns cast less votes than were cast in the same towns last November.

The exception is the town of Orange, which cast 18 votes in excess to the votes cast in November, all the votes in the town but five being against removal. We are assured on the authority of persons of the highest respectability, living in that town, that many voters stayed at home on the day of the April election, and that many illegal votes were cast. We are informed that one of the oldest and best known residents of that town, who voted against removal, estimated the fraudulent vote in Orange at fifty.

Your committee have not, however, had the opportunity to investigate the true state of facts existing in that town or others. They are, however, clearly of the opinion that a thorough investigation of the nineteen towns and a purging of their polls, would, so far as it affected the result at all, increase, to some extent, the majority for removal.

Admitting (an admission favorable to the vote against removal, as we think), that the legal vote cast in Knox was 639, that the returns from the nineteen other towns were correct, there remains a majority of 634 for removal. If from this be deducted, as some claim should be, the ninety votes cast for town and city officers, by persons who did not vote on the county seat question, and the majority is still 544.

This majority can only be overcome by supposing an illegal vote of that amount was cast in the city of Galesburg. Of this no evidence has been produced. That in a community where the public sentiment was so unequivocally one-sided, there was unusual temptation and opportunity for fraudulent voting, it is true, and it is also true that the vote of April exceeded the vote of November, 714.

But on the other hand the following facts are unquestionably true:

1st, the elections in Galesburg, in April, were conducted with a full regard to the usual forms. The votes were all duly registered, and no person allowed to vote unless his name was on the register, except by swearing in his vote and making the legal proof of his right. The election was public and open, the number of votes cast at all times during the day being known to the bystanders, by whom the judges, clerks and voters could be distinctly seen.

2d. All the city officers, and the justices and constables were elected at the same time, as many votes being cast for those officers as on the county seat. The election was sharply contested by rival candidates, each having an interest in preventing frauds attempted by his opponents. The votes were publically counted, and the ballots, books and papers preserved according to law. No extensive frauds could be committed except with the knowledge of many persons.

3d. It is well konwn that the November election in the city of Galesburg failed to call out a full vote, local causes well understood, but on which the committee need not dwell, contributed to that result.

4th. In consequence of the extension of the railroad works in Galesburg, much greater number of men were in the railroad employ in April than in November.

5th. The vote of the city of Galesburg, large as it is, is not very greatly in excess of what might reasonably be calculated on by comparison with other votes in the last eight years, and with the census returns, considering the very great apparent growth of that city.

Your committee beg leave to say, in conclusion, that while in the short time since their appointment they have not been able to ascertain all the facts bearing upon the case, and to come to such conclusion as would enable them to say with precision what was the exact state of the vote, they are clearly of this opinion, that those returns that are entitled to any confidence, show a majority for removal; and though that majority may be reduced by proving the votes really cast, or tendered in the town of Knox, and may perhaps be further affected by a thorough purging of the polls, there is no probability the result would be changed.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

G. LANPHERE,
O. M. GROSS,
H. M. SISSON,
Committee.

Mr. Clay moved that the report of the committee be approved, and after considerable discussion, the yeas and nays were demanded, and the resolution adopted. Yeas—Messrs. Smith, Bates, Clay, Sanderson, Lanphere, Conger, Deiterich, Belden, Sisson, Robertson, Beadle, Chambers, Gross and Chairman, 14. Nays—Messrs. Newell, Sanford, Morgan, Swigart, Dossett, Johnston, Sloan, Lawrence, Wilson and Vaughn, 10. Refusing to vote—Messrs. Sumner and Charles.

Explanation of votes.—Mr. Sumner said that a resolution had passed the Board this morning, that this board would not take any action upon any report, or reports, made by any illegal committee or committees; that the action of this board appointing a committee to canvass the county seat vote, was assuming a power not conferred by law, but directly in opposition thereto, that the committee was an illegal one, and appointed for an illegal purpose, and as he would not stultify himself, he should refuse to vote upon the question and also refuse to be excused.

Mr. Charles for similar reasons refused to vote or be excused.

On motion it was ordered that the alms house committee be authorized to approve the records of this meeting when written up.

At this time the sheriff of Knox county, who had been in waiting for some time, served upon the board of supervisors of Knox county, James Egan, county clerk; J. W. Temple, circuit clerk, and Dennis Clark, county judge of Knox county, Ill., a summons to appear at the June term of the circuit court to answer the complaint of George Davis, of Galesburg.

The judiciary committee were authorized to employ counsel on behalf of the board of supervisors in said suit.

September Meeting, 1869.—There were present at this meeting, Hon, J. M. Holyoke, chairman; supervisors, Messrs. P. H. Smith, M. C. Bates, A. C. Clay, H. R. Sanderson, L. E. Conger, G. V. Deiterich, M. Belden, H. M. Sisson, Thomas Newell, Thos. W. Sumner, George A. Charles, P. H. Sanford, Orin Beadle, B. H. Morgan, John Sloan, John Wilson and O. M. Gross, James J. Egan, clerk; Wilkins Seacord, sheriff.

Board opened by proclamation.

The chairman presented the certificate of appointment of E. P. Williams as one of the supervisors of the city of Galesburg, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Lanphere.

On motion, Mr. Williams took his seat in the board.

Mr. Holyoke, from "commissioners on public buildings," presented the following:

"To the Honorable the Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

The undersigned commissioners of public buildings appointed by your honorable body, under the law regulating the removal of the county seat, respectfully report that the city of Galesburg, in pursuance of the obligation entered into by the mayor and aldermen of said city, have erected in said city a fire proof building of sufficient capacity and convienience for the use of the circuit and county clerks; and the same will be ready for the use of said officers whenever the board of supervisors shall order the removal of the records and papers belonging to the county. By order of the commissioners.

J. M. HOLYOKE, Chairman,
F. E. SMITH, Secretary.

Knox County, }

January Special Meeting.

At a meeting of the board of supervisors of Knox county, held pursuant to a call, issued at the request of one-third of the members thereof, at Knoxville, in said county, on Thursday, the 30th day of January, A. D., 1873.

Present—Hon. A. C. Clay, chairman; Supervisors, Messrs. P. H. Smith, M. C. Bates, W. S. Gale, G. V. Dieterich, J. M. Morse, B. S. Stanley, H. R. Sanderson, John Junk, D. Wainwright, Heber Gillis, Peter Godfrey, Geo. A. Charles, G. G. Stearns, H. P. Wood, A. S. Curtis, L. W. Benson, Wm. Swigart, W. H. Leighton, A. P. Stephens, J. W. Hensley, Wm. West, John Wilson, M. B. Ogden, James Soles, John S. Winter, clerk; A. W. Berggren, sheriff.

Board opened by proclamation.

The chairman presented decree of McDonough circuit court, in the county seat case, and requested its reading by the clerk.

State of Illinois,
McDonough County, } ss.

In the McDonough Circuit Court, September Term, A. D., 1871.

George Davis, who sues on behalf of himself, as well as on behalf of all the tax payers of the county Knox and state of Illinois, who choose to be made complainants therein, vs. the board of supervisors of Knox county, Illinois, James J. Egan, county clerk of Knox county, Illinois, James W. Temple, circuit clerk of Knox county, Illinois, and Dennis Clark, county judge of Knox county, Ills. In chancery. Change of venue from Knox county, Ills.

This cause coming on to be heard upon the bill, answers, replications, pleadings and evidence, and after hearing counsel for the respective parties, the court finds upon the evidence, and adjudges and decrees that a majority of the legal voters of the county of Knox, did, at an election held on the sixth day of April, 1869, in said county of Knox, pursuant to an act of the legislature of this state, approved March 10, 1869, referred to in the original and amended bill, referred to in this case, vote in favor of removal of the county seat of said county from the city of Knoxville to the city of Galesburg in said county, that the allegations of the bill are true, and the said defendants, the board of supervisors of Knox county aforesaid, and the clerk of said board, are hereby directed to spread the result of said election and of the canvass thereof upon the record of the board of supervisors of Knox county, and state upon said record that the result of said election and canvass thereof was in favor of removal of the county seat of said county from Knoxville to the city of Galesburg, in said county, by a majority of two hundred voters; and said court further finds and decrees that the return of said election in the town of Knox, purporting to be made by the officers of said election therein is illegal, fraudulent, false and void; and that the result of said election heretofore spread upon the record of the board of supervisors, be set aside as incorrect. It is further ordered that the fact be stated upon said records of said board, that said election resulted in favor of the removal of the county seat of Knox county, from the city of Knoxville to the city of Galesburg in conformity with this decree. And it is further ordered that the defendants, the board of supervisors of Knox county, pay the costs of this suit; and thereupon defendants and each of them pray an appeal to the supreme court of the central grand division of the state of Illinois, which is allowed upon the defendants or either of them entering into bond in the penal sum of one thousand dollars, with security, which, by consent of parties, is to be approved by the clerk, within forty days from the rendition of this decree, said appeal bond to be conditional according to law.

C. L. HIGBEE.

State of Illinois, }
McDonough County. } ss.

I, I. N. Pearson, clerk of the circuit court, in and for said county, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and complete copy of the final decree rendered in said cause, and filed therein on the 7th day of October, A. D., 1872, as appears of record from the books and files in my office.

Witness, my hand and the seal of said court at Macomb, this 29th day of January, A. D., 1873.

(SEAL.) I. N. PEARSON, Clerk.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the decree of his honor, Judge Higbee, rendered in the McDonough circuit court, in the case of Geo. Davis vs. board of supervisors of Knox county, et al, having been affirmed by the supreme court, be spread upon the records of this board, and the clerk of the board be directed to correct the records as ordered by the court in said decree.

The decision of the supreme court, in the case of George Davis vs. board of supervisors of Knox county, et al, having been read, it was

On motion of Mr. Charles, ordered that the decision of the supreme court in said case, be spread upon the records of this board, and be published with the proceedings thereof in pamphlet form.

1½ O'clock, P. M.—Board met pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Sanderson presented the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the sheriff and clerks be directed to remove the books, papers and furniture of the county to Galesburg as rapidly as required by the interests of the county, employing such assistance as may be necessary; that for so much expense as is made necessary by the removal, the said officers be directed to send in bills for expenses to the city of Galesburg.

Resolved, That the said officers, with the approval of the chairman of committee on judiciary and clerks offices, be authorized to purchase such furniture as may be necessary for their offices, which must be procured before the next meeting of this board. Adopted.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That there be a committee of five, of whom the chairman of this board shall be one, and the other members appointed by the chair, whose duty it shall be to procure plans and estimates for a county jail.

Resolved, That said committee be directed to report, what provisions, if any, it is necessary to make for the county at Galesburg, what future provision should be made by the city of Galesburg; also, what real estate belongs to the county at Knoxville, and what disposition should be made of such real estate.

The chairman announced as such committee, in addition to the chairman, Messrs. Gale, Charles, Bates and Ogden.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. Gale, and adopted:

Resolved, That when this board adjourn, it adjourn to meet four weeks from today, at the clerk's office in the city of Galesburg.

Mr. Wood presented report of board of commissioners of public buildings, which report was accepted, and ordered to be spread upon the records.

To the Hon. Board of Supervisors of Knox Co.:

The undersigned commissioners of public buildings appointed under the act for the removal of the county seat of Knox county, hereby respectfully report:

We have in our possession the following list of property pledged by the authorities of the city of Galesburg, before the election, in aid of the removal of the county seat:

1st. A warranty deed from the city of Galesburg to the county of Knox for a part of lots seven and eight in block thirty-one, as numbered on the original plot of Galesburg, being four and one-half rods off the north side of lots seven and eight, being the premises commonly known as the "fire proof building."

2d. Warranty deed from A. N. Bancroft and wife to Knox county, conveying the west, two-thirds of lot number seven (7), in block forty-five (45), in the southern addition to the town of Galesburg. This lot was intended for a jail lot, but is not so expressed in the deed.

3d. Warranty deed from Knox College to Knox county, for block numbered thirty-nine (39), in the original plot of Galesburg, being the east half of the ground known as the "College Park." This deed is upon the express condition that the ground shall be used as a site for a court house and for no other purpose.

4th. The obligation of the city of Galesburg to furnish suitable rooms for the use of the county Knox, in the city of Galesburg, for court and jury rooms for a period not exceeding ten years, and to pay all necessary expenses incurred in the removal of the county records and property from Knoxville to Galesburg.

5th. Two certificates of deposit for the sum of two thousand dollars each, payable to the order of the commissioners appointed by the board of supervisors of Knox county, for the removal of the county seat. One of said certificates being signed by Weston Arnold, cashier of the Second National Bank of Galesburg, and the other by M. L. Smalley, cashier First National Bank of Galesburg.

6th. An agreement or lease between the owners of the Opera House on the south side the public square in Galesburg, and the city authorities, for the use of the Opera House for county purposes for the term of years signified by the obligations of the city, also the resolution of the city council for the payment of the actual cost of removal.

7th. A lease from C. Brechwald for a room in Concordia block.

We would further report that everything seems to be in readiness on the part of the city of Galesburg, for the removal; and would ask your honorable body to take such action as to the disposition of the above named effects, and as to the time of effecting the actual removal as may seem to you just and proper.

J. M. HOLYOKE,
Chairman of Commissioners.

Knoxville, Jan. 30, 1873.

Mr. Soles offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the sheriff and clerks remove their books and papers forthwith to Galesburg, in order to be in readiness to hold circuit court in said city, next Monday.

Mr. Hensley offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board, that the commissioners of public buildings proceed at once to remove the records of the county to Galesburg, so as not to delay the proceedings of February term of court.

Mr. Gale offered the following:

Resolved, That the committee on public buildings be directed to proceed at once, in conjunction with the officers of the county, to remove the county property to Galesburg.

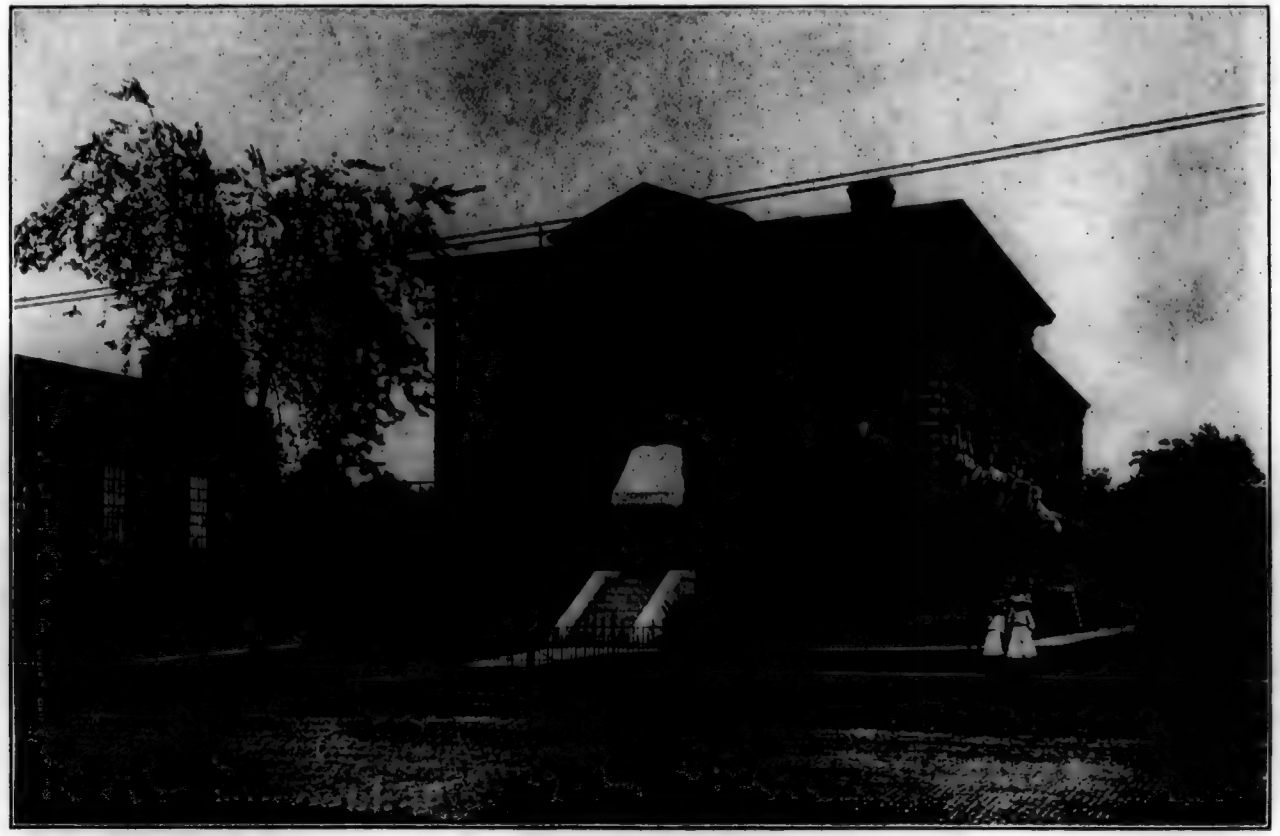
Resolved, That the deeds and abstracts in the hands of the commissioners be filed with the county clerk, and that the money in their hands be paid to the county treasurer, and held by him as a special fund for jail building purposes.

Resolved, That the clerk be directed to record the deeds and contracts received from the committee.

Mr. Hensley accepted the substitute of Mr. Gale, when the substitute was adopted and the resolution passed.

On motion adjourned until Thursday, February 27, 1873.

JAILS OF KNOX COUNTY



A brief account of the construction of the "Old Log Jail" was given at the close of the chapter on Minor Courts and Permanent Seat of Justice. By 1840 the question of a new jail was again considered. At the December term of that year of the County Commissioners court, the subject was formally acted upon, as shown by the following order:

ORDERED: That the clerk publish in the Peoria Press and Peoria Register notices for plans and specifications and sealed proposals for building a jail in the town of Knoxville to be two stories high, not larger than thirty by fifty feet nor smaller than twenty-five by forty-five feet, to include a dwelling in said building, said plans, specifications and sealed proposals to be received and opened on the 25th day of January, 1841; to be finished two years from the first Monday of March, 1841.

On January 26th, 1841, we find the following order in relation to the construction of the jail, plans and specifications for which were called for at the December term.

ORDERED: That the contract for building a jail in the town of Knoxville be let to Zelotes Cooley, in accordance to plans and specifications by him filed in clerk's office of the court for the sum of eight thousand, seven hundred and twenty-four dollars, provided that he enter into bond with good security approved by the court, and also that both parties agree to the article of agreement or contract to be entered into at regular March term of this court and to be finished in three years from March next, or as the parties can agree, said Zelotes Cooley and this court further agree to exchange the present jail lot for forty feet on the public square and twenty-six feet on North street to make square corner in center of the lot of Lot No. 5, in Block No. 6, on which to locate said jail, provided said Z. Cooley obtains a good title to the same.

Nevertheless, Zelotes Cooley never entered into a contract for the construction of the jail, and it nowhere appears of record that he had anything to do with it. The contract was made with Alvah Wheeler and the records show that all through the years 1842, 1843, 1844, and the beginning of 1845, he was working upon the building. The following entry, made March 5th, 1845, is a summing up of the whole transaction, and Mr. Wheeler is paid for the contract in full, $7,784.

Resolved, That the clerk be directed to record the deeds and contracts received from the committee.

Mr. Hensley accepted the substitute of Mr. Gale, when the substitute was adopted and the resolution passed.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasurer in favor of A. Wheeler for two thousand and forty-six dollars, in full for jail contract.

This jail is still standing on the west side of the public square in the City of Knoxville, and is now in use as a city prison. It would seem, from the following order entered upon the county commissioners' record, that it was not always well cared for.

"ORDERED: That the sheriff clean out the jail and not suffer the cells or debtors' apartments of the same to be used for any purpose whatever except for prisoners." The time was when a clean jail was an exception worthy of note, and not so very long ago either, if we are to credit the statements of the State Boards of Health and Charities. Knox county is to be congratulated on this early action of its commissioners.

The building was pretty thoroughly overhauled in 1863. We prefer, however, to tell the story of this building from the record of the board of supervisors. A movement for betterments began in 1861, when an unsuccessful attempt was made to start a new building. Another unsuccessful attempt to build was made in 1867, all of which will more fully and interestingly appear from the record herein inserted.

At the January meeting, 1861, Supervisor LeBaron offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to build a good jail in Knox county for the more effectual keeping of prisoners, which was seconded and determined in the negative.

The following report, submitted at the May meeting, 1863, shows the condition of the jail.

The undersigned committee on jail repairs, appointed at the last meeting of the board, would respectfully report:

That in pursuance of the duties enjoined upon us, we made a thorough and careful examination of the jail and found the reports of the grand jurors correct in their statements that thorough repairs were absolutely necessary; that the jail was not safe, a mere loophole for the escape of prisoners; that owing to the situation of the vault it was offensive and unclean to such a degree as to endanger the health of the prisoners and also the family having charge of the same.

Your committee examined several plans for the repairs, taking into account the cost and also the security to be gained, and adopted one which has nearly been carried into effect, to-wit: Lining the inner surface of the outer walls below with heavy boiled iron, riveted to 4½-inch iron bars, giving it great firmness, and affording space for deep countersinking, so that the riveting is perfectly smooth on the inside, and preventing the possibility of removing rivets, and the whole firmly bolted in such manner that the casing could not be removed even by the use of suitable tools, without making much noise, and a great length of time spent thereon. To obviate the stench and enable the jail to be kept clean, your committee has caused holes eight inches in diameter to be cut through the solid rock and iron casings, on an angle of 45 degrees and are now engaged in erecting a brick vault on the outside of the jail twelve feet long by five feet wide, to be drawn in when a suitable distance from the ground and a chimney or flue therefrom to extend above the roof of the building, this arrangement, with close-fitting covers on the iron seats inside of the jail, with little care on the part of the jailor, will render the jail as free from smell as any building unexposed to the sun's rays can be expected to be.

When the iron work is painted white, and the stone work well whitewashed, the rooms will be as light as before the lining was put in.

Your committee would recommend, if deemed necessary by the board to have the additional room, that the upper rooms be similarly incased (the rooms being now utterly worthless for prison purposes). This might be done with much lighter material, and would be sufficiently secure for parties imprisoned or held for minor offenses, thus relieving them from the necessity of being locked up in cells during the night and leaving additional room for the safe keeping of desperate characters, besides enabling the jailer to keep the unfortunate, or those who have perhaps committed a minor offense for the first time, from the contamination of the older and more desperate characters.

Your committee would report expenses incurred so far, as follows:

Bill of Miles Smith for iron, freight, etc	$512.70
Bill of William Armstrong for labor, etc	376.11
Bill of Joseph Schumaker, draying	4.00
Bill of Z. W. Stevens, lime, sand, etc	23.20
Bill of James McCracken for brick	17.50
Bill of Daniel Fox, hauling brick	6.00
Making	$939.51

The additional expense which will have to be incurred to complete the improvements your committee have in contemplation, is estimated at about $50, making the whole expense for repairing the prison department of the jail cost a trifle less than $1000.

We have estimated that the cost of making the repairs to the upper rooms of the jail, contemplated in a former portion of the report, will be about the sum of $700.

Respectfully submitted,

C. ARMS,
JOHN S. WINTER,
Committee.

Your committee would further report that an examination of the dwelling part of the jail building satisfied your committee that considerable repairs were necessary, the plastering and paper dirty and broken, and the fencing broken down, posts rotted, etc. The sheriff called our attention to these matters, but we were disposed to refer the matter to the board, as further repairs are required, to-wit: Pointing up of brick work, repairs to roof, and the building should be painted and pointed. But the sheriff deemed the immediate repairs so necessary that he proceeded to have the same done and for which bills will be presented.

C. ARMS,
JOHN S. WINTER,
Committee.

On motion of Supervisor Potter said report was accepted and approved.

January, 1866.—Mr. Harden offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That whereas the board of supervisors have examined the condition of the county jail, feel that the frequent escapes of prisoners is entirely chargeable to the culpable negligence of the proper custodians of said jail and recommend that a committee of three be appointed to investigate the causes and apply the proper remedy. Resolution adopted, when the chairman appointed Messrs. Harden, Gray and Arms committee, as provided for by the resolution.

April, 1866.—Mr. Arms from the committee to which was referred the matter of the frequent escape of prisoners from the county jail,

Reported, That your committee appointed to investigate the cause of the frequent escape of prisoners proceeded to obtain such evidence as came within their reach, and report that they referred the matter to the grand jury to take such action upon it as in their wisdom was necessary.

September, 1867.—Mr. Keightley from jail committee presented the following monthly report:

In regard to the requirements of a resolution passed at the last meeting of this board the undersigned, a portion of the committee on jail and jail expenses, would submit the following report:

They visited the jail and examined it thoroughly, and found that the same is unsafe and insecure, and not sufficient to hold prisoners of bad and desperate characters incarcerated therein. That the cells of same are badly ventilated, damp and unhealthy. That in the opinion of this portion of the committee said jail cannot be made safe, secure and comfortable without incurring a very large expense to the county. That a portion of said committee have taken considerable pains, and trouble to see and examine other jails and find the one in Henry county in every and all respects, as to security of prisoners and safety of health, as also its general arrangements, to be such a one as this, or any county in need of a jail, requires. That such a jail could be built by this county, by working in the material of the old jail, for $25,000 or $30,000. That Henry county jail will accommodate thirty prisoners; that our present jail has to be guarded night and day to keep its prisoners from escaping, at a great expense to the county.

This portion of the committee would recommend the building of a new jail, substantially upon the plan of the one in Henry county.

The committee further report, that in their opinion, prisoners cannot be dieted with present prices of provisions for less than 75 cents per day.

H. N. KEIGHTLEY,
H. H. WOOD,

Mr. Vaughn moved that hereafter 62½ cents per day be allowed for dieting prisoners. Lost. Yeas, Messrs. Meek, Gale, Conger, Newell, Beadle, Hamrick, Swigart, Johnston, Vaughn and Gibbs, 10. Nays, Messrs. Harden, Clay, Whiting, McKee, Dunlap, Wykoff, Sumner, Charles, Keightley, Chambers, Hall, Wood and Shaffer, 13.

Mr. McKee moved that 50 cents per day be allowed in future for dieting prisoners. Lost. Yeas, Messrs. McKee, Dunlap, Sumner, Charles, Hamrick, Wood and Shaffer, 7. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Gale, Conger, Whiting, Wykoff, Newell, Keightley, Beadle, Swigart, Johnston, Chambers, Hall, Vaughn and Gibbs, 16.

Mr. Harden moved that 75 cents per day be allowed for dieting prisoners. Carried. Yeas, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Gale, Conger, Whiting, Wykoff, Beadle, Swigart, Johnston, Chambers, Hall and Gibbs, 13. Nays, Messrs. McKee, Charles, Hamrick, Wood, Shaffer and Vaughn, 6.

Adjourned until 2 o'clock P. M.

January, 1868.—Mr. McKee offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this board will hereafter allow but fifty cents per day for dieting prisoners while in the county jail. Lost. Yeas, Messrs. Clay, McKee, Dunlap, Wykoff, Newell, Hamrick, Johnston, Shaffer and Vaughn, 9. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Sumner, Beadle, Swigart, Miles, Chambers, Hall, Wood and Gibbs, 14.

In April, 1869, an election was held to decide upon the question of the removal of the county seat from Knoxville to Galesburg. The returns gave the victory to Knoxville, when the matter was taken into court, where it remained until January, 1873, when by the decision of the State Supreme court, the county seat was moved to Galesburg. The decision was read at January special meeting of that year, when by a formal vote of the board of supervisors, the removal was at once made effective. The Knoxville interests soon began to circulate petitions calling for another vote on the question at a special election for that purpose to be held one week after the general election, to be held in the month of November. At the March special meeting, 1873, a movement for the construction of a new county jail was begun. In the interest of Knoxville, Mr. Lewis Andrews had applied to Hon. Thomas F. Tipton, judge of the Circuit court of McLean county, for an injunction restraining the board of supervisors of Knox county from building a jail. No notice had been given to Galesburg parties, and upon an ex-parte hearing, a temporary injunction was granted and served upon the board at this March meeting. Hon. E. P. Williams, of Galesburg, Illinois, was employed by the board of supervisors to look after the matter. Upon a full hearing of the case before the Hon. Henry B. Hopkins, judge of the Circuit court of Peoria county, Illinois, the injunction was dissolved. An appeal was taken to the Supreme court of the state, where the decree of the Circuit court of Peoria county was affirmed.

The steps for the building of the jail at Galesburg will more fully appear from the following record.

An adjourned meeting of the board was held at city of Galesburg, February 27th, 1873.

Present—Hon. A. C. Clay, chairman; members, Messrs. P. H. Smith, M. C. Bates, W. S. Gale, J. M. Morse, B. S. Stanley, H. R. Sanderson, John Junk, Heber Gillis, Daniel Wainwright, Peter Godfrey, George A. Charles, G. G.

Stearns, L. W. Benson, Wm. Swigart, R. W. Miles, H. E. Stevens, J. W. Hensley, Wm. West and John Wilson. John S. Winter, clerk. A. W. Berggren, sheriff.

Mr. Wood presented the following statement from commissioners on public buildings:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

* * * The directions of your honorable board have in all respects been complied with. That the deeds and leases are deposited with the county clerk and are now matters of record; and the sum of twenty thousand dollars, furnished by the city of Galesburg, as aforesaid, is now in the county treasury.

Respectfully,

J. M. HOLYOKE,
Chairman of Committee.

On motion the report was ordered recorded and published.

Mr. Gale, from special committee to procure plans and estimates for a county jail, reported that said committee have examined the jails in the counties of Henry and Peoria, and examined various plans submitted to them; that they have procured from Mr. Quayle, of Peoria, plans modeled after the Peoria jail, with some reduction of size, which they beg leave to submit for the consideration of the board.

Mr. Charles moved that the jail committee be directed to report plans and specifications for building a jail in the city of Galesburg which shall not cost to exceed $50,000 and make such report to a meeting of the board to be held two weeks from today.

Mr. Gale offered the following as a substitute:

That the committee be directed to have complete specifications with the plan for a jail filed in the county clerk's office, that the clerk be directed to advertise for proposals to be examined by this board at a meeting two weeks hence, that the committee in the meantime be instructed to further scrutinize the plan with a view of proposing such changes at such meeting as they may find desirable.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Bates proposed amendments, but neither meeting a second.

Mr. Charles offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That the clerk of this board be required to have published in the Chicago Times and Chicago Journal, and the weekly papers of this county, the following notice.

NOTICE

Sealed proposals will be received at the county clerk's office up to 10 o'clock A. M. of April 14th, 1873, for a new jail to be built in the city of Galesburg, County of Knox and State of Illinois, according to plans and specifications to be filed in the county clerk's office; to be completed in eight months after the letting of the contract. The board of supervisors reserving the right to reject any and all bids not considered advantageous to the county.

By order of the board.

The yeas and nays being called, resulting: Yeas, Messrs. Wainwright, Godfrey, Charles, Stearns, Miles, Hensley, West and Wilson, 8. Nays, Messrs. Smith, Bates, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Gillis, Wood, Curtis, Benson, Swigart, Stephens and Ogden, 15. Lost.

The question being upon the substitute of Mr. Gale, it was carried: Yeas, Messrs. Bates, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Gillis, Wood, Curtis, Benson, Stephens, Ogden and Chairman, 14. Nays, Messrs. Smith, Wainwright, Godfrey, Charles, Stearns, Swigart, Miles, Hensley, West and Wilson, 10. Absent, Messrs. Leighton and Soles, 2.

Mr. Miles moved to amend motion as substituted, by postponing the time for meeting of the board for the examination of proposals, until the second Tuesday in April. Ruled out of order.

The substitute of Mr. Gale was then adopted. Yeas, Messrs. Bates, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Gillis, Wood, Curtis, Benson, Stephens, Ogden and Chairman, 14. Nays, Messrs. Smith, Wainwright, Godfrey, Charles, Stearns, Swigart, Miles, Hensley, West and Wilson, 10.

On motion of Mr. Ogden the board adjourned for two weeks from today, to meet again at this place.

March Special Meeting.—A March special meeting of the board was held at the city of Galesburg, March 13th, 1873.

Present, same as at last meeting with G. V. Dieterich, H. P. Wood, A. S. Curtis, Wm. A. Leighton, M. B. Ogden and James Soles, added.

Board opened by proclamation.

Mr. Gale moved that the special order, being examination of proposals for building county jail at Galesburg, take precedence of the reading of the minutes of former meeting of the board, and that the board now proceed to open bids for construction of jail. Carried.

The sheriff, by his deputy, served a writ of injunction upon the board of supervisors, and each member thereof present, at the suit of Lewis Andrews, granted by Hon. Thomas F. Tipton, judge of the Circuit court of McLean county, enjoining said board of supervisors from "Letting any contract to build any county jail, or county prison, or any building of any kind or description whatsoever, to be used, or purposed to be used, for the confinement of prisoners, or for any other purpose, for which a county jail or county prison is commonly used, and enjoining and restraining said board of supervisors from taking any further steps whatsoever towards the building of a county jail or county prison."

Mr. Charles moved that the board adjourn until the 14th day of April next. Yeas 9. Nays 14. Excused 1. Absent 1.

Mr. Hazzard, one of the parties having made a bid for building county jail, on behalf of himself and other bidders, asked leave to withdraw their bids from examination. On motion of Mr. Charles the request was granted, when several bids were withdrawn.

Mr. Charles moved that proposals filed by parties not present, be returned to the parties unopened. Lost. Yeas, Messrs. Wainwright, Godfrey, Charles, Stearns, Swigart, Miles, Leighton, West, Wilson and Ogden, 10. Nays, Messrs. Smith, Bates, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Gillis, Wood, Curtis, Benson, Stephens and Soles, 14.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this board will proceed to let the contract for building a jail, conditioned upon the dissolution of the injunction, Provided, the bids when opened shall prove to be satisfactory. Adopted. Yeas, Messrs. Bates, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Gillis, Wood, Curtis, Benson, Stephens and Soles, 13. Nays, Messrs. Smith, Wainwright, Godfrey, Charles, Stearns, Swigart, Miles, Leighton, West and Wilson, 10. Excused, Mr. Ogden, 1. Absent, Mr. Hensley, 1.

The clerk called attention of the board to the wording of injunction, and his duties.

The board, on motion of Mr. Gale, proceeded to open proposals, received, those previously withdrawn having been returned.

The bids received were as follows:

Bid of Norris & Hinckley	$43,700
Bid of Charles Ulrickson, Peoria	37,150
Bid of Hiram H. Pierce, Peoria	36,000
Bid of Frost Mfg. Co., Galesburg	39,750
Bid of J. P. Chapman, Galesburg	41,346
Bid of Samuel J. Parry, Galesburg	41,000
Bid of A. Wallbaun, Chicago	42,650
Bid of James Hazzard & Son, Peoria	35,500
or for brick and stone work	21,643
Bid of James Sherman, Batavia	39,000
or for masonry	20,000
Bid of F. W. Menke & Co., Quincy, for brick and stone work	22,972
Bid of Johnson & Askew, Macomb, for brick and stone work	28,000

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the chair appoint a committee to compare the bids offered and to report for the consideration of the board this afternoon the most favorable bid, with contract and bonds, it being understood that the contract and bonds are to be conditioned upon the dissolution of the injunction.

The chair appointed Messrs. Ogden, Miles and Wood said committee.

Mr. Charles presented the following protest, which after being read, was ordered spread upon the records.

"We, the undersigned, supervisors of Knox county, do hereby solemnly protest and remonstrate against any action being taken by the board for the erection of a county jail, or any other county buildings in the city of Galesburg, or for the outlay or expenditure of any of the county funds for such purpose; of the entering into any contracts, or incurring any indebtedness for such purpose; and demand that this protest be spread upon the records of this board, for the following reasons, viz.:

That any such action by this board would be wholly illegal, and in defiance of the injunction issued by a court of competent jurisdiction and duly served, and in contempt of such court; and in violation of our solemn oaths to support and abide by the law.

Because any contract or contracts entered into by this board, with any person or persons, for the erection of a county jail or any other public county building in the city of Galesburg would be wholly illegal and void, and in defiance of said injunction, and in contempt of the court issuing such injunction.

Because a majority of the tax payers and legal voters of this county are not in favor of the county seat being and remaining in the city of Galesburg, and are opposed to any county buildings being erected in said city, or any indebtedness being incurred, or funds of the county being expended for any such purpose. That at the election held upon the relocation of the county seat, in the year 1869, it was determined by the Supreme court of this state, in adjudicating the effects of such election, that after casting out the entire vote of Knox township, except 311 votes, there was but about 100 majority in favor of removal; whereas it is a well known fact, and admitted by the pleadings in said cause, that there were legally cast in said Knox township about 700 legal votes against removal, there would have been a clear majority against removal of about 200. It, therefore, appearing that the real expression of the voters of the county at that time was against removal, the inference is unavoidable that a majority of the voters of said county were and are opposed to the location of the county seat in the city of Galesburg.

Because the question of a relocation of the county seat is now pending before the people of said county, and due notice has been given to determine the will of the people of said county, whether the county seat shall remain in the city of Galesburg or be removed to the city of Knoxville, by a vote to be taken at an election to be held in said county in November next. Common justice demands that the people of said county should determine at which place they desire their county seat should remain and be located before this board proceed to erect any other county buildings, or incur any indebtedness or expenditure of moneys for such purpose. That the interests of the county will be best subserved by awaiting the final decision of the people of the county. That the erection of county buildings before such question is determined would be unjust to the tax payers and electors of this county, and injurious to the best interests of the citizens.

Because at the time this board was elected by the people it was not known, nor expected, that during the existence of the present board, the county seat would be removed to the city of Galesburg. And further, it was not known that this board would proceed to take any measures towards the erection of any county buildings in said county or incur any indebtedness beyond the ordinary expenses of the county, and that a decent respect for the wishes of the people demands that before this board take any such action the people of the county should have an opportunity to express by their votes whether they are in favor of any public buildings being erected in said county, and whether any such indebtedness should be incurred, or means expended; that the people should at least be allowed through their representatives elected, after due notice of any such expenditure, whether they are in favor of any such proceeding of this board.

Because, if at the election to be held in November next, a majority of the voters of said county should be in favor of relocating the county seat in the city of Knoxville, there are in said city all necessary county buildings (with the exception of some few repairs to the county jail), sufficient to answer the needs of the county, for many years to come; in fact, equal if not better than similar buildings in a majority of the counties of this state.

Because the people of Knox county are grievously oppressed with taxes. That the county is now largely in debt, and to pay off such indebtedness, will require a large amount of tax to be collected from the tax payers of the county. That the experience of other counties that have incurred large indebtedness in the erection of county buildings, or for other purposes, teaches that the burden of such indebtedness, and payment of consequent large taxes, prostrate the general interests of the county and largely decreases the value of the lands, products and property of such counties, and that the creation of such an indebtedness upon this county at the present time, without first awaiting an expression of the wishes of the tax payers of this county, would justly call forth their severest censure and be in violation of our sworn duty to protect the public good, and faithfully subserve the public welfare.

Because the county is so largely in debt and without any money in the treasury, or present means to discharge such debt, so that to increase any indebtedness would be wholly illegal. That before the board can properly proceed to erect, or cause to be erected, any county buildings in this county a tax must be levied and the necessary funds provided. That such funds do not now exist, and that to proceed to erect any county buildings without such necessary funds being provided, would be wholly unwarranted by law and all contracts entered into for such purposes would be unlawful and of no effect, further than to involve the county in expensive and useless litigation.

Because the promised donations of the city of Galesburg towards the erection of such county buildings, and lands on which to locate the same, are wholly illegal and void, as lately decided by the Supreme court of the state in a similar case, and were and are fraudulently made for the purpose of deceiving the tax payers of this county. And whereas it appears by the decision of our Supreme court that all such donations can be recovered by the city of Galesburg at the expense of the county and entail upon the tax payers of the county an additional binder, it is gross injustice to the tax payers of the county to erect such buildings upon and in consideration of such promises, now known to be void, and of no effect.

And, finally, for the reasons we have suggested and many others which we might urge, justice to ourselves, to our constituents, to the tax payers and the people of the county, all demand that we protest and remonstrate against the unwarranted, hasty and unjust action of this board. Believing, as we do, that the tax payers of this county are already sadly oppressed with the burden of heavy taxes, and that could they be heard, they would express themselves by a very large majority against the unjust and hasty action of this board, and against the unjust and oppressive taxation which it is proposed to inflict upon them. And further, knowing as we do, that the farming and producing interests of the county are suffering grievously from the unjust and excessive extortion of monopolies, in addition to the heavy load of necessary taxation and the decreased value of their products, that they look to us as guardians of their interests and of the county finances, to protect them as far as lies in our power from any unjust oppression, such as is proposed to be inflicted upon them by a majority of this board. We would consider ourselves direlect in our duty did we not in their names present this protest and remonstrance, believing our constituents and the people of the county generally will sustain us and be rejoiced in an action.

We, therefore, respectfully ask the board to consider this remonstrance and to spread the same upon their record.

Mr. Wood from special committee reported as follows:

To the Hon. Board of Supervisors:

Your committee, to whom the bids for building county jail and jailor's residence were referred, would report:

That the bid of Messrs. James Hazzard & Son was the lowest offered, being for the sum of thirty-five thousand, five hundred dollars ($35,500), but they not being willing to enter into a contract, or stand to that bid for two weeks, provided the injunction served on the board of supervisors be dissolved in that time, we accept the bid of Hiram Pierce for the sum of thirty-six thousand dollars ($36,000), he agreeing to stand to said bid for said two weeks and execute good and sufficient securities to that effect.

M. B. OGDEN,
H. P. WOOD.

On motion the report of the committee was accepted and adopted.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the committee appointed to procure plans for the jail be authorized to close contract with and obtain bonds from Hiram H. Pierce, on the terms of his bid, Provided, the injunction obtained against the board shall be dissolved within two weeks from this date.

Mr. Gale also offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the same committee be authorized to exchange the lot deeded to the county by A. N. Bancroft for another lot, provided by such exchange a lot equally well situated and large in size and better adapted for a site for a jail can be obtained without any further cost to the county, and to locate the jail on such lot.

Mr. Morse moved that when this board adjourn it adjourn to meet at this place two weeks from today at 10 o'clock A. M. Carried.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That E. P. Williams, Esq., be appointed by the board to apply for a dissolution of the injunction obtained against this board.

While the board of supervisors was awaiting a final decision of the injunction case restraining it from doing anything towards building a jail the second vote on the removal of the county seat was taken, "being an election for and against the removal of the county seat of the County of Knox from Galesburg to Knoxville," held November 11th, 1873. The canvass of votes and certificate of the result was filed with the county clerk and recorded in Vol. D of Supervisors Record, page 283, and is as follows:

ABSTRACT OF VOTES

For and against removal of the county seat of Knox county, State of Illinois, from Galesburg, its present location, to the city of Knoxville, in said county, at an election held in said county on Tuesday, the 11th day of November, A. D. One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy-Three.

For removal, received three thousand three hundred and nine (3309) votes.

Against removal, received three thousand seven hundred and eighty-five (3785) votes.

We the undersigned justices of the peace of the county above named were this day taken to the assistance of the county clerk of said county, and the poll books for the aforesaid election were opened and the foregoing abstract made in our presence, at the clerk's office at Galesburg in said county, this 15th day of November, A. D. 1873.

ISAAC MASTIN,
Police Magistrate of City of Knoxville.
G. A. MARSH,
Police Magistrate of City of Galesburg.

State of Illinois, } ss.
Knox County. }

I, John S. Winter, clerk of the county court within and for the county and state aforesaid, do certify that the foregoing is a correct statement of the votes cast "for removal" and "against removal" of the county seat of Knox county from the city of Galesburg, its present location, to the city of Knoxville, in said county, at an election held in the different towns, wards and precincts in the County of Knox, in said state, on Tuesday, the 11th day of November, A. D. 1873.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said court, at my office in Galesburg, in said county, this 15th day of November, A. D. 1873.

(SEAL) JOHN S. WINTER,
County Clerk.

At the request of one-third of the members of the board a special meeting was called for December 2nd, 1873, when the board took further action upon the question of building a jail, as follows:

December Special Meeting, 1873.—At the special meeting of the board of supervisors of Knox County, pursuant to a call of the county clerk, at the request of one-third of the members of said board, held at the court house in the city of Galesburg, in said county, on Tuesday, the 2nd day of December, A. D. 1873. Present, Hon. A. C. Clay, Chairman. Supervisors, P. M. Shoop, O. Beadle, W. S. Gale, L. W. Benson, J. M. Morse, G. V. Dieterich, Wm. Swigart, Jas. L. McCornack, B. S. Stanley, Jas. Johnston, H. R. Sanderson, John Sloan, Geo. A. Charles, Jas. H. Nicholson, H. P. Wood, L. D. Shinn and H. J. Vaughn. John S. Winter, Clerk. A. W. Berggren, Sheriff.

Board opened by proclamation.

Mr. Sanderson moved that the business of this meeting be confined to such action as may be necessary for the early construction of a jail for Knox county, and the examination and approval of official bonds.

Messrs. Junk, Wainwright and Robson entered.

Messrs. Campbell and Harlan appointed to fill vacancies admitted to seats in the board.

Mr. Swigart moved to amend, by postponing all action in regard to a county jail, until the board received notice that the injunction pending in the Supreme court is dissolved. Lost. Yeas, Messrs. Wainwright, Harlan, Swigart, McCornack, Nicholson and Shinn, 6. Nays, Messrs. Campbell, Shoop, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Robson, Charles, Wood, Beadle, Benson, Johnston, Sloan and Vaughn, 16.

The motion of Mr. Sanderson was then adopted.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is expedient to take at once the preliminary steps towards building a jail, and to proceed with the building, if an advantageous contract can be made; provided it shall appear that the entire cost of building and all the contingent expenses shall not exceed $20,000 in addition to the amount now in the county treasury as a special jail building fund.

Resolved, That there be appointed at this meeting, a committee of five supervisors, to be called the jail building committee; that it shall be the duty of such committee to examine and revise the plans and specifications now on file in the clerk's office; that the committee be authorized to make such modifications as seem expedient, not materially increasing the expense or changing the style.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the clerk, under the direction of such committee, to advertise for proposals for building such jail. Such proposals to be opened by the board at its next meeting. The board reserving the right to reject all the proposals, if none be found satisfactory.

Resolved, That the clerk of the board act as clerk of the committee and keep a record of all the proceedings of the committee.

One-half past one o'clock, P. M.—Board met pursuant to adjournment.

The question being on the adoption of the resolutions offered by Mr. Gale, they were adopted.

Mr. Gale moved that the chair appoint the committee provided for by the resolutions, and that the chairman of the board be a member of said committee, and chairman thereof. Withdrawn.

Mr. Sanderson moved that the chair appoint committee of five, provided for by Mr. Gale's resolutions, constituting a jail building committee, and that the chairman of this board be added to such committee, and be chairman thereof. Adopted.

Mr. Sanderson moved to suspend the rule. Carried, when

Mr. Sanderson moved the appointment of a Committee on old county buildings, with George A. Charles as chairman, with instructions to report at the next meeting of the board, their condition and the disposition proper to be made of the same. Carried. The chair appointed Messrs. Charles, Beadle, and Harlan such committee.

The chair appointed Messrs. Gale, Charles, Sloan, Wood and Campbell as members of the jail building committee.

At the request of members, the clerk read specifications for building a new jail.

January Meeting, 1874.—There were present at this meeting, Hon. A. C. Clay, chairman. Supervisors, Messrs. W. W. Campbell, H. P. Wood, P. M. Shoop, O. Beadle, W. S. Gale, L. W. Benson, J. M. Morse, Wm. Swigart, B. S. Stanley, R. W. Miles, Daniel Wainwright, James Johnston, Geo. W. Harlan, John Sloan, Geo. A. Charles, J. H. Nicholson, C. K. Harvey, L. D. Shinn, H. J. Vaughn. J. S. Winter, clerk. A. W. Berggren, sheriff.

Board opened by proclamation.

Mr. Clay, from the jail building committee, reported, that they have as directed, examined the plan and specifications for jail in the clerk's office; that they have made some changes which meet with the unanimous approval of the committee.

That they had caused to be advertised a call for sealed proposals; that as there are in attendance several persons interested in such proposals, they recommend that the board proceed at once to examine such proposals. On motion the report of the jail committee was accepted and adopted.

On motion of Mr. Sanderson, the changes made by the special jail committee in the plans and specifications for building county jail were read, and on motion the amendments and alterations made by the committee were approved by the board.

The clerk opened and read the bids, as follows:

F. C. Smith, Galesburg	$38,300

On motion of Mr. Sanderson, all bids received were referred to the special jail committee.

Jan. 15, 1874.—The jail building committee to whom was referred the proposals received for building jail, made the following

REPORT

That they have examined the proposals referred to them, and find that the lowest bid for building jail complete, is made by H. Andrews, for the sum of $31,500. Your committee are unable to find any person acquainted with said Andrews, and his bid contains no other reference to his residence or ability to perform the contract, if given to him, than the address of his letter, which is dated "Chicago." Your committe would further report that they have telegraphed to W. F. Bushnell, the next lowest bidder, being for $33,000 to meet the committee tomorrow morning; and if he has had understanding of the modifications made in the plan and specifications, and furnishes good and sufficient bond, your committee are of the opinion the contract should be awarded to him. Galesburg, Jan. 14, 1874.

In the absence of W. F. Bushnell, and the uncertainty when he may be heard from,

Mr. Gale moved that the bid of Ira R. Stevens, for building the jail complete for the sum of ($34,900) thirty four thousand nine hundred dollars, be accepted.

Mr. Junk entered.

On motion the further consideration of Mr. Gale's motion was postponed until half past one o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon session.—Board met pursuant to adjournment. Present same as in the morning, and Mr. Shoop.

The order of business being Mr. Gale's motion to accept the bid of Ira R. Stevens for building county jail, the motion after some discussion was adopted. Yeas—Messrs. Shoop, Campbell, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Robson, Charles, Harvey, Wood, Miles, Johnston, Sloan, Nicholson, Vaughn, 15.

Nays—Messrs. Junk, Wainwright, and McCornack, 3.

Excused, Mr. Swigart.

Absent, Messrs. Sanderson, Harlan, Beadle, Benson, Shinn, and Soles, 6.

Mr. Stevens appeared before the board, and presented his bond in the sum of $10,000, signed by himself as principal, and by Samuel J. Parry, Samuel Hitchcock, E. P. Breckinridge and George W. Brown as securities, conditioned for the faithful performance of his contract.

Mr. Gale moved that the bond of Ira R. Stevens be approved, and the chairman and clerk be authorized to sign contract on the part of the board with said Stevens for building jail. Adopted.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the special jail building committee continue in charge of the building until the board shall otherwise provide. That the chairman of the committee act as superintendent with such assistance as the committee may provide for.

Mr. Gale presented the following proposition:

GALESBURG, Ill., Jan. 13, 1874.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois:

GENTLEMEN—I hereby propose and agree to sell to the county my residence in block 45, adjoining the lot donated by the city of Galesburg for a jail lot, for the sum of twenty-six hundred and fifty dollars.

Respectfully,

ABIGAL BURLINGHAM,
HATTIE BURLINGHAM.

And in connection with such proposition offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the board accept the proposition of Mrs. Burlingham to sell to the county lot 8, block 45 for the sum of $2,650, and that an order issue to her for that amount, payable upon the delivery of proper conveyance to the county clerk, showing complete chain of title.

Resolved, That the chairman of jail building committee be directed to dispose of the house standing on the lot, to the best advantage.

On motion of Mr. Morse, the board took a recess of half an hour to enable members to examine lots on which it is proposed to build the jail.

On resuming business, Mr. Charles moved to postpone further consideration of the resolutions until tomorrow morning. Carried.

Mr. Beadle, from special committee, in reference to disposal of county buildings at Knoxville, made the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

We, your committee, appointed to report what disposition should be made of the county buildings, located in the city of Knoxville, would recommend that they be offered at public auction, and sold to the highest bidder for cash.

O. BEADLE,
G. W. HARLAN,
Committee.

Mr. Charles, of special committee, made the following minority report:

To the Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

We, the undersigned, being appointed a committee at the special meeting of the board, held on the 2d day of December, 1873, "to consider and report to this board what disposition had better be made of the county buildings in the city of Knoxville," do report, that we recommend that the clerk of this board be hereby authorized and required to make a quit-claim deed in consideration of one dollar, to all the county buildings standing on the public square in said city of Knoxville, to the city council of said city. Also to include in said deed, the jail and lot upon which it stands, being the south part of lot No. one, in block No. five, with the exception that the county continues to occupy said jail as long as the county desires; with the privilege at any time to confine insane persons, or others that the county may see proper. Such deed or deeds to be reported to this board for approval.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE A. CHARLES.

Mr. Sanderson moved that the minority report be accepted by the board and adopted. On which motion the yeas and nays were called, resulting:

Yeas—Messrs. Shoop, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Robson, Harvey, Charles, Miles, Sloan and Vaughn, 13.

Nays—Messrs. Campbell, Wainwright, Wood, Beadle, Swigart McCornack, Johnston and Nicholson, 8.

Absent—Messrs. Harlan, Benson, Shinn and Soles, 4.

So the motion prevailed.

Jan. 16, 1874.—Board met pursuant to adjournment.

Present—Hon. A. C. Clay, chairman; Supervisors—Messrs. Campbell, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Robson, Wainwright, Harlan, Charles, Harvey, Beadle, Benson, Swigart, Miles, McCornack, Johnston, Sloan, and Nicholson.

The special order being the resolution of Mr. Gale accepting the proposition of Mrs. Burlingham for the sale of lot adjoining jail lot.

Mr. Harvey offered the following substitute:

Whereas, It appears that the lot donated by the city of Galesburg to Knox county, for the location of the county jail is not large enough for that purpose, and it appears that an additional lot must be purchased at a cost of not less than $2,600.00; and it further appearing that a lot suitable for such purpose can be purchased from the city of Galesburg, at a cost of about $1,500.00 and the reconveyance of the lot already donated by the city of Galesburg; be it

Resolved, That a quit-claim deed be made by the board of supervisors to the City of Galesburg for the lot already donated, in consideration of the lot now occupied by said city as a wood lot, on the corner of Simmons and Cedar streets, to be conveyed to the county by said city, and that the sum of $1,500.00 in addition be paid to said city, in case of the conveyance of said last mentioned lot, provided, that said lot be conveyed by the city of Galesburg to the county within thirty days from this date, and grant to the county the use of the sewer on Broad street for drainage, without costs.

After some discussion, on motion of Mr. Campbell, further consideration of substitute of Mr. Harvey was postponed until afternoon.

Afternoon session—Mr. Harvey's substitute for resolution of Mr. Gale in reference to purchase of additional jail lot being in order, after further discussion was rejected.

Yeas—Messrs. Dieterich, Sanderson, Junk, Robson, Wainwright, Harvey, Benson, Swigart, McCornack and Nicholson, 10.

Nays—Messrs. Campbell, Gale, Morse, Stanley, Harlan, Charles, Beadle, Miles, Johnston, Sloan and Vaughn, 11.

The question recurring on the passage of Mr. Gale's resolutions, the same were adopted.

Yeas—Messrs. Campbell, Gale, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, Junk, Robson, Harlan, Charles, Beadle, Benson, Miles, McCornack, Johnston, Sloan and Vaughan, 16.

Nays—Messrs. Dieterich, Harlan, Harvey, Swigart and Nicholson, 5.

The clerk presented deeds in accordance with resolutions of yesterday, granting the public buildings in Knoxville to that city, which deeds on motion of Mr. Gale, were approved by the board.

July adjourned meeting, 1874.—Mr. Gale offered the following resolutions and moved that they be laid over until tomorrow morning, or until after disposing of special order:

Resolved, That the jail building committee be authorized to consent, on behalf of the county, to such assessment as may be made against the property of the county by the City of Galesburg, for the drainage of Cherry street, provided such assessment should, in the judgment of the committee, be fair and reasonable, and for the interest of the county.

Resolved, That the jail building committee be authorized to negotiate for the lot owned by Bancroft, between the jail lot and South street, and report to the board, or contract for said lot or part thereof in behalf of the county, if in their judgment the interest of the county may require.

Mr. Gale called up the resolution, authorizing the jail building committee to assent, on the part of the county, to such assessments as might be required, to be levied on county property by the city of Galesburg in constructing a sewer in Cherry street; and the board being advised in relation thereto, the same was adopted.

Action on the second resolution of Mr. Gale's was postponed until tomorrow morning.

July 28, 1874.—Mr. Sumner offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the jail building be directed to build a suitable and substantial fence around the jail lots, the kind of fence and manner of building to be by and under the instruction of the board.

On motion of Mr. Sumner, Messrs. Miles. Dieterich and Campbell were appointed a committee to obtain plan and specifications for building fence on jail lots, with instructions to report this afternoon.

Mr. Stanley moved that the same committee be instructed to report on the cost of building walk in front of jail lot, and necessary stone walks to front and north doors of jail. Carried.

Mr. Gale called up his resolution in regard to the purchase of additional grounds for jail building.

Mr. Junk moved to lay the matter on the table, on which the yeas and nays were demanded, resulting:

Yeas—Messrs. Junk, Deatherage, Wainwright, Sumner, Eiker, Temple, Johnston, Nicholson, Wilder and Ogden, 10.

Nays—Messrs. Campbell, Gale, Dieterich, Stanley, Sanderson, DeLong, Crane, Donason, Swigart, Miles and Sloan, 11. Lost.

Mr. Sanderson moved to amend by authorizing the jail committee to purchase the south half of the Bancroft lot, at a cost not exceeding six hundred dollars.

Afternoon session.—Mr. Sumner moved to refer the matter of purchase of additional jail lot to a special committee. Lost.

Mr. Sumner then moved to postpone action until the next meeting of the board. Lost.

Mr. Sanderson withdrew his amendment, and Mr. Gale by consent modified the resolution to read as follows:

Resolved, That the jail building committee be authorized to ascertain on what terms the lot, or south half of the lot, owned by Bancroft, between the jail lots and South street, can be obtained, and report to the board at its next meeting.

Resolution as modified, adopted.

Mr. Dieterich, from special committee on fence and sidewalks for jail, reported an estimated cost for iron fence in front of jail lots, and close board fence on the other three sides, and also for stone walks to front door, and door of sheriff's office. Report accepted.

Mr. Sanderson moved that the jail building committee be directed to build a tight board fence on the north, east and south sides of jail lot, and a good substantial picket fence in front, and where necessary on said lots. Carried.

September meeting, 1874.—Mr. Gale moved that the jail building committee be instructed to build sidewalk in front of jail lot of Bloomington concrete, similar to the walks now being laid in the public square by the City of Galesburg.

Mr. Swigart moved to amend by substituting stone walks. Lost. Motion of Mr. Gale was then adopted.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the jail building committee be authorized to procure bedsteads and bedding for so many of the cells as it appears to be necessary to use, and such other furniture for the jail rooms and the sheriff's office as is necessary.

Mr. Gale further moved, that the jail building committee be authorized to procure connection for the jail and sheriff's house with the gas main, and to procure suitable gas fixtures for the building. Adopted.

Mr. Gale, from special committee, reported in regard to addition to jail lot: That the committee had failed to obtain any different terms than heretofore reported; and moved that the chairman of the jail building committee be authorized to purchase the Bancroft lot, north of the east end of jail lots for a sum not exceeding $1,500. Lost.

Mr. Sanderson was called to the chair, when

Mr. Clay moved that the jail building committee be authorized to purchase the south four rods of the Bancroft lot, as an addition to the jail lot, at a cost not exceeding $800.00.

Mr. DeLong moved to amend by authorizing the purchase of the whole of the Bancroft lot at a cost not exceeding $1,500.00. Carried. Yeas—Messrs. Shoop, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Deatherage, DeLong, Donason, Swigart, Sloan, Soles and the chairman, 12; Nays—Messrs. Sanderson, Junk, Wainwright, Sumner, Eiker, Temple, Johnston, Nicholson and Wilder, 9. Whereupon the resolution as amended was adopted. Yeas—Messrs. Sharp, Gale, Dieterich, Morse, Stanley, Sanderson, DeLong, Donason, Swigart, Sloan, Soles and the chairman, 12; Nays—Messrs. Junk, Deatherage, Wainwright, Sumner, Eiker, Temple, Johnston, Nicholson and Wilber, 9.

Mr. Clay moved that the jail building committee be authorized to sell on the best possible terms the house on the south half of the Bancroft lot; and to sell the north half of the lot if found to be to the interest of the county to do so. Adopted.

September adjourned meeting, 1874.—The special business of the meeting being the reception of the county jail from the contractors, A. C. Clay, superintendent of construction, made the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

As superintendent of construction of jail, under appointment from your honorable body, I would respectfully report:

That the jail and sheriff's house has been completed according to contract, (except building cistern, and connecting drainage, to be done as soon as water in the ground will permit), and the same is now ready for your acceptance.

As superintendent, I have, from time to time, found it necessary to modify and alter original plans, and after consultation in most instances with your special jail committee, have made such alterations and modifications as were deemed beneficial, or tending to greater security of the jail; first, when possible, agreeing with the contractors as to the cost of such changes. The cost of the jail and sheriff's house, including the cistern and drain connections yet to be constructed), is a follows:

Contract price		$34,900.00
Extra to contractor for materials and labor, in alterations, etc		2,452.01
Making		$37,352.01
And I would further report, that the original ground being found too small, an additional lot was bought for		1,800.00
That additional expenditures have been made as follows:
Committee visiting jails in 1873, allowed at March meeting, 1873	$116.50
Paid Wm. Quayle, architect, for plans, etc	210.00
Paid for advertising for contracts	70.10
Paid Wm. Quayle, for copy of plans	8.00
Paid committee, for services, (say)	125.00
Paid Winter, for copy of specifications	10.00	539.60
Making		$39,691.61

Which sum has been paid, except about 15 per cent,. to contractor.

I would further report, that an additional lot, under direction of the board, was bought at $1,500, the north half of which with the buildings on the lot so purchased sold for, say $900, leaving the south half at a cost of $600.00

Necessary fencing, already ordered, will cost 628.00

Stone walks on jail lot, laid under order of the board, as per bill 391.00

Sidewalk is estimated to cost 100.00

Grading of lot, and for sidewalk 75.00

Gas fixtures will cost probably 100.00

Surveyor's bill is 4.00

Making to be provided for $1,898.00

Making the cost of jail building and lots, entire $41,589.61

On which sum there has been paid as follows:

Ira R. Stevens, contractor $31,450.64

Jail lot 1,800.00

Architect, committee, advertising, etc 530.60

Making $33,790.24

Leaving unpaid the sum of ..... $ 7,799.37

I would recommend that you pay the amount due Ira R. Stevens on contract and for extras $37,352.01, less amount paid to him as shown by the report, $31,450.64, and the further sum of $500.00 to be retained until the cistern is built, and connections are made with drainage, as required by contract, being the sum of $5,401.37; and also that provision be made for work yet to be done, such as fencing, sidewalk, gas fixtures, etc.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. C. CLAY.

On motion of Mr. Sanderson the report was received.

Mr. Gale moved that the north half of lot last purchased from A. N. Bancroft, be held for sale at $900.00, and asked that the consideration of said motion be postponed until after the board shall visit the jail.

Afternoon session.—Mr. Ogden called up report of A. C. Clay, superintendent of jail, and moved that the report be adopted and that order issue to Ira R. Stevens, contractor, in accordance with the recommendation of report.

Mr. Gale moved to amend by adding:

To be delivered upon the certificate of the superintendent, that the said contractor has given him full satisfaction that all claims of laborers and subcontractors have been fully paid.

Amendment adopted, and motion as amended passed.

Mr. Gale moved that nine hundred dollars be appropriated subject to the order of the superintendent, to be expended in carrying out the other recommendations of the report. Adopted.

Mr. Gale moved that the chairman be authorized to receive deed from A. N. Bancroft for lot purchased, and pay interest on purchase money until the first day of February next, at which time payment shall be made for said lot. Carried.

Mr. Gale called up his motion, made this morning, in regard to the sale of the north end of Bancroft lot.

Mr. Swigart moved to amend by directing the chairman to sell and remove the buildings on said lot, when

On motion of Mr. Gale, action was postponed until the January meeting of the board.

On motion, the sheriff was directed to rent and collect rents of dwelling house on north end of said lot.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the jail building committee be directed to procure survey and plan of drainage for the jail, and go on and contract the same in the mode most satisfactory and economical to the county, unless the City of Galesburg shall take immediate action for the drainage of Cherry street, on terms satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted.

Resolved, That the sheriff be directed to take possession of the jail, and prepare the same for the use of the prisoners, but that no prisoners be removed until the jail is in condition to receive them with safety to health, and sewerage immediately necessary be provided; and that supervisors Morse and Clay be a committee to advise the sheriff as to when the jail can be inhabited with safety.

January meeting, 1875.—Mr. Clay, from jail building committee, made the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Since the last meeting of the board, the contractor of the jail has completed the cistern and made the necessary connections. I accepted it and made an order on the county clerk for balance due him on the jail contract, viz: $500, taking his receipt in full.

I have paid out of fund appropriated for fencing, grading, etc., $782.60, as follows:

Paid Mr. McMakin for 10 mattresses, each $2.00.....$ 20.00
Paid Stevens & Parry for fencing etc., as per bill attached..... 697.73
Paid Monmouth M. & M. Co., for 2,500 paving brick..... 50.00
Paid C. B. & Q. Railroad for freight on brick from Monmouth..... 14.85

And there remains a small bill for hauling brick from depot, which has not been presented for payment.

I would also report that I sold the house on rear end of jail lot for $40.00, the best price I could get.

I would further report that the jail building committee were unable to make any arrangement with the City of Galesburg about the drainage for the jail.

The committee then procured plans and estimates for sewerage for the jail of Mr. Churchill, city engineer, and let the contract for building the sewer to Parry & Stevens at engineer's estimate. I would recommend that provision be made for their payment, amounting to $1,412.77, and interest from Nov. 1st, 1874 at ten per cent.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. C. CLAY.

On motion the report was approved, and it was ordered that balance of appropriation be cancelled.

On motion of Mr. Gale the clerk was directed to issue an order in favor of Parry & Stevens, in payment for sewerage contract, payable March 1st, 1875, for the sum of $1,412.77, with interest at ten per cent for four months, amounting to $1,459.87.

Mr. Sanderson moved that the sum of $600, being at the rate of $100 per month, be allowed and paid to A. C. Clay, as superintendent in building county jail.

Mr. Gale moved to amend by allowing Mr. Clay supervisor's per diem and mileage for 160 days' service. After some discussion Mr. Sanderson offered the following substitute:

Resolved, That the sum of $3.12½ per day for 160 days be allowed and paid to A. C. Clay, superintendent of jail building; and that the further sum of $100, advanced by Mr. Clay to obtain possession of jail lot be refunded to him; and that in payment the clerk issue order to A. C. Clay for the sum of $500 for services, and an order for $100 for money advanced.

Substitute carried and adopted.

September meeting, 1883.—In behalf of the jail committee, Mr. May made a verbal report on the question of heating the jail and repairing the roof. He said the present system of heating is by hot air, and under ordinary circumstances will answer well enough so far as the prison department is concerned, but in very cold weather it is difficult to get up sufficient heat to make the prisoners comfortable and the furnaces have to be run so hard that they require frequent and expensive repairs. To fit the furnace for use this winter will require an outlay of at least $300. But the great objection to the present system of heating consists in the fact that the cells in which the insane are necessarily kept, when confined in jail, are heated by stoves, thus entailing the great risk of the loss of the jail by fire. Your committee find that on several occasions stoves have been taken to pieces or knocked down by insane patients temporarily confined in the jail. Your committee has investigated the question of steam-heating and they are of the opinion that the jail can be better warmed, at a less expense and with absolute safety by the use of steam. We present to the board several propositions ranging in price from $725 to $975. and regarding it a less expensive and at the same time a more efficient system, and removing as it does the danger of fire alluded to, we recommend the substitution of steam heating for the present one. We also recommend that the jail roof be painted and such little repairs made as may be necessary.

On motion of Mr. Gale the report of the committee was accepted and its recommendations concurred in, and the chairman of the board and the chairman of the jail committee were authorized to contract for the change on the most advantageous terms possible.

January meeting, 1884.—Mr. May, of the special committee on heating the jail, read the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

The undersigned, to whom at the last session of this board the matter of heating the county jail by a steam heating apparatus was referred, with power to act, beg leave to report that they immediately entered upon the duties devolved upon them; that having had several conferences with the managers of the Haxton Steam Heating Company, of Kewanee, Ill., they were able to make a contract with them to place their apparatus in the jail building for heating the same with steam, which contract accompanies this report. We further report that we watched the work of introducing the apparatus into the building as it progressed and becoming convinced that it would be to the advantage of the county to have the apparatus extended so as to heat the entire building, we authorized such enlargement of the contract, and we report that in our opinion the entire building is now adequately supplied with steam heating apparatus well adapted to that purpose. We submit our doings aforesaid, together with the bill of $905.84, submitted by the contractors aforesaid, and ask that they be approved and the said bill allowed.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. W. MAY,
T. J. HALE,
Special Committee.

On motion of Mr. Greenleaf the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in, and the clerk directed to issue orders therefor.

THE CARE OF PETTY CRIMINALS

In 1883 the agitation began for the employment of such petty criminals, as may be convicted of a crime involving a fine or a fine and jail sentence, in some work for the purpose of making collection of the fine and relieving the prisoners of the monotony and evil effects of languishing in jail. The jail has long and justly been considered as a primary school to the penitentiary and therefore a very damaging judgment to be pronounced against a young or first offender. The seeming better opinion has been held for many years that such offenders should be set to work and even allowed some compensation therefor.

At that time Mr. Robert Mathews introduced the following resolution:

Adjourned meeting August 6, 1883.—Resolved, That the judiciary committee be directed to confer with the authorities of the city of Galesburg and report at the next meeting of this board the feasibility and probable cost of some method by which persons convicted of crime and sentenced to the county jail by the proper authorities can be made to work out such fines under proper restraint and direction.

The record does not show that anything was done pursuant to the passage of this resolution.

At the December meeting of the board 1892 Mr. L. A. Lawrence of Yates City introduced the following resolution which was adopted.

December, 1892.—Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Super- visors: In view of the great expense of our county in maintaining so many petty criminals in idleness who are sentenced to various terms of imprisonment in our county jail by police, justice and other courts, and believing that a well planned and directed work house or house of correction would reduce such expense to a minimum point or overcome it altogether, Therefore, Resolved, That the chairman of this board appoint a committee of three members to examine into the workings of such institutions in other counties and report at the next regular meeting of this board upon the advisability of introducing such an institution into our county.

In conformity with the foregoing the chairman appointed Messrs. Lawrence, Gale and Robson as such committee.

March, 1893.—Mr. Lawrence, of the special committee, appointed at the December meeting of this board to examine into the workings of houses of correction as operated in other counties, read the following report:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

We, the undersigned, committee appointed at the last regular meeting to examine into the workings of houses of correction as operated in other counties with a view of introducing a similar system into this county if found to be practical and advisable, would respectfully report as follows:

We have visited the house of correction at Peoria, which was organized and is operated wholly by the city of Peoria, and from statements made by the superintendent of that institution, covering its workings for a period of thirteen years and from our own observation, we are of the opinion that such an institution is both practical and advisable for the following reasons, viz:

1st. The criminal and vagrant class, or those who prey upon the community at large, are inclined to shun those communities where houses of correction or work houses are located.

2nd. We believe that a criminal while held in custody in default of payment of fine for misdemeanors committed, is better situated both for himself and the public at large if compelled to labor at some useful employment than if permitted to lie in idleness especially if he is to be associated with others of a similar class, for they will then be more than likely engaged in schemes and plans for further and more to be dreaded criminal conduct.

3rd. We believe that a criminal compelled to labor while deprived of his liberty on account of misdemeanors committed, will be more likely to seek and engage in some honest employment after his liberation than he would do were he permitted to remain in useless idleness during his detention.

4th. We believe there will be less effort made in trying to escape from custody by those offenders who are kept busily at work than by those who are simply watered, housed, fed and kept in comfortable idleness with plenty of time at their disposal to plan deeper crimes and means of escape.

5th. We believe that a house of correction, well arranged and conducted, can be made almost if not quite self supporting, and thus relieve the tax payers of the ever present burden of supporting a class of criminal and vagrant idlers.

In other words, we believe such an institution will be the means of enabling the thrifty part of the public to compel those who are ever a menace to peace, order and prosperity, to pay with their own labor the penalty of their misdeeds, while being at the same time reformatory in effects.

But while we are persuaded in the above opinion we are not yet sufficiently informed upon the question whether Knox county separate and apart from the incorporated towns in the county has a sufficient number of offenders to deal with to justify the necessary outlay of money. If we may suppose that all the incorporated towns in the county including the city of Galesburg, would be willing to contract with the county for the keeping of their offenders during their various terms of imprisonment at a sufficient sum per diem to cover cost of dieting, then we think the question practically settled in favor of such an institution; we have not yet that information, but in view of all the conditions of the case your committee would respectfully ask that its work of investigation be continued until the next regular meeting with instructions to confer with the authorities of the city of Galesburg and the other incorporated towns in the county and ascertain, if possible, whether said authorities will co-operate with Knox county in some plan as above suggested to justify the county in the necessary outlay in erecting an institution that promises a better means of handling their and our offenders against the public peace and order, and also to ascertain and report upon the approximate cost of erecting said institution.

L. A. LAWRENCE,
W. SELDEN GALE,
WM. ROBSON,

On motion of Mr. Burkhalter, the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

September, 1893.—Mr. Lawrence, of the committee on workhouse, submitted the following report:

To the Honorable Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois:

We, the undersigned committee, to whom was referred the matter of a continued investigation of the advisability of building a workhouse in Knox county at the March meeting of 1893, respectfully report as follows, viz: On June 29th last we addressed to the authorities of the several cities and villages of Knox county the following circular letter as embodying the information we then desired in the above matter, and asked a prompt reply to the same:

1st. Do you as the representatives of the village of..... believe that a workhouse is a practical and advisable institution to be built in our county?

2nd. Would you, as the representatives of the people of the village of ....., be willing to contract with the authorities of Knox county for the keeping of as many of such offenders as may fall into your hands during their several terms of imprisonment, as by law may be imposed, at an expense to you of not more than thirty-five cents a day for their dieting and cost of transportation to workhouse?

3rd. About how many committals per annum will you probably have, judging from past experience, that would be subject to the workhouse, if one were built?

The above questions can be very readily answered by a "yes" or "no" immediately following the first and second ones, and by the suggested number following the third one, and when signed by the president and clerk of the village or city, will furnish the board a very substantial basis of action in the matter of building a workhouse as proposed.

By the committee:

L. A. LAWRENCE,
W. SELDEN GALE.
WM. ROBSON.

To that circular letter we have received replies from eight towns as follows:

Names of towns.	Questions.		Annual Commitments
	1st. Commitments.	2nd.
1. Yates city	Yes.	Yes.	6 to 10.
2. Maquon	No.	No.	None.
3. Abingdon	No.	No.	6 to 10.
4. Wataga	No.	—	Indefinite.
5. Henderson	No.	Yes.	5.
6. Galesburg	Yes.	Yes.	567.
7. Oneida	No.	No.	5.
8. Knoxville (not by Knox county)	Yes.	—	40.

Total number reporting, 8.

Victoria gives no answer.

St. Augustine gives no answer.

Altona gives no answer.

Number not reporting, 3.

Total number of probable committals by the towns reporting, 623.

Number of committals by Knox county annually, estimated from sheriff records (average sentence 30 days), 50.

Total number of probable committals per annum, 673.

From the above it would appear that we might expect an average of at least ten persons per day under sentence and subject to work house labor, with the probability of an increase in the number in proportion to the increase of population and business interests. A majority of the towns of our county do not report favorably upon the proposition to build a workhouse, yet we feel assured that such an institution is practical and needed, and will be appreciated when better understood.

.Two plans present themselves, for carrying into effect the proposed work if favored by this body, viz: To purchase land having a deposit of clay suitable for brick making, and then erect buildings adapted to the safe-keeping and working of those subject to such penalty; or, second, to erect suitable buildings in our present jail yard to the carrying on of such mechanical work as may be best adapted to our times and circumstances, whereby all offenders that may be subject thereto can be usefully employed; and, in order to further develop the matter, we most respectfully recommend that the above plans be investigated by a committee to be named by the honorable chairman, and that the probable cost of site and buildings in each case be estimated and reported at the regular meeting of the board or as soon thereafter as practicable.

By the committee:

L. A. LAWRENCE, W. SELDEN, GALE.

Mr. McCrea moved that the report be accepted and adopted, the roll being called on Mr. McCrea's motion as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Gale, Boydstun, Burkhalter, Nelson, Stanton, Humphrey, Pickrel, Lawrence, Pitman, McCrea and Emery, 11.

Nays—Messrs. Byram, Latimer, Felt, Sisson, Reece, Simpson, Smith, Stephenson, Bearmore, Young, Becker, Hubbell and Seward. 13. Lost.

When on motion of Mr. McCrea the foregoing report was accepted and said committee discharged.

After two such excellent and comprehensive reports on this subject, it seems strange that it would be so unceremoniously dropped. However, at the September meeting, 1904, it was brought up again by the presentation of the following petition:

PETITION FOR WORKHOUSE

September meeting, 1904.—To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Ill. Gentlemen: We, the undersigned voters and tax payers of Salem and Elba townships in said county, hereby petition that prompt steps be taken by you for the organization and construction of a workhouse in Knox county, Illinois, whereby those who are found guilty of committing any of the misdemeanors enumerated in the laws, ordinances or statutes of the municipalities of our county or of the state at large may be compelled by their labor to defray the expense of their keeping while under sentence as provided in the criminal code of the statute of Illinois.

We believe that such a provision will have a tendency to lessen the number of misdemeanors committed and reduce the expense of the county in connection with the same.

Said petitions being signed by one hundred forty-six residents of Salem township and nine residents of Elba township.

On motion of Mr. McWilliams the above petitions were made a special order of business for Thursday at 10:30 o'clock A. M.

Thursday morning.—The hour of 10:30 having arrived, on motion of Mr. Sawyer, the matter relating to the petition for a workhouse for Knox county was referred to the police committee with instructions to report at the next regular meeting of this board.

Nothing was done and four years went by before anything further appears on the subject.

At the December meeting, 1908, the following appears of record:

December, 1908.—Mr. Barlow read the following report of the special committee on the employment of prisoners, and moved its adoption:

GALESBURG, Ill., November 28, 1908.

To the Honorable Chairman and members of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Knox and State of Illinois:

GENTLEMEN—The committee appointed by your honorable body to confer with a like committee to be appointed by the honorable mayor and city council of the city of Galesburg, beg leave to submit the following report:

Your committee, together with the committee appointed by the city council, met on the evening of November 28th, 1908, and after thoroughly discussing the question of finding employment for persons held in custody both at the county jail and city prison, we the undersigned committee, would respectfully recommend that the county and city join together in securing a suitable place for a rock pile, whereon those persons held in custody could be made to work. And the product from such labor be used to improve the streets and roads within the city and county.

Signed by the committee.

AMES A. BARLOW, C. A. PALMGREN,
S. M. WHITING, J. P. MCDERMOTT,
O. J. JOHNSON.

Mr. Robson offered as a substitute to the motion of adoption of the report that the consideration thereon be deferred until 1:30 P. M., which was adopted.

On motion of Mr. McWilliams the board adjourned until 1:30 P. M.

The hour for consideration of the report of the special committee on the employment of prisoners, on motion of Mr. Barlow, said report was adopted. employment of prisoners having arrived, on motion of Mr. Barlow, said report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Hoxworth the special committee on employment of prisoners was continued and directed to report at the next meeting the plan and probable expense to the county to carry out the plan proposed.

It seems that a motion to ascertain the cost of any proposed improvement of this kind was sufficient to postpone action indefinitely. However, at the December meeting 1910 Mr. Barlow brought up the question again in such a way that results were finally obtained.

December, 1910.—Mr. Barlow brought up the question of a rock pile or a workhouse for the prisoners in the county jail, and offered a motion that the chair appoint a new committee of three members of the board to confer with the city authorities of the city of Galesburg on the question of preparing a place for working the prisoners in the county jail.

The time having arrived which was set for the special order of business the resolution presented by the special committee was read, and on motion of Mr. Robson, was adopted.

The chairman then announced that he would appoint Messrs. Barlow, Burnside and Whiting as members of the committee to confer with the city authorities of the city of Galesburg on the matter of the employment of the prisoners in the county jail in some suitable place.

March, 1911.—Mr. Barlow, of the special committee on employment of prisoners, presented the following report, which on motion of Mr. Clark, was adopted and its recommendation concurred in:

GALESBURG, Ill., March 22, 1911.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee, to whom was referred the matter of securing a suitable place wherein the convicts held in our county jail from time to time might be required to crack rock or perform other kinds of manual labor, wish to make the following report:

We had a meeting with the chairman of the committee appointed by the city council to co-operate with us on the above proposition, and we find that they are quite anxious to take hold with us and help to secure a suitable place for same. Therefore your committee would recommend that they be given power to get options on what they consider to be suitable property, acting jointly with the committee appointed by the city council with a view of each, the county and city, bearing one-half the expense incurred in procuring such a site and improvement of same, and report their findings at the April meeting of said Board.

Respectfully submitted,

Signed: AMES A. BARLOW,
S. M. WHITING,
T. E. BURNSIDE,
Committee.

September, 1911.—The following report of the special committee on workhouse was presented and read, which, upon motion of Mr. Robson, was approved and its recommendations concurred in:

To the Honorable Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your special committee appointed by this board to confer with authorities of the city of Galesburg in regard to the matter of the establishing of a workhouse, beg leave to report that in conjunction with a committee appointed by the city council of the city of Galesburg purchased a parcel of ground described as the west four rods of lots one (1) and two (2) in the subdivision of original lot one (1) in block forty-five (45) in the city of Galesburg, Knox county, Illinois, said tract or lot being adjacent to the property on which the county jail is located, for the sum of three thousand dollars ($3000.00), one-half of which purchase price is to be paid by Knox county. The deed for said property has been executed and delivered and has, by your joint committee, been placed in the custody and keeping of the city clerk of the city of Galesburg. Your committee would further report that they have entered into a joint agreement with the committee of the city council of the city of Galesburg, placing the control and management of the premises above referred to for rental purposes in the hands of Frank F. Seaman, sheriff, or his successors in office, which said agreement is presented with this report and we recommend that it appear herewith in the record of the proceedings of this board.

Your committee would recommend that their action as above reported, be approved by this board, and we would further recommend that the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1500.00) be included on the county tax levy for the purpose of payment of the portion of the purchase price of said workhouse premises to be borne by the county.

We would further recommend that the county clerk be authorized to issue a county clerk's order for the sum of fifteen hundred and twenty-seven dollars, payable to the undersigned members of the special committee, in payment of the note for the money advanced for the purchase price of said workhouse lot, which was signed by your committee, together with the interest due on said note to this date.

We would further recommend that the sum of two hundred fifty ($250.00) dollars also be included in the county tax levy for the purpose of making the necessary improvements on said premises.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

T. E. BURNSIDE,
W. H. PANKEY,
A. I. SARGENT.

THIS AGREEMENT made and entered into this 24th day of June, A. D. 1911, by and between the county of Knox, party of the first part, and the city of Galesburg, Illinois, party of the second part,

Witnesseth: That it is mutually agreed by and between the parties hereto, each being an owner in common of an undivided one-half (½) interest in the west four (4) rods of Lots one (1) and two (2) in the subdivision of original Lot one (1) in Block forty-five (45) in the city of Galesburg, Knox county, Illinois, that the control and management of said premises, for rental purposes shall be placed in the hands of F. F. Seaman, sheriff, or his successor in office and that the said F. F. Seaman or his successor, shall be and is hereby empowered as agent of both parties hereto to execute and sign all the necessary papers or instruments incident to the leasing said premises, and is empowered to sign same and when so signed such papers shall have the same force and virtue as though signed by the parties hereto; but this authority shall not extend to the making of deeds or incumbrances against said land or the execution of instruments for such purposes; and the said F. F. Seaman or his successor is hereby authorized and employed to collect all rents and profits from said property and to apply the same to the proper care and maintenance of said premises and any sums remaining in his hands after such expenses shall at the end of each six months be paid over by him, one-half to each of the parties hereto, at the same time rendering to each of said parties an itemized statement of the receipts and expenditures by him as such agent.

Witness our hands and seals the day and year first above written. Two pages, executed in duplicate.

COUNTY OF KNOX, IN THE STATE OF ILLINOIS

CITY OF GALESBURG, ILLINOIS

By J. F. GRETTA, (SEAL)
and H. O. CHAMBERS. (SEAL)

Mr. Robson offered a motion, which prevailed, that the present special committee on workhouse be retained with power to carry out the recommendations contained in their report.

December, 1911.—Mr. Burnside of the special committee on workhouse presented the following report, which was read, and on motion of Mr. Robson was accepted by the board and its recommendations concurred in:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois:

GENTLEMEN: Your special committee appointed by the board of supervisors on jail yard beg leave to submit the following report:

Together with the special committee of the city council of the city of Galesburg we have improved said property by placing a new fence and shed on jail yard, and also by making some needed repairs on the house. Since acquiring title and improving said property there has been a legal question raised as to the sentencing of prisoners to labor. We have requested the state's attorney to furnish a resolution in relation to the matter, which is herewith attached.

We also beg leave to submit bills incurred in the improvement of said property owned jointly by Knox county and the city of Galesburg, amounting to $422.93, of which said amount Knox county is to pay one-half, to-wit, $211.47, which your committee recommended be allowed and the clerk be directed to issue an order to Frank F. Seaman, sheriff, for the purpose of paying Knox county's share of said expense.

T. E. BURNSIDE,
W. H. PANKEY,
A. I. SARGENT.

The following communication and resolution presented with and referred to in the foregoing report of the special committee on workhouse, were also read, whereupon on motion of Mr. DuVon the resolution as submitted was adopted:

GALESBURG, Ill., December 13th, 1911.

Mr. Burnside, Supervisor:

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to your request to draft a resolution providing that the prisoners confined in the county jail be required to labor for the benefit of the county during the term of their imprisonment in the jail yard provided for that purpose by the county board, I have drafted the following resolution.

The question is involved in considerable doubt, and the various provisions of the statute are somewhat conflicting in regard thereto, and in the absence of a judicial decision on that particular question, I have used as nearly as possible the language of the statute in the resolution. I do not, in submitting the resolution, desire to be understood officially as stating that it will be upheld by the courts upon a test, but that it is merely drawn at your request in compliance, as nearly as may be, with the present arrangement that the board has provided, regarding the employment of prisoners.

Respectfully submitted,

A. J. BOUTELLE,
State's Attorney.

Be it

Resolved, by the board of supervisors of Knox county, Illinois, That any person convicted in any court of this state, in Knox county, Illinois, having jurisdiction, of a crime or misdemeanor, the punishment of which is confinement in the county jail, may be sentenced by the court, in which such conviction is had, to labor for the benefit of the county during the term of such imprisonment, in the jail yard of the Knox county jail, provided for that purpose by the said Knox county board of supervisors.

Mr. Pankey thereupon offered a motion that F. F. Seaman, sheriff, be authorized and directed to turn over the county's portion, being one-half, of the rent money received for the house at the jail yard, which portion amounts to $22.50, into the county treasury, which motion prevailed.

ALMSHOUSE AND POOR-FARM.

There is nothing more interesting to the people of a county than the construction of its public buildings. It is so natural for people to criticise a building that they begin to do it from the time the grade and marking stakes are drawn and keep it up until it is completed. This is true even of private residences and it is especially true of public buildings after the wants of the county are such as to demand imposing and costly structures.

In connection with the building of an almshouse and the purchase and support of a poor-farm, another question arises which involves the policy of how best to care for the poor. It would seem that such aid must be rendered in one of three ways. First, if the family has a small home, to give such family a little aid to supplement such partial support as may be obtained from the home place; second, if the person or family is entirely destitute they must be farmed out—so to speak—to the lowest bidder in the township where they reside and the expense borne by the township; or, third, the destitute persons must be sent to county almshouse and poor-farm. All three of these plans may be pursued, to a certain extent, at the same time. A person at the almshouse is openly a charge upon the county, which fact is very humiliating to a proud person, and such person will remain in his home town until absolutely compelled to join the great army of the poor. From the organization of the county, in 1830, to the adoption of township organization, in 1853, the county commissioners were voting money out of county funds for the support of the poor. Numerous instances appear of record where the poor person was farmed out to the lowest bidder for some definite time. Upon the adoption of township organization each township had a representative in the county board and the question became at once a pertinent one, "What can this representative do for the care of the poor in his own township?"

Probably the real question of how best to care for the poor came up for the first time for discussion immediately after the adoption of township organization. Is it better to have a good, comfortable poorhouse, supplied with every convenience for making the poor comfortable and somewhat happy, or shall we continue the old practice of farming them out to be kept by the man who would do it the cheapest and furnish food and care according to the price. From the immediate steps taken by the board looking to the establishment of a poorhouse and farm it is reasonable to suppose that the old idea that you must make the lot of the poor as hard as possible to avoid all inducements to the people to become paupers was passing away. The conflict of these two policies will be noticed pretty much all the way through by a study of the resolutions offered.

The first steps taken toward the erection of a poorhouse was the appointment of a committee at the December meeting, 1853, of the board of supervisors, when the following motion, offered by W. Selden Gale, was passed:

On motion of W. Selden Gale it was voted that a committee of three be appointed to make the necessary inquiries in regard to the propriety of purchasing a farm for the purpose of a county poorhouse and the expense of maintaining paupers on any plan, and to get all the information that they can obtain in the matter and report to the next meeting of this board. W. Selden Gale, Peter Frans and William M. Clark were appointed said committee.

The following motions were passed for the purpose of obtaining information as to the cost of the care of paupers in the county of Knox for the benefit of the committee above provided for.

Moved by William M. Clark and seconded by George W. Manley that the overseers of the poor be directed to advertise by putting up three written notices ten days in their respective towns that they will let the keeping of the town paupers to the lowest responsible bidder, provided the bid be satisfactory to the overseer. Provided further, that the pauper may be removed at the discretion of the overseer.

On motion it is ORDERED: That the clerk make out the expense of keeping the county paupers for the last 4 years for the committee appointed to inquire into the pauper matters yesterday.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasury in favor of James Bunce for three dollars for medical attendance rendered a Swede woman, a pauper in the town of Galesburg.

It has been a custom of the commissioners of the County court for years prior to this time to advertise in this manner for the lowest bidder for keeping the poor people of the county, and the custom was so common that nothing was thought of it. It would seem that a little reflection upon the subject would convince any one that the lowest bidder plan was the best plan by which a poor person could be cared for and made most uncomfortable of all, yet public work and public policy seems to dictate that way of letting contracts. However, if people are driven to offer and perform duties of that kind at the lowest possible cost, they will generally get even by making the provisions and care as cheap as possible.

The committee on poorhouse were again instructed at the May meeting, 1855, to look further into the matter to ascertain a favorable place to purchase land and the best plans for a building.

On motion it is ORDERED: That a committee of three be appointed to ascertain where is best to purchase land for a poorhouse and the best plan of building and the probable and best means of paying for the same and report to this board at their September annual meeting. Committee on the above,

GEORGE A. CHARLES,
THOMAS GILBERT,
THOMAS B. ROSS.

The further action of the board at the September meeting was taken in the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That George A. Charles, Thomas Gilbert and T. J. Hale be appointed a committee with authority to purchase the W. ½ of the SW. ¼ of Section 21, Township Eleven north of Range 2 east, for the sum of three thousand dollars, for a county farm, upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the owner, T. J. Bestor, and said committee, or some other farm which to them shall seem best, in a sum not exceeding four thousand dollars.

On January 16th, 1856, at a meeting of the board the following action was taken in regard to the poor-farm.

ORDERED: That George A. Charles, Thomas Gilbert and R. W. Miles be appointed a committee to take charge of the poor-farm and they are authorized to take full charge of the same and to rent it on such terms as to them shall seem best for the interests of the county and the poor.

The farm was paid for the same day.

ORDERED: That the clerk issue an order on the treasury to the committee on the poor-farm for the sum of three thousand dollars, to be applied to the payment of said farm and they are authorized to pay for the same and receive a deed therefor in accordance with the contract for the purchase of the same.

May Special Meeting, 1856.—Resolved, That George A. Charles be appointed superintendent of the county farm with authority to make such contracts from time to time as to him shall seem most for the interests of the county and the welfare of the paupers, to make suitable repairs and necessary improvements and to employ any such assistance or medical services as may be necessary, and make report to this board from time to time.

January Special Meeting, 1857.—Rental of the poor-farm.

ON MOTION it is ordered that the county poor-farm be rented to Henry G. Colgin for the term of one year from the 1st day of April next at the sum of two hundred dollars—the said Colgin to take charge of and keep all the paupers of the county at the sum of two dollars per week, furnishing all necessary provisions and doing all washing for said paupers.

Poor-Farm for 1858.—January, 1858. Resolved, That George A. Charles, W. S. Gale and J. M. Holyoke be appointed a committee to hire a superintendent of the poor-farm for the coming year and that they be allowed to procure stock and farming tools to cultivate said farm and make such other arrangements as they may deem best, and report to the next meeting of the board.

Rule for care of paupers. Resolved, That all paupers should be brought to the poor-farm, except in such cases as the removal is inexpedient or improper, and that in all cases of bills presented to this board by overseers of the poor for relief, they be expected to give reasons for their non-removal to the poor-house.

May, 1858.—Resolution on poor-farm offered by Supervisor Charles.

Resolved, That this board deem it inexpedient for the county to any longer support the paupers under the system now in practice, and

Resolved, That each town hereafter support its own paupers, and further

Resolved, That the clerk cause a notice to be published in the newspapers of Knoxville and Galesburg, of a public sale of the county poor-farm, to take place on the second day of the next September term of this board, said sale to be made for one-third cash in hand, the balance in one and two years, possession given the first of April next, and further

Resolved, That the paupers that are at the said farm on the said first day of April next, be taken to the respective towns from which they came, and be supported by said towns respectively.

Which resolution, on motion of Supervisor Miles, was laid over for further consideration until tomorrow.

May, 1858.—Supervisor Charles called up resolution in relation to sale of poor-farm when Supervisor Gale made a motion to postpone action until September meeting, to which Supervisor Miles offered an amendment that action be indefinitely postponed, which amendment was adopted.

January, 1859.—Supervisor Nelson presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That the board of supervisors of Knox county deem it necessary to dispose of Knox county poor-farm, and that there be a committee appointed by the present board of supervisors to make the necessary preparations to dispose of said farm, and that the proceeds of the said farm be placed in the county treasury; and futhermore, in pursuance of "An act passed by the legislature of the State of Illinois during its session of the year 1857" that each town of the said county of Knox, make provisions to cancel all demands that may arise in case of paupers residing in the same, and that after the 1st day of April next, every pauper on said farm shall be removed to the town from whence they came.

Resolution laid on the table.

Supervisor Nelson then offered the following resolution as a substitute for the one presented by him yesterday and which was laid on the table:

Resolved, That the respective towns in the county of Knox be required to support the paupers residing in the same in accordance with an act provided by the legislature of the state of Illinois for the counties of Ogle and Knox, approved February 16th, 1857, and that the paupers that may be at the poor-farm on the first day of April, 1859, shall be sent to the towns from whence they came at the expense of the county; and that a committee be appointed by the chairman of the board of supervisors to have charge and the leasing of said poor-farm, for the next year, from the first day of April next, and that the rent of said farm shall be paid in cash at such rates fixed by said committee, and the same when collected be paid into the treasury of the county to be used for county purposes, and furthermore, that Rufus W. Miles, our representative in the legislature, is hereby requested by the board of supervisors of Knox county to take the steps to repeal said act "Approved February 16th, 1857."

Supervisor Gale moved that action on resolution be referred until board gets through with other business. Lost.

Supervisor Gale moved that the whole subject be deferred to a committee to report at next meeting of the board, all information of expenses of paupers outside and in county poorhouse, and the expense of the different systems of managing the poorhouse.

Supervisor Martin offered the following resolution as a substitute:

Resolved, That at the town meetings in the spring of 1859 the following question be submitted to the voters of Knox county:

"Shall the paupers of the county be supported by the county, or by the towns to which they belong?" After discussion Mr. Martin withdrew his substitute, whereupon Mr. Gale withdrew his motion, and offered the following substitute:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to report at a meeting of the board to be held on the first Tuesday of March next on the subject of pauperism, and the cost of the different systems of managing the same, presenting in tabular form the comparative expense, by reference to cost incurred in supporting paupers in former years.

On which resolution the yeas and nays were demanded, and resulted:

Yeas, Messrs. Gale, Brown, Martin, Charles and Stuckey, 5. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Kelly, Nelson, Titus, Routh, LeBarron, Hamrick, Godfrey, Benson, McCornack, Knable, Tucker and Jarnagin, 13. Substitute lost.

The question recurring on the adoption of resolution of Supervisor Nelson, the yeas and nays were called, resulting:

Yeas, Messrs. Meek, Kelly, Nelson, Titus, Martin, LeBarron, Hamrick, Godfrey, Benson, Knable, Tucker and Jarnagin, 12. Nays, Messrs. Gale, Brown, Routh, Holyoke and Stuckey, 5. Resolution adopted.

The following resolution is given for the purpose of showing the development of the sentiment in Knox county upon the subject of the care of the poor.

Supervisor Charles offered the following resolution which was on motion adopted:

Resolved, That whereas Dr. J. W. Spaulding and Dr. Taylor of Galesburg have each of them appealed from the decisions of this board to the circuit court of Knox county in cases of obstetrics where one is allowed five dollars and the other nineteen 50/100 dollars, both being pauper cases, and whereas this board have by a preceding resolution ordered that each town hereafter takes care of its own paupers, which will in the future prevent any further account between this board and the medical faculty of Galesburg, and

Whereas, Under these considerations and to stop all further litigation at the expense of the county, therefore,

Resolved, That this board allow these bills, or such part, as have not been allowed heretofore, which in the case of Spaulding is five dollars and Taylor's six 50/100 dollars, said Spaulding and Taylor paying all costs heretofore made in said cases, and that the orders be so expressed by the clerk when issued that it may be known that said orders are issued according to the spirit of these resolutions.

The chair then named Messrs. Charles, Martin and Benson committee under resolution of Supervisor Nelson in reference to paupers and poor-farm passed yesterday.

January Meeting, 1860.—Supervisor Gale offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to take charge of the paupers of the county, said committee to be authorized to superintend the poor-farm, and provide for taking charge of the poor; to employ physicians on contract, at Knoxville and Galesburg and elsewhere where the interests of the county may require; to receive from the poor masters of the county reports of individuals in their charge and direct that such person be supported outside of the poorhouse or returned to the poorhouse, as may be for the interest of the county. That no expenses be paid on any pauper outside the poorhouse more than twenty-four hours before notice sent to the committee nor after orders in the case made by the committee, except on the order of the committee.

On which resolution the yeas and nays were demanded, resulting: Yeas, Messrs. Stevens, Gale, Charles, Hammond, Manley and Jones, 6. Nays, Messrs. Meek, McKee, Robertson, Martin, Routh, Swigart, McCornack, Stuckey, Knable and Tucker, 10. Lost.

Supervisor Charles offered the following:

Resolved, That this board deem it expedient to keep the paupers of this county at the county poorhouse, and all expenses arising from the bringing of paupers to said poor-farm; and expenses accruing at said farm be paid from the county treasury, and further,

Resolved, That this county will pay no expense arising for taking care of paupers outside of said farm.

The yeas and nays being called, resulted: Yeas, Messrs. Stevens, Gale, Routh, Charles, Hammond, Manley, McCornack, Stuckey and Jones, 9. Nays, Messrs. Meek, McKee, Robertson, Martin, Swigart, Knable and Tucker, 7. Adopted.

Supervisor McKee moved that the foregoing resolution take effect on the 15th day of April next. Carried.

And the same day, for the purpose of more effectually carrying into operation the foregoing resolution, the following was introduced and passed:

Supervisor Charles offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That there be a committee of three appointed to take charge of the poor-farm, and make the necessary arrangements and contracts as to them may seem best and proper to receive and take care of the county paupers from the 15th of April next.

On motion the supervisor of Knox township, the chairman of the board and the county clerk were appointed said committee.

At the January meeting, 1861, there appears the first systematic report from the committee on the poor-farm, which on motion of Supervisor Gale, was received and ordered to be spread upon the records. This report is signed by George A. Charles, J. M. Holyoke and John S. Winter, as a committee that had been appointed to take charge of this farm. It shows the entire expense of the farm up to that time had been $789.57. No objections to or criticism upon said report seem to have been made. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that the cost was satisfactory to the board.

The following report, submitted at the May meeting, 1863, is given in full for the purpose of showing a little of the conditions under which the board of supervisors had been laboring. Upon the one hand was the poor of the county, then increasing in number the same as today, as well as here and there an insane person, all of these people needing care and such care as can come only from the very best surroundings. On the other hand, was the apparently excessive cost of maintaining a poor-farm, well equipped with buildings and apparatus, and it appears from resolutions of the board herein contained that a strong effort had been made to throw these people wholly upon the townships, abandon the idea of a central home, sell the farm that had been purchased for the purposes of a home and the county thereby relieve itself of what was thought by some members of the board an intolerable and unnecessary expense. This report led, as will be seen from subsequent actions of the board, to the construction of one of the finest and most commodious almshouses in the State of Illinois and one that will stand inspection from almost any point of view.

REPORT

The committee on poor-farm would respectfully report, that in accordance with the resolution passed at the last meeting of the board they have purchased from F. Andrews, overseer of the poor-farm, his stock thereon (horses excepted), to-wit: 4 cows, 3 two-year-old cattle and 3 yearlings, for the sum of one hundred and thirty ($130.00) dollars. We find that the farm can well sustain that amount of stock or more, and that hereafter the increase thereon will aid materially in furnishing provisions for the inmates of the institution.

We have renewed the contract with Mr. Andrews as overseer for another year, at the same rate as was paid during last year, to-wit, $525.00. And here we would state that we have made frequent visits to the poor-farm, at such times as suited our convenience, and would say that we have always found the house clean and neat, the inmates contented and happy as persons situated as they are can be, and the gradual improvement of the farm, with the good order in which the fences are kept, and the property taken care of in our estimation, speaks well for the management of our overseer, and the care and industry of the matron.

The regular number of inmates is nine, of which five are insane, two idiotic and two claim the sympathy and support of the public from age and infirmity. Another case which has caused some trouble is Gustavus Anderson, returned from the insane asylum as incurable, but who after his return we found, with the present accommodations that it was impossible to keep, as, unless he was closely confined or imprisoned, he would continually escape. For some time past he had been in Galesburg, and bills will be presented from that town for his support. Your committee, with full knowledge of the capacity of the poor-house, know that the overseer could not keep him without employing someone to watch him. And your committee would urge upon the board, the propriety of constructing some good and suitable building for keeping the insane of the county, which we find to be the class of paupers which now, as they will hereafter, form the principal portion of those needing aid from the county authorities, such buildings require to be built of brick, and heated by furnace that fires may not originate therefrom, and their erection would be a credit to our county. We cannot pass this matter and justify our consciences without referring to a case now in the poor-farm. A girl known as Crazy Hannah, who has been confined in a small room over three years, unsafe to permit to go out and breathe the fresh air of Heaven, compelled to live within four close walls, until her destiny is fulfilled; during all the cold days and nights of winter that poor, demented girl cannot approach the fire, between her and it, at a safe distance from her hands, has to be placed strong iron bars lest she should set fire to the building. With all the "modern improvements" for heating buildings suitable for persons in her condition, are we as citizens of Knox county doing our duty to the unfortunate of our county?

By our direction the overseer has purchased young fruit trees, and set them out, so that in a few years the farm will be abundantly supplied with fruit.

A large garden has been made this season, which will furnish the inmates of the poor-farm good and wholesome living and be conducive to their health.

In conclusion, let the committee ask that the board, in a body, proceed to the farm, examine its condition and see what is required to make it such a poor-farm as the County of Knox should have, so that its members may act understandingly.

The following is a report of bills of articles purchased by the overseer for the four months just closed:

Thomas Muir, dry goods		$ 24.83
Thomas Higgins, meat bill		19.35
James Hogg, clothing		5.00
C. L. Stewart & Co., shoes		6.60
Eads & Price, dry goods		16.63
J. W. Carns, clothing		7.50
Miles Smith, hardware, nails, etc		10.09
R. N. Wallace, groceries		7.65
A. Thompson, groceries		17.71
W. G. Jones. lumber		1.30
W. Y. Miller, fruit trees		10.30
Eiker & Bro., flour		12.50
B. Booth, blacksmithing		7.55
F. Andrews, cash for molasses	$ 5.00
80 gal. soap at 20c	16.00	21.00
Making		$168.01

For which your committee ask that orders may be passed in payment to the parties named and would also ask that an order issue in favor of F. Andrews for $130, the purchase price of the stock, bought under direction of the board, by us.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN S. WINTER,
C. ARMS,
Committee.

Which report on motion of Supervisor Mathews was accepted and approved. Whereupon the Clerk was instructed to issue orders in payment to the parties named for the sums specified in the report.

At the same term the board passed the following resolution:

Supervisor Mathews moved that a committee of three be appointed to obtain information as to the plans and cost of erecting such a building on the poor-farm for the safe and comfortable keeping of the insane of the county as is contemplated in the report of the committee on the poor-farm, and required by the county, and report at the September meeting of this board. Adopted.

The chair appointed Messrs. Davis, Arms and Winter said committee.

May Meeting, 1864.—Supervisor Nelson offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That from and after the first day of June, A. D. 1864, that all persons becoming chargeable as paupers remaining in the different towns of Knox county, and the same being sick, in such a manner as to be unable to be removed to the county poor-farm during such sickness, the same being certified to by the overseer of the poor and attending physician; all such bills that are reasonable attending such sickness, together with a reasonable bill for a physician, be allowed and paid by the board of supervisors of Knox county, when said bills shall be presented.

On which resolution the yeas and nays were called resulting: Yeas, Messrs. Finch, Stewart, Nelson and Heflin, 4. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Lowrie, Newell, Hagey, Arms, Holyoke, LeBarron, Potter, Pickrell, McCornack, Stuckey, Knable, Nicholson, Shaffer, Lyons and Gibbs, 16.

At the September special meeting, held January, 1865, the committee on poor-farm closed their report with the following appeal for something to be done to relieve the deplorable conditions at the poorhouse.

Your committee do not feel willing to let this meeting pass without calling the serious attention of this Board to the condition of these poor, unfortunate beings whom God has committed to our especial care—a trust that your committee feel this honorable board has not discharged. There is but one very poor building for the poor master's family and the paupers, having six rooms below and two small chambers, a hall running through the building divides the lower rooms, two rooms and a small store room on one side are occupied by the family. On the other side, the two larger rooms are used during the day by the paupers and the small room has been fitted up as a grated cell for Crazy Hannah, a grated partition separating her from the stove.

At night the paupers, many of whom are idiotic or insane, are locked up in the two small chambers, and this with the present class of inmates, has to be done irrespective of numbers, and almost of the condition of the paupers. From this brief statement it will be seen how illy adapted the premises are to purposes of a poorhouse, even when all are in health; but when any are sick it is impossible to make them comfortable, and especially is this so when, as in the case of the man with the frozen feet, it becomes as a loathsome pesthouse, not only to the paupers but to the poor master and his family, the stench from the gangrened foot filling every part of the building, and sickening the inmates.

In view of these facts, your committee most earnestly call upon this board to take some steps to make such improvements that it may no longer with truth be said, "That the poorhouse is a disgrace to Knox county."

All of which is respectfully submitted,

R. W. Miles,
John S. Winter,
Cephas Arms,
Committee.

On motion of Supervisor Stewart, it was ordered that an appropriation not to exceed the sum of two thousand dollars be made to the committee on the poor-farm, to build a suitable dwelling for the poor master, and to make such repairs on the present building as may be needed to make it comfortable for the paupers.

April, 1865.—Report of poor-farm committee:

Mr. Arms from committee on poor-farm made the following report, which was on motion accepted and approved, and the clerk directed to issue orders to the parties named in accordance with said report:

Your poor-farm committee report that they have renewed the contract with Mr. Andrews as overseer of the poor-farm for the present year on the same terms as last year, viz.: $600; that the paupers, twelve in number, have been made as comfortable, your committee believes, as the circumstances of the case would admit.

We have contracted for the erection of a building on the farm for the overseer's family in accordance with the action of the board at its January meeting, which is now in process of erection, and when completed will give the

KNOX COUNTY ALMSHOUSE

Located five miles southeast of Galesburg, near Knoxville. Established in 1856. Enlarged in 1866. Buildings erected in 1866, 1876, 1890 and 1899. Value of buildings, $125,000.

At the September special meeting, held January, 1865, the committee on poor-farm closed their report with the following appeal for something to be done to relieve the deplorable conditions at the poorhouse.

Your committee do not feel willing to let this meeting pass without calling the serious attention of this Board to the condition of these poor, unfortunate beings whom God has committed to our especial care—a trust that your committee feel this honorable board has not discharged. There is but one very poor building for the poor master's family and the paupers, having six rooms below and two small chambers, a hall running through the building divides the lower rooms, two rooms and a small store room on one side are occupied by the family. On the other side, the two larger rooms are used during the day by the paupers and the small room has been fitted up as a grated cell for Crazy Hannah, a grated partition separating her from the stove.

At night the paupers, many of whom are idiotic or insane, are locked up in the two small chambers, and this with the present class of inmates, has to be done irrespective of numbers, and almost of the condition of the paupers. From this brief statement it will be seen how illy adapted the premises are to purposes of a poorhouse, even when all are in health; but when any are sick it is impossible to make them comfortable, and especially is this so when, as in the case of the man with the frozen feet, it becomes as a loathsome pesthouse, not only to the paupers but to the poor master and his family, the stench from the gangrened foot filling every part of the building, and sickening the inmates.

In view of these facts, your committee most earnestly call upon this board to take some steps to make such improvements that it may no longer with truth be said, "That the poorhouse is a disgrace to Knox county."

All of which is respectfully submitted,

R. W. Miles,
John S. Winter,
Cephas Arms,
Committee.

On motion of Supervisor Stewart, it was ordered that an appropriation not to exceed the sum of two thousand dollars be made to the committee on the poor-farm, to build a suitable dwelling for the poor master, and to make such repairs on the present building as may be needed to make it comfortable for the paupers.

April, 1865.—Report of poor-farm committee:

Mr. Arms from committee on poor-farm made the following report, which was on motion accepted and approved, and the clerk directed to issue orders to the parties named in accordance with said report:

Your poor-farm committee report that they have renewed the contract with Mr. Andrews as overseer of the poor-farm for the present year on the same terms as last year, viz.: $600; that the paupers, twelve in number, have been made as comfortable, your committee believes, as the circumstances of the case would admit.

whole of the main building for the accommodation of the paupers. We have audited the several bills presented for articles furnished to the poor-farm, and recommend that orders issue in favor of the persons, aggregating $587.98.

R. W. Miles,
John S. Winter,
Cephas Arms,
Committee.

September, 1865.—The undersigned committee on the poor-farm would respectfully report:

That in compliance with the order of the board we have built upon the poor-farm a dwelling house 18x30 feet in size, one and one-half stories high with a good cellar under the whole building, and that the same has been done in a substantial manner; that we have had both ends of the poorhouse new sided, and made other repairs to said building as we deemed necessary; that the entire cost of said new building, and repairs on the old house, amount to $1487.12. We would further state that owing to the number of flies we did not think it best to finish painting the buildings until fall.

January, 1866.—The clerk then read a circular from the superintendent of the Illinois hospital for the insane, when Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the committee on the poor-farm have discretion to provide for the support of insane paupers in the state hospital for the insane.

On motion of Mr. Gale it was ordered that the poor-farm committee be instructed to examine and report what action is necessary for the proper care and support of the incurable insane of the county.

Mr. Gale then presented the following resolution:

That this board will pay the expense incurred by the poor-farm committee, in preparing report and plans for the improvement of the poorhouse and premises to be made for the care of the insane, and full compensation for the time spent by the members of the committee.

That the said committee be authorized to make temporary provision for the care of the insane so far as the present arrangements of the poorhouse are insufficient.

April, 1866.—Mr. Gale offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the question relating to the construction of a poorhouse be referred to a committee to consist of the poor-farm committee and two other supervisors—Messrs. Beadle and Harden.

That the committee be instructed to re-examine the subject, and to consider the propriety of so modifying the proposed plans as to require the erection of a building suitable to the present wants of the county and capable of economical extension as the wants of the county increase.

That the committee also consider the necessity or propriety of purchasing an addition to the poor-farm, and also the advantages of a re-location on other grounds.

That this committee report at the next meeting, or at a special meeting to be called for the purpose by advice of such committee.

May, 1866.—On motion it was ordered that a special meeting of this board be held on the last Tuesday of May, being the 29th day of said month.

May Special, 1866.—Mr. Rhea offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, It is due to humanity that we should look well to the comfort and welfare of our fellow beings whose misfortune it is to be thrown upon the charity of our county, therefore

Resolved, That this board adopt the plan on exhibition in the clerk's office, drawn by W. W. Boyington of Chicago, for a poorhouse, and that we erect the following portions of said plan: the middle or steward's apartments, with the right wing of said plan, and that the balance of said plan be built and completed as soon as the demands require, any resolution of the board to the contrary; and that there be a building committee of three appointed to let and make a contract for said portions of plan mentioned above, and that the entire job be let to the same party, the said party giving bonds and security in double the cost of said building for the faithful performance of their duties and for further security to the county, the county shall retain one-third of the entire costs of said building until it is inspected and approved.

Mr. Gale offered the following substitute:

Resolved, That the committee appointed at the last meeting to whom was referred the questions relating to the construction of a poorhouse, be authorized to purchase the northwest quarter of Section 24, 11 N. 1 east, at a price not exceeding $7,600, if a perfect title can be had, and that the same committee be authorized to proceed to the erection on said grounds of a poorhouse on the plan recommended by the poor-farm committee at the last meeting, so much to be finished this season as is needed for present use.

Resolution adopted.

Mr. Conger presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee appointed to erect the poorhouse be authorized to borrow money on the credit of the county to such extent as may be necessary to meet their expenditures. On motion of Mr. Sanderson it was ordered that the clerk be added to said committee.

June Special Meeting, 1866.—The chairman directed the clerk to read the call under which this meeting is held, which is as follows:

"To James J. Egan, Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, State of Illinois:

"The undersigned being one-third of the members of the board of supervisors of Knox county, do request that a special meeting of said board will be held, to convene on the 12th day of June, A. D. 1866, at the court house in the City of Knoxville, to re-examine the matter of the location or re-location of the poor-farm. Dated this 2nd day of June, A. D. 1866.

"Rufus W. Miles,	"Wm. B. Kellar,
"G. W. Heagy,	"J. M. Combs,
"A. Ebright,	"E. B. Rhea,
"Cephas Arms,	"J. A. Adams,

"Reuben Heflin."

Mr. Rhea, moved that the action had at the adjourned meeting on the 29th day of May last be reconsidered, on which motion the yeas and nays were demanded, resulting: Yeas, Messrs. Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Ebright, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Stuckey, Rhea, Adams, Thompson and Chairman, 13.

Nays, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Beadle and Vaughn, 9. Absent, Mr. Gibbs. Adopted.

On motion of Mr. Gale, and by consent, the report of a part of the poor-farm committee was read.

Report of Messrs. L. E. Conger, E. S. Harden and Orin Beadle, members of the poor-farm committee.

The undersigned members of the committee authorized to purchase a poor-farm, and erect a poorhouse, beg leave respectfully to report:

The members of the committee then present met at the close of the last meeting of the board, and agreed to meet at the council room in the city of Galesburg, on the Friday following, Mr. Conger informing the committee that he had the refusal of the land proposed to be purchased, for the next day only. It was, as we understood, agreed that Mr. Conger should close the purchase at once, conditioned on the soundness of the title, and that A. M. Craig, Esq., should examine the records, and report to Mr. Conger as early as practicable the next day.

We considered the action of the board decisive as to the selection of the location, and understood the desire of the board to be that the work should be commenced with the least possible delay. Upon the next day, Mr. Conger learned that one of the persons of whom the land was to be purchased had expressed regret at having offered it at that price, and that another person was about to attempt to purchase. As there were four different owners of the land and either one of them might destroy the value of the purchase to the county by refusing to comply, and the power to enforce compliance with the agreement giving refusal was questionable, he thought no time ought to be lost in fastening the purchase.

Not expecting to get Mr. Craig's report until noon, he called for advice on Messrs. Douglas and Arnold, who had formerly owned the land. Mr. Arnold assured him that Mr. Craig could not report otherwise than that the title was complete of record; that Judge Douglas and himself had carefully perfected the title. He also exhibited the title deeds and expressed perfect confidence in the title.

Mr. Conger therefore ordered the preparation of the necessary papers, and notified the owners that he took the land, provided the examination showed good title.

Mr. Craig not arriving as expected, Mr. Conger proceeded to complete the purchase, and take the deeds. While so engaged, Mr. Craig arrived and submitted a full abstract of title, reported the title so far as appeared of record, perfect, and expressed the opinion that it was a safe title to buy. At the same time Mr. Conger received letters from Messrs. Miles and Arms, members of the committee, and from Mr. Egan, assuming to be a member of the committee, advising that the interest of the county might be promoted by a delay. These gentlemen gave no reason for their advice. Mr. Conger thought he saw no danger to the interests of the county in delay, and thought he had gone too far with the owners of the land, honorably to recede, and while some might be willing to release him others might not. At the same time Mr. Dunlap, supervisor from Henderson, informed him that he had just seen Mr. Miles; that Mr. Miles told him he desired delay because the citizens of Knoxville, disappointed by the action of the board, in locating the poorhouse, were disposed to endeavor to raise by subscription means to purchase or aid in purchasing a farm, if the board would re-consider the location, and that he intended to join with such supervisors as were willing to call a special meeting for the purpose.

The committee had already given a great deal of attention to the selection of the site, and Mr. Conger was convinced no other location that the board would accept could be obtained in the vicinity of either Galesburg or Knoxville for less than from $2000 to $4000 advance on the price of the land already selected, that none equally desirable could be had at that rate even. That to throw away the chance already secured, in the hopes that after the chance was gone, the citizens of Knoxville would contribute $6000 or $8000 for the purpose of controlling the location seemed to him a very unbusinesslike transaction. It seemed to him quite likely that those who desired to control the location might find it the cheapest way to purchase one of the four interests in the land in question, and thus defeat any attempt to secure it again, and compel the county to make a location elsewhere, on less favorable terms. In these views Mr. Dunlap entirely concurred.

On Friday, the time set for the meeting of the committee, there were present, Messrs. Harden, Beadle and Conger. After waiting until afternoon for the arrival of the other members of the committee they proceeded to receive statement from Mr. Conger of his action and examined the land.

In the absence of the gentleman who was understood to be chairman of the committee, Mr. Harden was appointed temporary chairman. Mr. Conger's action was approved and the deeds ordered to be placed on record.

We have explained our action and motives the more fully that we wish to show that we have not intended to show any lack of courtesy towards the other members of the committee, or in any wise to take any advantage of power temporarily placed in our hands by our associates in the board and tie up the hands of the board, or in any way embarrass its free action.

If the opinions of other members of the committee have not had due weight with us, it is because they did not give us an opportunity for consultation with them. We did no more than we thought the exigencies of the case required and believe that had the committee been full its members would have concurred; that under the circumstances we could not do less. What we have done has been done in good faith, and we believe for the interest of the county, and we expect to be sustained by the board. We are more than ever satisfied with the location. The land is of first quality, and possesses the diversified surface desirable in a farm, both for beauty and utility.

Near the center of the tract it affords a beautiful site for building, commanding a view of the whole farm, and of the county for miles around. Near enough to the highway, but sufficiently removed for desirable privacy.

In full view of all the railroads, a handsome building will be a conspicuous ornament to the county.

We are assured that there will be every facility given by the railroad company, both for delivering of building materials on the ground, and hereafter landing inmates upon the premises at a platform to be erected near the track, also for the delivery of fuel and other heavy supplies. Its proximity to a station where extra engines are kept constantly heated will enable the railroad to give many such facilities, without expense, that could not well be given the same distance from other stations.

Situated nearly midway between the western portion of the City of Galesburg and the City of Knoxville those large centers of population could not be better accommodated, and its nearness to the point where all the railroads converge gives it peculiar advantages in accommodating the county towns.

We believe the greatest value of the poorhouse will be as a hospital and that suitable provisions of ambulance, easy chairs and the proper use of the facilities of the railroad, very sick persons can be removed from any place in the county without danger, and that once there, they can be well cared for at an expense below the cost of medical attendance alone in the country towns.

To carry out such arrangements we consider a location on the railroad indispensable, and we regard it as a great advantage that the superintendent shall receive his mail at Galesburg, from which point he can communicate with the authorities of the several towns with promptness, and can in most cases know the situation, and remove the patient in 24 to 48 hours less time than if the location was at another point.

In conclusion we recommend that the committee be instructed to proceed with the construction of the building with the least delay, consistent with the proper economy of the work.

In the purchase of the land, the amount expended was $7600.00.

E. S. HARDEN,
O. BEADLE,
L. F. CONGER,
Committee.

Mr. Miles from committee on poor-farm, made a verbal report of the action of the remainder of the committee.

On motion of Mr. Conger and by consent the abstract of title made by Hon. A. M. Craig on the northwest quarter of Section 24, in Township 11 N. 1 E. was read.

On motion of Mr. Arms, it was voted that the board immediately on convening in the afternoon, will hear a report on the title of said land from Mr. Sanford.

On motion of Mr. Heagy, adjourned until half past one o'clock P. M. Board met pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolutions as a substitute for Mr. Gale's resolution, passed at the adjourned meeting, May 29, last.

Resolved, That the purchase of the northwest quarter of Section 24, 11 N. 1 E. made by the committee of the poor-farm be and the same is hereby ratified and approved. And, be it further

Resolved, That the committee on the poor-farm hereafter consist of Messrs. R. W. Miles, C. Arms and L. E. Conger, and that in case the piece of land, of about 32 acres south of the poor-farm, owned by John Eads, be donated to the county free of costs, and that the piece of ground west of the poor farm of about 36 acres, owned by W. Y. Miller, can be purchased for $35 per acre, and a good defensible title can be had, then and in that case, the aforesaid committee be and they are hereby instructed to purchase said land of said Miller, and to commence the construction of a poorhouse as soon as possible on the grounds of the present poor-farm; the same to be constructed after the plans and specifications of W. W. Boyington, now in the hands of the poor-farm committee, save and except one of the wings, the committee to determine which one to be left off. And the committee are hereby empowered to borrow money on the credit of the county for the construction of said building, and the purchase of the land of said Miller, and that already purchased by the poor-farm committee, to the amount of forty thousand dollars, and no more, without further authority from this board, and that the committee retain 20 per cent. of the contract price in their hands for the faithful completion of the work. And, be it further

Resolved, That in case a good and sufficient title to the above mentioned land, satisfactory to the members of the committee, cannot be had, on the conditions above specified, then and in that case, the committee be and is hereby authorized to commence the construction of a poorhouse on the same conditions above specified, on the land now purchased by the committee, that is the northwest quarter of Section 24, Township 11 N. 1 E.

Which substitute was accepted by the board by the following votes: Yeas, Messrs. Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Stuckey, Rhea, Adams, Thompson, Vaughn and Chairman, 13. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Ebright and Beadle, 9.

Mr. Gale offered the following as a substitute for the substitute of Mr. Vaughn.

Resolved, That when this board adjourn it adjourn for five weeks.

That the purchase of the northwest quarter of Section 24, in Township 11 N. 1 E. be confirmed.

That the supervisor from Indian Point, Victoria, Truro, Henderson and Sparta be appointed a committee to report upon the best location for a poorhouse, taking into account convenience to the county, expense of site, cost of buildings and future running expenses.

Mr. Combs moved to amend by striking out the names of the committee and that the chair appoint said committee. Amendment lost by the following vote: Yeas, Messrs. Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Combs, Kellar, Rhea, Adams, Thompson and Vaughn, 10. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Ebright, Beadle, Johnston and Stuckey, 11.

Mr. Arms moved to amend Mr. Gale's resolution by adding Messrs. Combs and Kellar to the committee named, which amendment was carried by the following vote: Yeas, Messrs. Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Stuckey, Rhea, Adams, Thompson, Vaughn and Chairman, 13. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Ebright and Beadle, 9.

The question recurring on the acceptance of the substitute of Mr. Gale as amended, it was accepted by the following vote: Yeas, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Heflin, Newell, Beadle and Stuckey, 11. Nays, Messrs. Heagy, Arms, Ebright, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Rhea, Adams, Thompson, Vaughn and Mr. Chairman, 10.

On motion of Mr. Stuckey adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The chairman announced that the substitute of Mr. Gale under consideration yesterday evening, was in order, when Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolutions as a substitute therefor:

Resolved, That the purchase of the northwest quarter of Section 24, Township 11 N. 1 E. made by Messrs. L. E. Conger, O. Beadle and E. S. Harden, members of the poor-farm committee, be and the same is hereby ratified and approved. And, it is further

Resolved, That the committee on the poor-farm hereafter consist of Messrs. R. W. Miles, C. Arms and L. E. Conger, and that in case the piece of land of about 32 acres, south of and adjoining the poor-farm, owned by John Eads, and the piece of land west of and adjoining the poor-farm, of about 36 acres, owned by William Y. Miller, be donated, and a deed of the same made to the county free of cost; then, and in that case, the aforesaid committee be and they are hereby instructed and empowered to commence the construction of a poorhouse as soon as possible, on the grounds of the present poor-farm; the same to be constructed after the plans and specifications of W. W. Boyington, now in the hands of the poor-farm committee, save and except one of the wings, extending from the steward's department; the committee to determine which one to be left off, and the said committee are hereby empowered to borrow money on the credit of the county for the construction of said building, and for the payment of the aforesaid northwest quarter of Section 24, Township 11 N. 1 E. to the amount of thirty-five thousand dollars, and no more, without further authority from this board, and that the committee retain 20 per cent of the contract price in their hands for the faithful completion of the work. And, be it further

Resolved, That in case a good and sufficient title to the above described lands, adjoining the present poor-farm, cannot be had on the above mentioned conditions, and satisfactory to the aforesaid committee; then and in that case the committee be and it is hereby instructed and authorized to commence immediately the construction of a poorhouse on the northwest quarter of Section 24, Township 11 N. 1 E. in the same manner, and on the same conditions as above specified. And, it is further

Resolved, That all resolutions heretofore passed by this board, and inconsistent with this resolution, in regard to the construction of a poorhouse, be and they are hereby rescinded.

Mr. Rhea offered the following amendment:

Whereas, there have been deeds executed to Knox county of the N. W. 24, 11 N. 1 E. under instructions of Mr. L. E. Conger, a member of the poor-farm committee under protest of one-half of said committee, therefore Resolved, That Knox county quit claim to the said L. E. Conger, all claims in said tract of land as the record does show a title to said land contrary to instructions, and the action of said members of committee are hereby rescinded. And that the contractors of said buildings be required to give security in double the amount of costs of buildings.

A question of order being raised on the amendment, the chairman decided the amendment out of order.

And the question being on the acceptance of Mr. Vaughn's substitute the yeas and nays were demanded, resulting: Yeas, Messrs. Newell, Heagy, Arms, Ebright, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Stuckey, Rhea, Adams, Thompson, Vaughn and Mr. Chairman, 13. Nays, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Heflin, Beadle and Gibbs, 10. Substitute accepted.

A motion to adjourn was then offered, on which the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas, Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Heflin, Beadle, Combs and Gibbs, 11. Nays, Messrs. Newell, Heagy, Arms, Ebright, Kellar, Johnston, Stuckey, Rhea, Adams, Thompson, Vaughn and Mr. Chairman, 12. Lost.

Mr. Ebright moved that a committee of five be appointed to receive proposals from the several points desiring to secure the location of the poor-farm, and report at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon. Adopted. The chairman appointed Messrs. Ebright, Stuckey, Conger, Vaughn and Rhea, said committee.

On motion adjourned until half past one o'clock.

Mr. Ebright from committee on receiving proposals from towns for the location of poor-farm, reported the following proposals:

1st. I, John Eads, do hereby agree to convey by deed, for the purpose of, and as a poor-farm for Knox county, state of Illinois, to the board of supervisors of said county, my land lying east of the city of Knoxville, in said county, bounded on the north by the Peoria road leading east from Knoxville, on the west and south, by the road leading from Maquon to Knoxville, being about 117 acres and parts of the S. E. quarter of Sec. 27 and N. E. 34 in township 11 N., range 2 east in said county, for the sum of $17 per acre, provided said board will erect, or cause to be erected on said land the poorhouse now in contemplation of erection.

2nd. I, Cephas Arms, supervisor of the town of Knox, do hereby offer the donation of 33 acres, lying south of and adjoining the poor-farm, owned by John Eads, and about 36 acres adjoining, and lying west of the poor-farm, owned by Wm. Y. Miller, for poor-farm purposes to the board of supervisors of Knox county, Ill., provided said board will erect or cause to be erected on said poor-farm the poorhouse now in contemplation of erection, and do guarantee the conveyance of said lands to the said board on the above conditions.

3rd. I will see that the county have paid into the treasury within ten days $10,000 for the purpose of erecting a poorhouse on Boyington's plan, on N. W. 24, 11 N. 1. E. W. SELDEN GALE.

4th. The town of Lynn will donate to the county of Knox, the S. W. quarter of section 10, 13 N. 4 E. with a clear title, for the purpose of erecting a county poorhouse upon it.

JOSEPH D. GIBBS,
Superintendent.

On motion of Mr. Sanderson it was voted that the report of the committee be accepted.

The question being on the adoption of Mr. Vaughn's resolution, Mr. Sanderson moved to substitute therefor the following resolution:

Resolved, That this board confirm the purchase of the northwest quarter of section 24, town 11 N. 1 E.

The yeas and nays being demanded, resulted: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Heflin, Ebright, Beadle, Stuckey, Thompson, Vaughn and Gibbs, 14. Nays—Messrs. Newell, Heagy, Arms, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Rhea, Adams and Chairman, 9. Substitute accepted, when on motion said resolution was adopted.

Mr. Arms offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the proposition of the town of Knox, donating lands in addition to the present poor-farm, upon the conditions specified, be accepted.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution as a substitute:

Resolved, That the poorhouse building committee be directed to proceed to erect on the northwest quarter of section 24, 11 north 1 east, the center and one wing of the plan for poorhouse adopted at last meeting, provided the sum of $10,000 shall be paid into the county treasury within ten days by the authorities of Galesburg, as a donation for the purpose.

That the said committee be authorized to borrow money for the purpose of such erection and payment of land, to an amount not exceeding $15,000.

Mr. Arms withdrew his resolution, when Mr. Rhea offered the following substitute for Mr. Gale's resolution:

Resolved, That the committee on the poor-farm hereafter consist of Messrs. R. W. Miles, C. Arms and L. E. Conger; and that in case the piece of land of about 32 acres, south of and adjoining the poor-farm, owned by John Eads, and the piece of land west of and adjoining the poor-farm, of about 36 acres, owned by W. Y. Miller, be donated and a deed of the same made to the county, free of costs; then and in that case, the aforesaid committee be, and they are hereby instructed and empowered to commence the construction of a poorhouse as soon as possible, on the grounds of the present poor-farm—the same to be constructed after the plans and specifications of W. W. Boyington, now in the hands of the poor-farm committee, save and except one of the wings extending from the steward's department—the committee to determine which one to be left off. And the said committee are hereby empowered to borrow money on the credit of the county for the construction of the said building, and for the payment of the (purchase money of the) northwest quarter of section 24, town 11 N. 1 E. to the amount of twenty thousand dollars, and no more, without further authority from this board. And that the committee retain twenty per cent of the contract price in their hands for the faithful completion of the work. And be it further

Resolved, That in case a good and sufficient title to the above described lands adjoining the present poor-farm, cannot be had on the above mentioned conditions, and satisfactory to the aforesaid committee, then and in that case, the committee be, and it is hereby instructed and authorized to commence immediately the construction of a poorhouse, on the N. W. quarter of Section 24, T. 11 N. 1 E. in the same manner and on the same conditions as above specified, And be it further

Resolved, That all resolutions heretofore passed by this board, and inconsistent with this resolution in regard to the construction of a poorhouse, be, and they are hereby rescinded.

On the adoption of which substitute, the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Stuckey, Rhea, Adams, Thompson, Vaughn and Mr. Chairman, 13. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Ebright, Beadle and Gibbs, 10. Adopted.

And the question being shall the resolution pass, the yeas and nays were called, and the resolution adopted by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Ebright, Combs, Kellar, Johnston, Stuckey, Rhea, Adams, Thompson, Vaughn and Mr. Chairman, 14. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Gale, Conger, Clay, Sanderson, Dunlap, Beadle and Gibbs, 9.

On motion adjourned.

January, 1867—The poor-farm committee reported that by their estimates it will require about $15,000 additional to complete the building and properly stock and improve said farm.

REPORT OF POOR-FARM COMMITTEE

JANUARY, 7th, 1867.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

As the poor-farm committee made no written report at the Sept. meeting, we will briefly state that at the special meeting in June 1866, your committee was directed (provided the titles to certain parcels of land adjoining the old poor-farm, proposed to be donated to Knox county by the citizens of Knoxville, were good and sufficient titles) to accept of the deeds, and proceed to erect one wing and the center building of the poorhouse according to plans and specifications of W. W. Boyington. Your committee consulted Messrs. Sanford and Craig as to the titles to said land. They pronounced the titles good. Your committee accepted the deeds and immediately advertised for proposals for erecting the building. Upon opening the bids, the bid of Mr. Wm. Armstrong was decided to be the lowest and best bid, and the contract was immediately drawn up and signed accordingly. Mr. Armstrong contracts that for the sum of $26,900.00 he will erect and complete the building ready for use, warming apparatus included, subject to the approval of W. W. Boyington. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, Mr. Armstrong will not be able to complete the building according to the time of the contract, but your committee believe that Mr. Armstrong has faithfully tried to comply with the terms of the contract not only as to time, but in material and workmanship of the building. Your committee was also authorized to borrow $20,000 to be expended on the building and for paying for the N. W. quarter of section 24, 11 N. 2 E. An itemized statement attached shows the amount of expenditures to be $16,769.99.

April, 1867.—Mr. Gale moved that when this board adjourned, that it be until called together by the poor-farm committee. Carried. Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Gale, Conger, Sanderson, Whiting, Wyckoff, Beadle, Miles, Johnston, Chambers, Hall, Vaughn and Gibbs, 15. Nays—Messrs. McKee, Sumner, Charles, Keightley, Hanrick, Swigart and Shaffer, 7. Excused, Messrs. Dunlap and Wood, 2.

September, 1867.—Mr. Miles offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That the buildings heretofore known and called the Knox county poorhouse, be hereafter known and called the Knox county almshouse.

REPORT OF POOR-FARM COMMITTEE

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

The committee on poor-farm and building would report as follows:

That since the last meeting of the board they have borrowed money to the amount of		$19,578.00
Amount previously borrowed		28,550.00
Total amount borrowed		$48,128.00
The amount expended by the committee since the commencement of the poorhouse in July, 1866, is—(Sundry items)	$47,239.04
		$47,239.04
Amount paid by committee on the original contract	$26,900.00
Amount allowed by W. W. Boyington for extra work and heating apparatus	5,650.82
Money expended for Galesburg farm	8,201.83
Amount paid on notes prin. and int	1,500.00
Range and fixtures	450.95
Grates and mantles	217.00
W. W. Boyington	690.55
Making a total of		$43,611.15
Leaving a balance not accounted for of		3,627.89
		$47,239.04

This balance of $3,627.89 has been expended by the committee in stocking the farm, tiles and drain, wagons, harness, plows, furniture, expenses of insane at Jacksonville, etc., etc. All of which is shown in the report of the committee in separate items in the payment of the amount $47,239.04.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. W. Miles,
L. E. Conger,
Geo. A. Charles.

January 13, 1868.—Called meeting.—Mr. Gale moved that Messrs. Conger and Whiting be appointed a committee to sell such portion of the Galesburg poor-farm as lies north of the railroad. Adopted.

Mr. Gale then moved that the sale made by the committee of such portion of the Galesburg poor-farm (N. W. 24, 11 N., 1 E.) that lies south of the railroad be approved and confirmed. Adopted.

July Meeting, 1876.—The almshouse committee presents the following further report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

Your committee on almshouse and paupers would respectfully present the following:

Whereas, The present ventilation of the Knox county almshouse has been declared by the secretary of the state board of charities, to be wholly insufficient to secure wholesome air for the inmates, and

Whereas, Your committee by careful examination find the accommodation for the insane wholly inadequate, all the cells being filled, and there are several still running at large on the premises, for whose safety and the safety of others, cells should be provided; and there are also quite a number at the insane hospitals that are liable to be returned at any time; and

Whereas, The laundry accommodations were originally designed to be in the east wing of the originally planned building, but are now in the west basement designed for cellars, and is not only wholly inadequate for the purpose, but the dampness arising from it is injurious to the building, and endangers the health of the inmates; and

Whereas, The heating apparatus in said building has entirely given out, and must be renewed at great expense before another winter; and

Whereas, Under the present arrangements it is impossible for the superintendent to keep the sexes properly separated, which is absolutely necessary in order to sustain the moral character of the institution; and

Whereas, Labor and material are at this time unusually cheap, therefore your committee would earnestly recommend, that the board of supervisors take immediate steps to add to the present building the east wing contemplated in the original design of said building, the plans and specifications of which your committee understand are in the hands of the county clerk, and also to adopt a proper plan for heating and ventilation of the whole building upon the most approved and economical plan. All of which is respectfully submitted.

D. M. EIKER,
G. V. DIETERICH,
J. S. CHAMBERS,
WM. G. WEST,
S. S. STUCKEY,
Committee.

On motion of Mr. Holyoke, the matter was referred to almshouse committee, with instructions to report fully at the adjourned meeting of the board, the probable cost of the contemplated improvement, and expense of necessary heating and ventilation.

July Adjourned Meeting, 1876.—Mr. Eiker, from almshouse committee, presented the following special report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

Your committee on almshouse and paupers, to whom was referred the matter reported by them at the July meeting, would report that they have attended to the duty assigned to them, and herewith present the original plans and specifications, from which the present building was erected, together with drawings by Messrs. Parry & Stevens, presenting the changes which your committee would recommend. From them you will readily see that, although we have added 8 feet in length and 2 feet in width to the east wing, yet it will not detract from the original design nor materially increase the expense. In the present building we have but 8 insane cells. In the new wing we get 19, together with all the laundry and baking accommodations, the want of which has so long been felt. To heat and ventilate the entire building, your committee would recommend that the boiler be situated outside of the west end of the building; that a chimney be erected for boiler purposes, from which the best of ventilation can be secured for that part of the building now erected. For the new part, ventilation can readily be obtained from the large chimney shown in the plan.

The estimated cost of building complete in all parts, exclusive of heating apparatus and fixtures, as furnished us by Messrs. Parry & Stevens, will be about $15,000, and as furnished us by W. O. Thomas, of Macomb, $13,425, the latter party omitting several points which would increase his estimate. For heating and ventilating, the estimated cost is as follows: For boiler-house, setting boiler, and smoke-stack, 45 feet high, with sheet iron flue, same height, $620; for heating apparatus, including boiler and all necessary fixtures to insure the heating of the whole building, $2,339.68, the latter estimate from Frost Manufacturing Company, making the estimates, including all complete, amount to $17,959.68.

Your committee are of the opinion that the estimates presented are liberal, and that the cost of contemplated improvement would not exceed estimates, but competition in bidding for contract would materially reduce them. For reasons given in our former report, and correspondence furnished us by the clerk, from our insane asylums, your committee feel the urgent necessity of putting the building under contract at once, as we are informed that it can be completed by January 1, 1877.

And we therefore would recommend that the plans and specifications, as presented, be adopted, and that provision be made for the amount of money necessary, at a low rate of interest, until our present tax can be levied and collected, and that the clerk be directed to advertise for sealed proposals for building and heating, separate or combined, according to plan and specifications, for the space of 15 days.

D. M. Eiker,
J. S. Chambers,
G. V. Dieterich,
S. S. Stuckey,
William G. West.

On motion adjourned until half past one o'clock.

Board met pursuant to adjournment.

The order of business being the special report of the committee on almshouse and paupers.

Mr. Felt moved that the special report of the committee be accepted, adopted, and its recommendations concurred in. Carried, and the clerk directed to advertise for proposals as contemplated by the report.

Mr. Eiker presented the following resolutions:

Resolved, That when this board adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday, August 21st, for the purpose of opening bids for building addition to almshouse, and the transaction of other business connected therewith, as may be deemed necessary.

The yeas and nays being called, the resolution was adopted:

Yeas—Messrs. Campbell, Felt, Gale, Brown, Chambers, Sisson, McFarland, Barnett, Eiker, Woodmansee, Temple, Stuckey, Sloan, West and Mr. Chairman, 15.

Nays—Messrs. Bates, Deatherage, Holyoke, Curtis, Swigart, England, Tucker and Gaines, 8.

August Special Meeting, 1876.—Mr. Dieterich, from committee on almshouse, made the following report:

Galesburg, Aug. 21st, 1876.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee, to whom was submitted the duty of comparing bids made, for adding on an east wing of the Knox county almshouse, and the heating apparatus necessary to the completion of old and the contemplated new building herewith report that, we have had the various bids under consideration, and if we are to decide in favor of the bids made, on the basis of the plans and specifications upon which the bids were made, we have decided in favor of Stevens & Parry, whose bid is $16,250; but a bid has been presented by Parry & Stevens, amounting to $17,400, which includes the largest sized boiler that any of the bidders have named, and qualifies all and everything that may be needed to the full completion of building and heating apparatus, including all changes that may be conceived necessary for comfort and convenience, during the progress of the building, without extra charge. We submit to the board the two propositions, and ask that they consider and decide which of the two propositions had best be accepted. As for ourselves, we recommend this latter proposition, and think it will be cheaper and more satisfactory, in the conclusion, than the first.

D. M. EIKER,
G. V. DIETERICH,
J. S. CHAMBERS,
S. S. STUCKEY,
WM. G. WEST.

On motion, the report of the committee was accepted.

Mr. Holyoke offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That Messrs. Parry & Stevens be and are hereby awarded the contract for the construction of the east wing and other improvements at the Knox county almshouse, they having, in our judgment, made the lowest and best bid for the same.

Resolved, That the almshouse committee be authorized and directed to draw a contract with Messrs. Parry & Stevens, which shall specify all the materials to be furnished and all the work to be performed; that no alterations or additions be made which shall increase the expense above the contract price; and that said committee be empowered to bind the county to pay the contract price of $17,400 in monthly payments, not exceeding 85 per cent. on the work done and the materials furnished during the month preceding.

Mr. Gale moved that the almshouse committee be authorized to employ Zelotes Cooley, Esq., as superintendent of building.

Mr. Dieterich moved to amend by substituting the name of Mr. D. M. Eiker, in place of Mr. Cooley. Lost.

Yeas—Messrs. Campbell, Felt, Dieterich, Chambers, Barnett, Woodmansee, Stuckey, Soles and Mr. Chairman, 9.

Nays—Messrs. Gale, Brown, Sisson, Deatherage, McFarland, Holyoke, Curtis, England, Swigart, Temple, Sloan, West, Tucker and Gaines, 14.

The motion of Mr. Gale was then adopted.

It being intimated that Mr. Cooley might not accept the position of superintendent.

Mr. Holyoke moved, that if the committee cannot employ Mr. Cooley, that they employ some other competent person as superintendent, who is not a member of the committee. Adopted.

January Meeting, 1877.—Part of report of almshouse committee.

We expected to be able to report the fact that the east wing, which is under contract for building, had been completed and ready for use. In this we have been disappointed, but in accordance with the expectations of the builders, it will be ready for delivery in two weeks hence, and we suggest that Mr. Cooley examine the premises thoroughly before accepting the keys.

During the process of putting up the new part of the building, it was discovered that some necessary repairs should be applied to the old building, in order to protect it from decay, which has been done by order of the committee, after carefully weighing the importance of making the repairs.

Respectfully submitted,

D. M. EIKER,
G. V. DIETERICH,
WM. G. WEST,
J. S. CHAMBERS,
S. S. STUCKEY.

On motion the report of committee was accepted and its recommendations concurred in, and the clerk directed to issue orders in payment.

April Meeting, 1877.—The following, taken from the report of the almshouse committee submitted April 23rd, 1877, describes quite fully the conditions then existing in regard to the almshouse which had recently been constructed:

From the exhibit herewith made of cost per week for each inmate since our last meeting, a disparity between this and former reports upon the same, seems startling, and if not cognizant of the causes of accountability for this disparity, you might bring accusations of unnecessary extravagance having been indulged in, in furnishing supplies for the place. If, however, we deduct from the footing of the bill, all that pertains to furnishing materials for the full equipment of the premises, and include the improvements that were actually necessary to be done, in order to protect the old part of the house from decay, our exhibit per capita will not exceed the average of our former reports.

Your committee further report, that during the process of putting up the new wing of the building, the fact was made manifest that the original specifications did not contemplate all that was necessary for adapting the premise to comfort and convenience. Several changes and improvements were suggested by Mrs. Cleveland, accepted by the committee, and executed by the contractors, without additional expense to the county, but at considerable expense to the contractors.

Your committee further submit, that the county of Knox has now a building, ample in capacity for accommodating all of the pauper element, that will be likely at any time to need county charity; and at the same time accommodate a due proportion of those who are afflicted with lunacy or idiocy.

The surrender of the new wing to the superintendent whom you appointed to supervise the work, and character of the material used in the construction of the building, and from whom you will have a report, created the impression of disparity in appearance between the old and the new, that it stimulated Mrs. Cleveland to give the old part a thorough renovating in order that harmony should be obtained at once, instead of deferring this part of the work to May, the usual period for cleaning up and making repairs, always needed when this duty is performed; and the expenses for which usually amount to three, and sometimes four hundred dollars, and has always been reported at our July meeting. This work being done, the expense of it is included in this report. The premises are in commendable order, and our worthy matron will shirk no duty incumbent upon her, to keep them continuously in praiseworthy condition.

In conclusion we submit that, in accordance with your instructions, we insured the almshouse for the term of five years from the 15th day of January last, to the amount of $30,000, and the furniture within the house to the extent of $3,000, at two per cent. for the term or period of five years.

D. M. EIKER,
G. V. DIETERICH,
WM. G. WEST.

The foregoing report, having been amended by the committee to conform to resolution of Mr. Gale, adopted yesterday.

On motion of Mr. Gale, the report of the committee, as recorded, was accepted, and the clerk ordered to issue orders in payment of allowances made.

The almshouse committee presented the following report of Mr. Z. Cooley, superintendent of building east wing of almshouse:

State of Illinois, } ss.
Knox County. }

To the Honorable, the Board of Supervisors of said County:

The undersigned, who was appointed to superintend the building of the addition to the Knox county almshouse, respectfully reports to your honorable body, that the contractors, Messrs. Parry & Stevens, have erected and completed said building in all respects as required by their contract, in accordance with the plans and specifications, to the satisfaction of the undersigned in all respects, except the plastering; which is owing to the very unfavorable weather at the time when it was done, and when it had to be done in order that the contractors might complete their building within the time they were required to do so by their contract; and that the county might have the use of the building during the past winter. The undersigned did not think that he ought to require the contractors to delay their work until favorable weather for so doing, and which there was then no prospect of until another season. Then the reason that said plastering is not entirely satisfactory to the undersigned, is not that the material used and the workmanship furnished was not good and sufficient, but for the reason that at the time it was done and required to be done, it was impossible to do or make a first-class job. The undersigned would further report that upon an examination of said plastering during the past week, he found it to be in a better condition than he had expected. That an expenditure of from eight to ten dollars, whenever in the future the house required cleaning and renovating, would remove most of the defects that now appear upon some of the walls. The undersigned would further report that he has granted to the contractors, Messrs. Parry & Stevens, to apply upon their said contract, certificates for the sum of $17,300. All of which is respectfully submitted.

Z. COOLEY.

On motion of Mr. Eiker, the report of Mr. Cooley was accepted, and the clerk directed to issue an order in favor of Parry & Stevens for the sum of one hundred dollars, in full payment of contract for building east wing of almshouse.

Mr. Holyoke offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we endorse the action of the almshouse committee in all the expenses incurred by the county in the renovation and repair of the old building, and the furnishing of both old and new; and inasmuch as everything about the almshouse is in first-rate order, we instruct the almshouse committee to rest upon the laurels already won, and incur no more expenses at the almshouse, except for subsistence and hired help; until the next meeting of the board, unless absolutely necessary.

April Meeting, 1878.—Mr. Temple offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the almshouse committee be instructed when making their report and pauper bills submitted to them, to report for payment only that class of bills which by the rules heretofore and at present in force become properly county charges.

Mr. Sellon moved to amend rule in force relating to pauper claims by adding the following clause:

"Except in case where temporary, or partial support can be furnished by the county at less expense than if removed to the almshouse."

Mr. McKee moved to lay proposed addition to the rule on the table. Lost.

Yeas—Messrs. McKee, Sisson, Bair, Sumner, Higgins, Sloan and Tucker, 7.

Nays—Messrs. Butler, Latimer, Gale (W. S.), Dieterich, Nelson, Hale, McFarland, Eiker, Robson, Stephenson, Benson, Aldrich, Temple, Multer, West, Gaines and Sellon, 17.

The motion of Mr. Sellon was then adopted, and it was ordered that the rule as amended be published with the proceedings of the board.

The rule as amended reads:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the several overseers of the poor in this county to remove to the almshouse all persons requiring relief from the county, except in the following cases:

Persons having some contagious disease.

Persons whose health will be endangered by removal.

Persons not residents of the county requiring only slight aid.

Cases, where temporary or partial support can be furnished by the county, at less expense than if removed to the almshouse.

And that the county will not be responsible for relief given outside of almshouse, except in above cases.

July Meeting, 1878.—Mr. Hale offered the following resolution:

That a committee of three be appointed to devise some means of adequate protection from fire for the Knox county almshouse property and report to the next regular meeting of this board.

That before the next regular meeting of this board the superintendent of the Knox county almshouse be instructed to discontinue the practice of smoking tobacco by the inmates of said institution.

That before the next regular meeting of the board the superintendent of the Knox county almshouse, be instructed to discontinue the habitual use of opium in any form by the inmates of said institution.

On motion referred to committee on almshouse and paupers.

September Meeting, 1878.—Mr. Hale from special committee in regard to securing almshouse property from damage of fire, by permission, presented the following report:

GALESBURG, Ill., Sept. 10, 1878.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

Your special committee, appointed at the last regular session of this board, to devise some means of adequate protection from fire for the Knox county almshouse property beg leave to report that they have given some consideration to the subject matter referred to them.

They report that they find the premises at present almost wholly without means of extinguishment of a fire if one should occur. They recommend that water tanks of suitable size, and adapted to the purpose designed, be placed in the attics of the two wings of the building, and elsewhere if found necessary, to be kept constantly filled with water, and with necessary reels of hose on each floor and with convenient means of attachment with the standing pipes, as a tolerable means of extinguishment of fires in case of their occurrence. They recommend that your committee (or such other committee as you shall appoint), be authorized to employ Zelotes Cooley, Esq., or some other competent person, to prepare and submit a plan in detail for carrying out the foregoing recommendations, with an estimate of the probable cost, to be submitted to this board, at its next regular session.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

T. J. HALE,
D. M. EIKER,
D. W. ALDRICH.

On motion the report of the committee was accepted and adopted.

Mr. Eiker from committee on almshouse read report of county physician, and on motion of Mr. Hale said report was received and ordered to be printed with the proceedings of the board.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN:—I would respectfully report for the information of the people of the county that there are at present 106 inmates in the Knox county almshouse. Of this number 25 are insane. The capacity of the house for the proper care of this class of persons is limited by the number of properly prepared rooms. Of these there are only 23. While some of this class may, with safety, be permitted to enjoy the free range of the common wards in the day time, there is not one that can be trusted at liberty during the night. Common humanity requires that this class be restricted in their liberty as little as possible, compatible with their safety, the safety of the house and the safety of others. When it is considered what devices such persons will resort to for the purpose of greater freedom of action, it is not to be wondered at that escapes will occur. They do occur at asylums, where every safeguard known to hospital management is in force, and the wonder is they do not occur more frequently from our almshouse, where the means for the absolute safety of the inmates is so limited. This class is progressively increasing in number. They are being sent back from the insane hospital as incurable; the County court continues to send them till arrangements are made for their reception at the asylum, which reception generally turns on the demand that some of the county's representatives at the asylum be removed back to the county almshouse. This interchange of recently insane for incurable insane has been going on between the almshouse and insane asylum for now these several years. The records of Knox county do not show a return at all commensurate with the expense of hospital treatment. Of the numerous cases sent to the state hospitals, how many have returned cured? The gentlemen of the board can each answer for himself and for his own township. The function of the state asylums, it seems, is principally the safe care of the insane, and this care should not be limited by the mere fact that a "county's quota" is full, any more than the care of the almshouse should be limited by the mere fact that one or two townships furnish the larger number of inmates, some townships not being represented at all. This is a reason, we understand, that the asylum authorities give for not promptly receiving those recently adjudged insane. If now Knox county's quota is more than full at the asylum, the capacity of the almshouse is more than exhausted, and other provisions must soon be provided for this unfortunate class of our citizens; and no apology is needed if I present in this connection some statistics bearing upon the expense of furnishing the protection.

From a paper read by Dr. Wilbur of New York before the American Social Science Association in September, 1877, it appears that the cost of the building alone of twenty insane asylums in the United States was $19,506,000. Number of insane provided for by these twenty asylums, 9,875. Furniture and other appliances are not included in the above estimate. The per capita cost is more than $2,000. But one Illinois asylum was included in the above estimate. The cost of it was put down at $534,000 with a capacity of 450, making it $1,186.66 per capita. Estimating the cost of the Knox county almshouse at $50,000, with an average family of 75, the cost per capita is only $666. Showing a very decided economy in the county taking care of its own incurable insane. Whether it is generally known or not, there has been between ten and twelve million dollars uselessly expended in the construction of state hospitals, of such a character that one-half of the insane of the country might be luxuriously taken care of while the other half are insecurely kept in almshouses. And here I might state that it is the judgment of those qualified to give an opinion in the case, that the insane and sane paupers should not be kept together; that is, separate buildings should be provided for each.

In addition to the 25 insane in the almshouse there are 25 idiots. These patients, when the idiocy does not depend upon epilepsy, might very well be kept with the sane poor. Since the last annual meeting (September, 1877) there have been but five deaths:

Intemperance and old age.....90 years
Epilepsy .....70 years
Bright's disease .....49 years
Consumption .....35 years
Cholera infantum and congenital syphilis..... 3 months

There has been in the same time three births. The superintendent has provided a register and library fund book for the use of visitors who may feel disposed to contribute anything towards providing reading matter for the family. This fund has already secured the regular reception of several magazines and enabled the superintendent to purchase quite a number of useful and entertaining books for the family. The Library is indebted to Mr. Cephas Arms of Knoxville for some twenty or twenty-five volumes, Judge Douglas and daughter of Galesburg have the thanks of the family for numerous volumes of the "Ladies Repository." The First National bank of Knoxville has continued its contribution of files of the Chicago dailies. For all these favors the family desires, through me, to extend its thanks.

It remains for me to report on the resolution of the board, at its last meeting, in respect to the discontinuance of the habitual use of opium in any form by the inmates of the almshouse. Before the passage of the resolution I had made several attempts to reduce the amount used. Every reduction I made was ascribed by the patients to some "grudge" the superintendent or physician had against them, so I availed myself of a semi-permission, on the part of some members of the board, to continue the usual allowance, till the present meeting with the full understanding of the patients that it would then positively and abruptly stop. Any subterfuge on the part of the habitual opium eater, in order to obtain the drug, is considered honorable and here, as the last supply has run short, certain plans have been resorted to. One of the patients, after boasting that he was cured, was caught at the medicine case helping himself from the laudanum bottle. He states that he has had no morphine from the county for six weeks. To your physician's personal knowledge he has had two drachm bottles of morphine in this time, his full amount.

We can see no more reason why opium intoxication should be permitted at the almshouse than alcoholic intoxication; and we are thankful to the board that it has assumed the responsibility of forbidding its continuance, in this way relieving us of unjust censure on the part of the patients.

Respectfully,

M. A. McCLELLAND.

Mr. Gale presented a resolution directing the almshouse committee to advertise for supplies for that institution. Referred to committee on almshouse and paupers.

January, 1879.—Mr. Hale, from special committee to whom was referred the subject of protection to the almshouse from fire, presented the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

Your committee, heretofore appointed to inquire into and report upon the practicability and expense of providing some adequate protection from loss and casualty from fire in the Knox county almshouse and by subsequent resolution, authorized to employ Zelotes Cooley, Esq., to examine the several plans proposed, and report the result, with the probable expense of the plan recommended, beg leave to submit the following report from Mr. Cooley, in compliance with the foregoing resolution, towit:

State of Illinois, }
Knox County. } ss.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois.

The undersigned, to whom was referred the matter of providing some suitable plan for the protection of the county almshouse from destruction by fire, respectfully report: That he made an examination of the building for that purpose, and after considering the matter would recommend that the two water tanks now in the building be used for that purpose, with an additional tank, to be placed as near the center of the building as can be, with a capacity equal to the other two tanks in the building, all these tanks I would connect by suitable pipes running from each tank to the basement story of the building, connecting with a horizontal pipe running east and west from the west tank to the east one; from the horizontal pipe I would have three stand pipes, one in each wing of the building, and the other near the center east and west, running up through both stories, making three places in each story for discharging the water. It would require something like one hundred and twenty-five feet of hose pipe for each story. From such information as I have been able to obtain, I think that the cost of the works complete, would be about three hundred dollars.

Respectfully submitted,

Z. COOLEY.

Your committee have examined the plan submitted in the foregoing report and deem it practicable, and the probable expenses reasonable; and recommend that the said plan be adopted, and that the undersigned committee be authorized and instructed to superintend the construction and erection of said improvement, with such authority to make purchases, and employ assistants and perform other acts as shall be necessary in the execution of the duty imposed upon them.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

T. J. HALE,
D. W. ALDRICH,
D. M. EIKER.

Messrs. Eiker, Higgins, Temple, West and Gaines entered.

On motion of Mr. W. S. Gale the report of the committee was accepted and adopted.

Mr. Butler offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That in place and stead of all rules now in force in this board relating to pauper claims, the following be adopted:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the several overseers of the poor in this county to remove to the almshouse all persons requiring relief from the county, except in the following cases:

1st. Persons having some contagious disease.

2nd. Persons too sick to be removed.

And that the county will not be responsible for relief given outside of the almshouse, except in the above cases, and then only when the relief has been ordered by the overseer of the poor of the town where the relief is given.

The yeas and nays being demanded, resulted:

Yeas—Messrs. Butler, Latimer, Gale (G. W.), Gale (W. S.), Dieterich, Nelson, Sisson, McFarland, Sumner, Eiker, Higgins, Robson, Stephenson, Benson, Aldrich, Wyman, Temple, Andrews, Corey, West, Tucker, Gaines and Sellon 23.

Nays—None.

Resolution adopted.

April Meeting, 1879.—Mr. Hale from special committee on protection to the almshouse from fire presented the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County.

The undersigned committee heretofore appointed to contract for and superintend the construction of an approved plan for protection from fire in the Knox county almshouse, beg leave to report:

That acting under the authority conferred upon them they employed the Haxtun Steam Heating Company of Kewanee, Ill., to construct and place in the said building such an apparatus as was approved by the said board, at the January meeting, 1879, by contract accompanying this report, for the sum of $335; that the said contractors have constructed and placed the said apparatus in the said building, but that up to this date it has not been perfected so as to be accepted by the committee. They recommend that the sum of $338.41 (of which sum $3.41 is for extra materials not covered by the contract) be appropriated to the payment for said improvements, to be paid over to the contractors when the said work and apparatus shall be complete and perfect according to contract and accepted by this committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

T. J. HALE,
D. M. EIKER,
D. W. ALDRICH,
Committee.

On motion the report of the committee was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

Mr. Eiker moved to amend rules governing aid rendered to paupers by adding an additional exception, as follows:

3rd. Persons not resident in the town where aided.

Amendment adopted.

The rules as amended read:

Resolved, That in place and stead of all rules now in force in this board relating to pauper claims the following be adopted:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the several overseers of the poor in this county to remove to the almshouse all persons requiring relief from the county, except in the following cases:

1st. Persons having some contagious disease.

2nd. Persons too sick to be removed.

3rd. Persons not resident in the town where aided.

And that the county will not be responsible for relief given outside of the almshouse, except in the above cases, and then onlv when the relief has been ordered by the overseer of the poor of the town where the relief is given.

July Meeting, 1879.—Communication of Mrs. L. J. Cleveland.

To the Honorable Almshouse Committee and Board of Supervisors.

GENTLEMEN:—Your superintendent would respectfully submit the following report. Since your last meeting there have been 1371½ individual weeks board furnished at a cost of $1.09, not including improvements and repairs; and $1.57 including all expenses incurred in operating the institution and farm. At present there are 103 inmates, 59 males and 44 females. Of this number 25 are over 60 years of age, 14 over 70 and 4 over 80, and 12 children under 10. Of the above number 29 are insane, 22 idiotic. There have been no births and but one death, which was that of the oldest member of the family. We are under obligation to Rev. Mr. Waddle and Deacon Arms for conducting the funeral services.

Through the kindness of the Presbyterian clergy and laymen, and the Swedish clergy of Knoxville, the inmates have the advantage of religious instruction almost every sabbath, and generous benefactors have furnished them with a sufficient supply of reading matter.

The usual amount of repairing, plastering, kalsomining, painting and papering, with the addition of replacing three stone window cappings, has been done; also considerable cane matting has been furnished. However, it requires constant renewing and repairing to preserve the building, and keep the institution in a good condition. Unfortunately the house is not properly constructed to care for and treat insane patients. Those who are safe to be at liberty have free range of the wards and yard during the day; those that are not safe to be so left are taken out three times a day by an attendant and exercised. Constant attention is given to cleanliness, patients being bathed as often as necessary. This is not all that ought to be done, but all that can be done with the present arrangements. There are a few of the patients who are very destructive, and for the purpose of restraining them at such times we use Fisher's patent leather muffs, otherwise they would destroy all within their reach.

In respect to the purchasing of supplies the same course has been pursued as heretofore; bids have been solicited from numerous dealers, and the purchases have been made from those who furnished the best goods for the least money.

Believing a visit by the board to the institution would be advantageous to the citizens of the county I extend a cordial invitation to your honorable body to visit the house and farm during the present meeting.

Respectfully,

MRS. L. J. CLEVELAND.

Communication of M. A. McClelland.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County.

GENTLEMEN:—During the past three months there have been eighteen admissions to the almshouse. With the exception of four children, all of these have been more or less sick. One, a tramp, was dangerously so, and is not likely to recover. Repeated attacks of pleurisy have resulted in the exudation of pus in the pleural cavity. Two of the recent admissions have left the house; the others remain. One, coming in with a corneal ulcer and purulent inflammation of the eyes, was sent—as soon as she could be got ready—to the state eye and ear infirmary. The corneal ulceration had commenced but ten days before her admission, and, being over center of pupil, there seemed a probability that, after healing, there would be such an amount of opacity left that permanent blindness and permanent pauperism would follow. This seemed a sufficient reason for sending her to Chicago. While your physician is perhaps as competent as any other general practitioner in the county to treat diseases of the eye, he does not pretend to the skill possessed by the surgeons in charge of the state hospital for diseases of the eye and ear. Inasmuch as the only cost for treatment at the state hospital is the railroad fare to and from Chicago, I would strongly recommend that such patients be sent direct from several towns, rather than sending them to the almshouse, as being much cheaper, and also affording the patient a better chance for recovery, from early treatment. An affidavit from the patient as to his being a pauper, and a certificate from the supervisor that the patient is one, is all that is necessary to insure admission to the hosptial. The return ticket should be sent to the superintendent, so that, in case of fire or any epidemic disease occuring, the patient may be promptly returned to the county. A complete change of clothing is also required. The patient above referred to was treated last winter, as an out-door patient; but from that attack and a prior one she had entirely recovered.

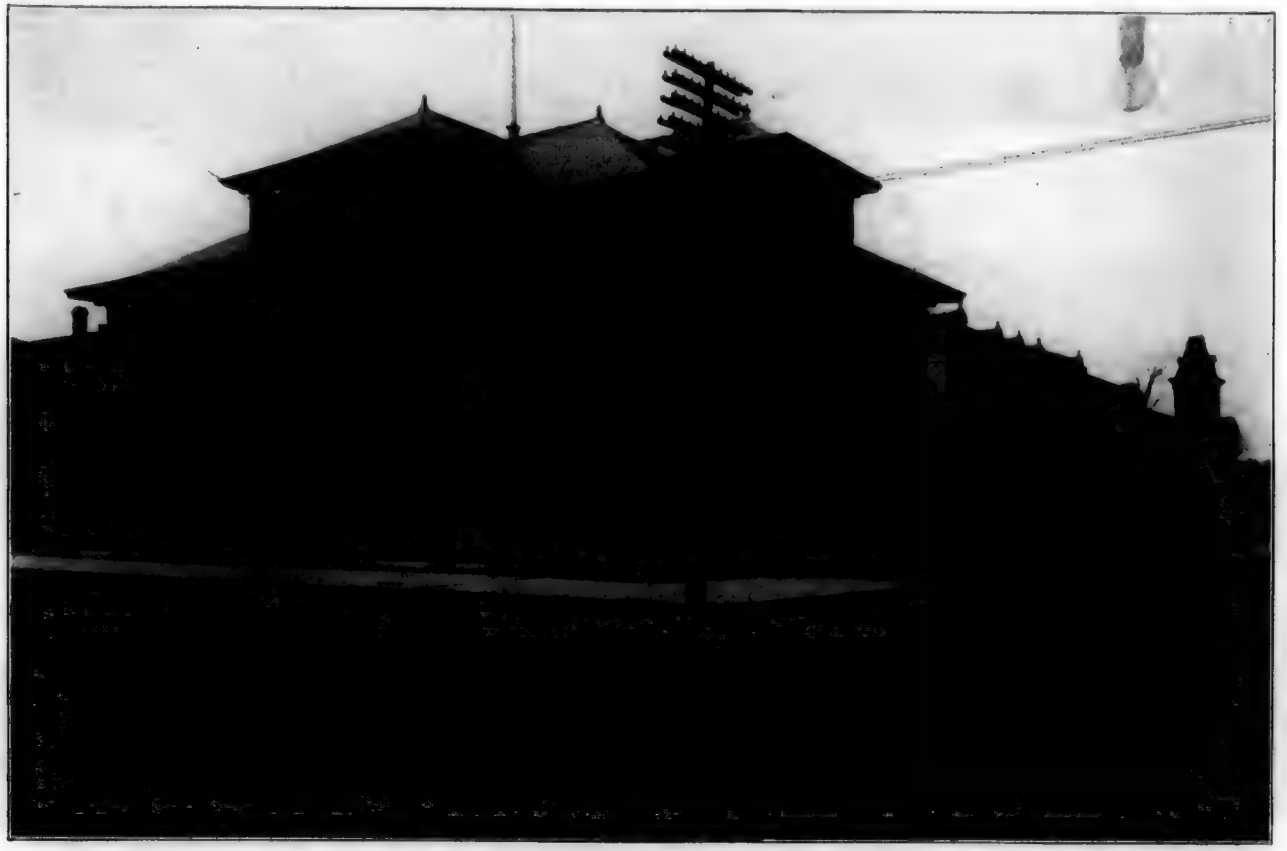
Of the recent admissions, one is alleged to be insane; yet no steps have been taken to have him so pronounced by the legally constituted authorities. He is being held by the superintendent at the risk of those who brought him to the almshouse. There is probably no doubt as to his condition, but this should have been determined before he was sent to the house.

There is another case—a man about 30 years of age—sent in January last to the house, to wait for admission to the insane hospital. If it falls within the jurisdiction of the sheriff to convey such parties to the asylum, he had better keep them under his own control and observation till such transference is made. The patient might, in this way, get the benefit of earlier treatment, which is most valuable in insanity as in other diseases.

Within the past few weeks there has come into the hands of your physician the report of the state board of public charities (Report for 1878), which would make rather valuable reading for many citizens of the county, whose deductions as to the relative cost and manner of keeping paupers in various parts of the state are quite at variance with the facts. In respect to one county that has been held up as a model for us the report says: "This county has never treated its insane well. Two of the present inmates, who are insane, have been shut up for seventeen years. One was kept for many years in chains. They are not properly cared for in respect to cleanliness." It falls within the province of the superintendent and the honorable almshouse committee to report how such patients are kept in Knox county. I might say, however, that the "model" county—although five townships smaller, and with 500 less population (census of 1870) than Knox county—had, from the 1st day of October, 1877, to the 30th day of September, 1878, 17,645 days' board at the different state institutions, while Knox county had but 13,823—a difference of 3,822 days' board. The outdoor relief also varies greatly. At a late meeting of the board of supervisors there were 641 persons aided from the county treasury. The farm in this county contains nearly 200 acres, and the family averages below eighty. When, therefore, comparisons are made for the purpose of putting the management of the Knox county charities in an unfavorable light, it would be nothing more than justice to make the comparison a complete one by taking some pains to learn all the facts bearing upon the case.



Respectfully,

M. A. McCLELLAND.

September Meeting, 1880.—Mr. Gale (G. W.) offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That upon certificate of the chairman of the almshouse committee that the work has been completed and accepted by the committee, the clerk be directed to issue orders in favor of Merrill & Wilber for $110, being the balance due them for work, repairing basement and building coal house at almshouse.

Mr. Gale (G. W.) offered the following resolution:

U. S. GOVERNMENT BUILDING

U. S. GOVERNMENT BUILDING

Located on corner of South Cherry and Simmons Streets. Built in 1893-4. Cost, $115,000.

Resolved, That the purchase of tobacco by the county for use by the inmates of the almshouse and jail be discontinued.

Yeas and nays being called:

Yeas—Messrs. Boydston, Kimball, Gale (G. W.), Gale (W. S.), Dieterich, McKee, Morse, Rankin, May, Stephenson, Rebstock, Corey and Tucker, 13.

Nays—Messrs. McFarland, Simpson, Woodmansee, Leighton, Mathews, Sansbury and Todd, 7. Carried.

January Meeting, 1882.—Mr. Robson offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That in place and stead of all orders now in force relating to pauper claims, the following be adopted:

Resolved, That the county will not be responsible for relief given to persons having contagious diseases.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the several overseers of the poor of the county to remove to the almshouse all persons requiring relief from the county, except in the following cases:

1st. Persons not resident in the town where aided.

2nd. Persons too sick to be removed.

And the county will not be responsible for relief given outside the almshouse, except in the above cases, and then only when relief has been ordered by the overseer of the poor in the town where the relief is given.

Mr. May moved that the overseer of the poor of the city of Galesburg shall receive from the county a sum not exceeding three hundred dollars per annum for his services. Adopted.

Adjourned Meeting, August 6, 1883.—Mr. Charles read the following report of the committee on almshouse and paupers on almshouse proper:

We desire to call attention to the fact that we have not sufficient accommodation for our insane at the county almshouse and would recommend the appointment of a committee to take the matter into consideration and report at our next meeting.

WM. ROBSON,
A. G. CHARLES,
J. A. FREDRICKS,
M. B. HARDEN,
D. GREENLEAF.

Mr. Gale moved that the report be adopted and its recommendations concurred in, except the last clause pertaining to increased accommodations at the almshouse. Carried.

Mr. Gale moved that the matter pertaining to the increased accommodations at the almshouse be referred to the committee on almshouse and paupers.

Mr. Charles moved to amend by adding Mr. Hale and Mr. Gale to the committee.

The motion as amended was adopted.

September Meeting, 1883.—A communication from the state board of public charities in regard to increased accommodation for the insane was read and referred to same committee.

Mr. Charles read the following report of the committee to whom was referred the matter of providing increased accommodations for the insane:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors.

Your special committee, to whom was referred the matter of increased accommodations for the insane at the almshouse, beg leave to report that after inquiry, we find there are in the almshouse thirty-three insane patients. With the exception of three or four they are easily managed. We learn that the state, acting under a bill appropriating nearly $500,000, is now making accommodations for about fourteen hundred patients in addition to those already provided for, which will allow our county an additional quota of about sixteen.

Your committee are of opinion that when the accommodations above referred to are completed there will be ample room at our almshouse for all that may remain.

We, therefore, recommend that no action be taken at the present in the matter of making further accommodations for the insane.

Respectfully submitted,

A. G. CHARLES, M. B. HARDEN,
J. A. FREDRICKS, T. J. HALE,
W. SELDEN GALE.

On motion of Mr. Eiker, said report was accepted and its recommendations concurred in.

January, 1890.—The hour for the consideration of the report of the special committee on care of the insane having arrived, the report was called up, and on motion of Mr. Simpson the report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in by the board.

The following is the report:

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS, JANUARY TERM, 1890.

The committee appointed to consider the provision to be made for the insane beg leave to report:

In making their investigation they have visited the state institutions at Jacksonville and Kankakee and the county houses in neighboring counties, where provision has recently been made for the county insane. After advising with the superintendents of these institutions, examining buildings and equipment, and giving attention to the methods of management, they consulted Mr. I. A. Coleman, the architect of the state buildings now in progress of construction, and after conference and consultation with him on the ground at the almshouse, employed him to furnish plans and estimates of cost, which they herewith submit. The plans are for a building three stories in height, to correspond with the present almshouse building, attached to the west wing by a corridor adapted to use in connection with the almshouse, under the same superintendent, using in common the present offices, kitchen, laundry and heating apparatus—to accommodate forty patients and to be constructed as nearly fire-proof as possible with reasonable outlay.

The committee find it impossible to determine with any certainty the number of patients the county will be called upon to provide for. It has been the declared policy of the state to provide for all the insane, others as well as those who are a public charge. The provision made by the state has never been quite adequate, and the additions made from time to time have been exceeded by the increase in applicants. This county has always been obliged to care for some of the insane poor, and has also sheltered some who were not paupers, but who could neither get admittance into the state asylums nor be properly cared for at home.

Six years ago some provision to be made by the county seemed imperative, but about that time the state institutions were very much enlarged, the quota of this county was increased and as some counties were slow in calling for the accommodations they were entitled to, this county was permitted to send patients in excess of its quota, and was for the time relieved. At the present time all the state institutions appear to be crowded and this county is called on to remove all its patients in excess of its quota.

Provision has been made for an increase of capacity of three asylums of 300 each, an addition of nearly 25 per cent to the present capacity of all the asylums. This will not be available before 1891. In the meantime the census for 1890 will afford a new basis for apportionment, and the advantage this county might gain will be to a large extent neutralized by the excessive comparative growth of Cook county.

While Knox county is one of the few that has, since the last census, materially added to its population, it is quite certain its growth has been in a less ratio than that of the whole state, Cook county included.

If the number of the insane continues to increase with the increase of population (and for years past the increase of insane seems relatively greater), there will be an increased pressure, only to be relieved by additional provision to be made by the state, except so far as some relief may be had by change of basis of apportionment.

The apportionment is now made among counties according to population. It may hereafter be fixed according to the number of insane. If, as seems to be the case, the insane in this county are usually numerous compared with the population, we may realize some greater increase of quota in the next apportionment.

That such change of basis will be made is not certain. Nor is it certain the state will continue to extend its asylums. The opinion may prevail that it is better to leave the several counties to provide each for itself for any further increase. And it may be well to say that after what the committee have learned of the methods of management in the state asylums and the county houses, their opinions on this subject are modified, and they believe, that, while as a general rule, a more careful management of public funds may be expected from county boards than from state officials, yet in the provision for and care of the insane the best results are to be hoped for when the institution is sufficiently large to afford and secure the highest education and talent in the management and the most thoroughly trained and competent assistants, and when the outlay in construction and equipment will be in the hands of those who have made the matter a special study.

But the opinion of this committee or this board on this subject will not control the action of the state, and the most it is worth is as an indication of the conclusions to which others, with opportunity for investigation, may be likely to arrive.

In estimating the wants of this county in new constructions we do not think it worth while to take into account the small provision not existing in the almshouse and jail.

That in the jail is needed for temporary detention of persons on their way elsewhere. That in the almshouse does not permit the seclusion of the patients from non-insane inmates, or the special care patients might have associated with the other insane and put to the use of paupers, it is a small margin for increase in their number.

The number of Knox county insane now in public institutions is: At Jacksonville, 46; Kankakee, 11; almshouse, 18; jail, 4; in all, 79. Our present quota in the state institutions is 46, and we are entitled to place these only at Jacksonville, leaving to be provided for by this county, 33. This number to be cared for by the county will be decreased in the distribution of the provision now being made by the state.

It may possibly be further reduced by a change in basis of apportionment. And if the state should extend its provision for the insane to meet the further increase of population, either by enlarging the asylums or the building of new ones, there may never be anything more than a temporary increase and the building may stand only partially occupied and useful as a guarantee against inconvenience caused by a sudden increase of population in this county or some delay in state action in making provision to meet the increase of population in the state. But if no further provision be made by the state and the county be called on to take care of its own increase or meet the diminution of its quota consequent on increase of population in other parts of the state, it will not be many years that a house for 40 patients will exceed the wants of the county.

The committee believe no time should be lost in making whatever provision the board thinks best to make, and they recommend that a committee be authorized to settle upon plans substantially conforming to those furnished by Mr. Coleman; that they be authorized to employ an architect to make complete working plans and prepare proper specifications, to advertise for building contracts, to let contracts and to proceed with the building as rapidly as can be made profitable.

They think by prompt action the contract may be let by the middle of February and the work begun as soon as the materials can be had and the weather will permit work.

W. Selden Gale.
Wm. Robson,
H. M. Sisson,
J. S. Simpson,
James Rebstock.

Moved by Mr. Rearick that the proposed building committee consist of three members. Carried.

Supervisor George entered.

Moved by Mr. Robson that the expenditures of the committee in the construction of the proposed building be limited to $25,000. Carried.

Moved by Mr. O'Connor that the committee be instructed to adopt a plan of construction practically fireproof. Carried.

Moved by Mr. Gale that the motion fixing the number of the committee at three be reconsidered. Carried.

On motion of Mr. Gale the number of the committee was increased to five.

Pending committee work, on motion of Mr. O'Connor the board adjourned to 1:30 P. M.

One Thirty P. M.—Board called to order by the chairman. Present, same as this forenoon.

The chairman announced the appointment of the following named members to compose the building committee: Messrs. Gale, Simpson, Robson, Sisson and Rebstock.

April, 1890.—Moved by Mr. Simpson that the chairman appoint a committee of five on almshouse annex. Carried.

Mr. Robson then called for the reading of the contract with Mr. Munson for the construction of the almshouse annex.

Moved by Mr. Robson that the questions presented by the options in the contract lie over until tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

The chairman announced the appointment of the following committee on annex to the almshouse.

Messrs. Robson, Sisson, Simpson, Rebstock and Boydstun.

Mr. Robson called up the matters in the contract for the construction of the annex to the almshouse. He stated that the committee advertised for bids to be opened February 15th, but that they received no bids which they accepted and so advertised again for March 18th, when they obtained a larger number of competitors. The committee had contracted with Mr. P. O. Munson of Galesburg, to put up the annex according to plans and specifications furnished by Mr. I. C. Coleman, architect, using thorough fireproof construction except as to the roof, which would be wood covered with slate, the building to be finished in southern pine and all for $24,000; for $24,300 if finished in white oak; for $26,459 if the building is finished inside with white oak and with iron roof construction. This committee desire instruction from the board as to which option they should accept.

Moved by Mr. Becker that the committee be directed to accept the $24,000 bid with pine and wood roof construction.

Moved by Mr. Simpson, as a substitute, that the committee be directed to accept the $26,459 bid with oak and iron roof construction.

The ayes and nays being called resulted as follows:

Ayes—McWilliams, Austin, Boydstun, Rearick, Burkhalter, Peter Nelson, Nels Nelson, Sisson, Clark, Simpson, Smith, Robson, Boynton, Rebstock, Whiting, Mason, Emery, 17.

Nays—Wilson, Heflin, Stephenson, Young, Becker, Baird, Seward, McCrea, 8.

The substitute prevailed.

Mr. Simpson stated that owing to the necessity for an increase in the facilities for the care of the insane the board at the September meeting authorized the almshouse committee to make such temporary arrangements as were best until the January meeting. That at the January meeting it became apparent that more room would be required than the county could provide at once, there being eleven patients at Kankakee, which had been ordered to be removed. Accordingly he visited Peoria county for the purpose of making arrangements for the temporary use of a part of their vacancies in the state hospital for the insane at Jacksonville. The county board of Peoria county being in session at the time gave Knox county permission to use 12 vacancies until such time as we could provide more room or until such vacancies might be wanted for their own necessities. Mr. Simpson offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this board are due and are hereby tendered to the county board of Peoria county for their courtesy in permitting us to use a portion of their quota of insane at the hospital at Jacksonville.

July, 1890.—Mr. Robson reported that the contractor was making reasonable progress in the work of constructing the annex to the almshouse.

September, 1890.—Clerk's statement:

There will yet be expended on the annex to the almshouse about $17,000. If the board is to pursue the same policy in paying for the annex to the almshouse that was adopted in paying for the courthouse, it would seem that a levy of $52,000 would pay for the building and run the county until tax collections are made in the winter of 1892. Some arrangement, however, should be made for the payment of county orders this fall, as the estimates on the building soon to be made will speedily consume what funds are now on hand.

January, 1891.—Wm. Robson, chairman of the building committee, read the following report, and at his request the consideration of the same was made a special order for 11 o'clock A. M. tomorrow.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors.

Your committee on building had hoped that they could have reported the completion of the annex to the almshouse at the present meeting. This cannot be done. The contractor says he will finish the building within three weeks. It seems to your committee that the work can be done in that time. We would report the amounts paid to the contractor, Mr. Munson, on the following dates, also the amount of the contract price, and the amount unpaid on said contract and the amount your committee would recommend be allowed said contractor Munson for work done not included in contract:

Amount of contract		$26,459.00
1st estimate, May 14, 1890	$ 1,435.44
2nd estimate, June 19, 1890	2,935.60
3rd estimate, July 16, 1890	2,739.36
4th estimate, August 18, 1890	1,589.52
5th estimate, September 5, 1890	4,745.82
6th estimate, October 16, 1890	1,228.48
7th estimate, November 26, 1890	2,530.64
Total	$17,204.86
Balance unpaid on contract		$9,554.14

Amount estimated for work not in contract, $379.48, itemized as follows:

Excavating extra depth in foundation	$ 23.50
22,510 brick in foundation and partitions at $10.50 per M	236.35
11 yards plastering at 30c	3.30
Mason work, cutting stone door sills	2.80
2,044½ ft. channel iron at 4c per ft	81.78
O. C. Housel, extra on wood work, paid by Munson	31.75
	$379.48

The hour having arrived for the consideration of the report of the building committee, Mr. Robson, chairman of said committee, made explanation of the extra expense incurred by the contractor in making substantial foundation and other necessary changes not in contract. Thereupon Mr. Nels Nelson moved that said committee be authorized to make final settlement with the contractor when the building is completed, and to accept the same. Carried.

Mr. Rebstock moved that the almshouse committee be authorized to procure the necessary furniture and furnishings required for the annex. Carried.

April, 1891.—Mr. Robson read the following report of the building committee:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors.

Your committee on building would respectfully report that the annex to the almshouse is ready for occupancy and that there has been paid for Mr. I. C. Coleman, architect, $324.50, the balance due him on the completion of the building, and that there has been paid to Mr. Munson, contractor, the sum of $26,704.86, leaving unpaid the sum of $133.62, to be paid when he has finished all work according to contract. The weather having been such that he has not been able to finish grading, etc.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

March Meeting, 1896.—Mr. Robson of the almshouse committee read the following and moved that the same be adopted as the rules of the almshouse. Carried.

RULES AND REGULATIONS FOR THE ALMSHOUSE

KNOXVILLE, ILLINOIS, January 1, 1894.

1. The superintendent shall have complete control over the inmates, but this privilege must be exercised in a humane and consistent manner, resorting to restraint only when necessary to establish and keep a prevailing good order.

2. All patients to be carefully examined on admission, and all moneys and effects of value found in their possession, to be taken by the superintendent and referred to the almshouse committee, who shall direct what disposition shall be made of them. When patients conclude to leave the premises, their persons, packages, trunks, etc., may be searched by the superintendent.

3. All letters to and from the inmates of the institution to pass through the superintendent's hands and if thought necessary, to be examined and treated with reference to keeping good order in family.

4. Patients, under no circumstances, to leave the premises on a visit to Knoxville or elsewhere, without permission.

5. Patients are forbidden to abuse each other, and whoever wilfully does so will thereby become a proper subject for the superintendent's interference.

6. Inmates coming to the premises in an intoxicated condition, will be considered vagrants, and may be immediately discharged from the house.

7. Patients who are able shall, when called upon, assist to wait upon the sick, and thus render themselves as useful as possible. And if able shall help upon the farm, when needed.

8. Patients must not wilfully waste or destroy anything about the premises, but rather aid in caring for all material used here.

9. All clothing and other effects belonging to patients in the house, which are not appropriated for funeral purposes, shall be kept and used by surviving patients.

10. Visitors are requested to refrain from talking with insane patients, except relatives; but under no consideration to commit themselves to promises of future favor.

11. It shall be the duty of the physician to carefully scrutinize patients who come under his care; and administer medicines to each as may seem to him best adapted to their needs, and he may consistently prescribe exercises for them for the promotion of their health.

April Meeting, 1898.—Mr. Simpson of the almshouse committee read the following report in relation to the matter of the care of the insane at the almshouse:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee on almshouse and paupers have at different times during the past year called your attention to the crowded condition of the insane department at the almshouse, showing that while it was constructed to care for 40 patients, we have, during the greater part of the year, been caring for from 65 to 67. As to whether insanity is on the increase among us we must leave to those who are able to make that careful and discriminating investigation necessary to determine.

The state has from time to time built new asylums and has frequently increased their capacity by adding new buildings, but has never yet succeeded in keeping up to the demand from increased applicants for admission, notwithstanding the growing sentiment that the state should take care of all insane, those who are a public charge, as well as those who are not. In January, 1890, when it became necessary to build the present annex, the number of Knox county's insane was 79, and were cared for as follows: At Jacksonville, 46; at Kankakee, 11; at almshouse, 18; at jail, 4; we find that at the present time the number of Knox county's insane in public institutions are as follows: At Jacksonville, 56; at Kankakee, 3; at almshouse, 64; making 123 in all. Your committee had hoped, on completion of the new Western hospital for insane, that in the apportionment to be made in connection therewith we would be allowed such increased ratio as would afford us such relief as would enable us, with our present buildings, to care for what we might have until such time as the asylum for the incurable insane at Peoria might be completed. The district for the western hospital has been made, the quota for each county assigned, and the same approved by the governor, and we find that we are allowed accommodation for 9 more patients, i. e., 62 in place of 53, and we have been notified that on the removal of our patients from Jacksonville to Rock Island that the 3 at Kankakee must also be removed.

There is but little prospect for the completion of the asylum for the incurable insane in less than from 2 to 3 years and we can expect to have but little relief from it when completed. This will leave 64 patients for Knox county to care for after we obtain the relief afforded by the completion of the Western hospital, which will be some time next month.

The present building for insane, known as the annex to the Knox county almshouse, is occupied by both males and females, the males occupying the basement and first floors; the females occupying the second floor; 14 of the latter have to be furnished with sleeping room on this floor in the west wing of the men's department of the almshouse proper. In the men's department there is one room with 10 beds in it, another with 4, and another with 3. This is not recognized as the proper way to room this class of patients, unless a watchman is within hearing distance all the time at night.

Your committee believes that no time should be lost in making some additional provision for the care of this unfortunate class of people in our county. That an addition as nearly fireproof in construction as practicable be built on the east side of the present building and connected therewith by corridors, to be used in caring for the insane women committed to the county's care, and would recommend that a committee be authorized to settle on plans substantially conforming to those shown to the board by your committee; that they be authorized to employ an architect to make complete working plans and prepare proper specifications; to advertise for building contracts; to let contracts, and to proceed with the building as rapidly as it can profitably be done. The cost of said building not to exceed $.....

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. ROBSON,
J. S. SIMPSON,
K. R. MARKS,
F. T. ALBERT,
HUGH SLOAN,
Committee.

On motion of Mr. Hubbell the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

On motion of Mr. Rebstock the chairman was authorized and directed to appoint a committee of five (one of whom shall be the chairman of the board) to carry out the recommendations contained in the foregoing report.

July Meeting, 1898.—Mr. Simpson, from the building committee, read the following report:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

The committee provided for at the last meeting to act as a building committee in the construction of a new building at the almshouse for the use of insane would respectfully report, that they met on April 23 and consulted several architects of the city of Galesburg, and arranged with each of them to submit plans best suited for the purpose for which the proposed annex was to be built. April 28 your committee met for the purpose of examining the plans offered by the different architects and after careful examination selected those prepared by Messrs. Gotschalk & Beadle, as best suited for the proposed annex and entered into an agreement with said Gotschalk & Beadle to make all drawings, details, working plans and specifications, assist in letting contract, act as supervising architect when called upon by the building committee during the construction of said building for the sum of $150, and if the committee desire the further services of an architect in preparing plans for a laundry building, said Gotschalk & Beadle agree to furnish said plans and specifications without further expense to the county. After said plans and specifications had been prepared and approved your committee advertised for bids for the construction of the annex in accordance with said plans and specifications. Said bids were opened June 6, 1898, as follows:

P. T. Olson	$20,773
Munson & Tingleaf	19,600
Peter McL. Davidson	23,200
O. C. Housel	24,773
Sweeny & Ream	20,900

(The above bids were exclusive of the heating.)

Munson and Tingleaf being the lowest bidders were awarded the contract at their bid of 19,600 dollars.

Your committee entered into contract with said parties for construction of said annex, they filing a bond in the sum of $5,000 for the faithful completion of said building, said contract and bond being on file with the clerk of the board.

As soon as the work of construction commenced your committee employed Mr. A. C. Phillipson, of Galesburg, as superintendent of material and construction at a salary of $2.00 per day.

Your committee met at the almshouse on July 8th and after inspecting the work done and material on hand made their first estimate of cost of work done and material on the grounds.

Amounting to	$1,613.50
Less 15 per cent	242.02
Leaving amount due on their first estimate of	1,371.48

For which amount they would ask that the clerk be directed to issue an order in payment thereof.

And would ask that the clerk be instructed to issue orders once each month in payment of estimate made by your committee in accordance with the contract made with Messrs. Munson & Tingleaf.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

On motion of Mr. Becker, the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

September Meeting, 1898.—Mr. Burkhalter, of the building committee, read the following report:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee on the building of the new annex to the Knox county almshouse would respectfully report that the construction of the building is progressing at about the rate such buildings usually do. Some delay was caused waiting for iron when the building was ready for the beams for the first floor, and when your committee was in session at the almshouse on the 9th inst. word was received from the yards furnishing the brick for the outside of the walls that they could not furnish any more of the brick contracted for till a new kiln could be made. This of course must cause additional delay, in all other respects the work is progressing very satisfactorily to your committee.

Your committee met at the almshouse on August 9th and made their second estimate of work done and material furnished and on the grounds and found the amount due the contractors at that time to be $1863.24.

They also met on September 9th and made their third monthly estimate and found the amount due the contractors at that time to be $1551.80, and requested the clerk to issue orders in payment of these amounts as authorized to do at the July meeting of the board. At the last meeting of the board your committee reported that we had employed Mr. A. C. Phillipson as superintendent of construction but we neglected to ask that provision be made for payment for his services.

At the meeting of your committee on August 9th and September 9th, we gave him an order on the clerk for the amount due him, and the clerk having honored the same we would ask your approval of our action and would ask that the clerk be authorized to issue orders in payment for his services as superintendent of construction once per month on the order of the committee.

Your committee would further report that the steam heating in the old building which was constructed on what is known as the two pipe system has not worked well for some time and should be improved, and knowing that it was necessary to run new mains from the present boiler room to the new building believed it would be economy for the county to have it changed to what is now used and known as the "one pipe system," requested bids for the plumbing and heating in new building, also for changing the piping in old building to that system. Said bids were opened at the almshouse August 9th, 1898, as follows:

Allen Myers & Co., of Rock Island, for heating new building and changing old building $3,020.00
Nailon Bros., Peoria, same 3,000.00
O'Connor Bros., Peoria, plumbing new building..... 2,100.00
Galesburg Plumbing & Heating Co., plumbing and heating in new building using 2000 feet of radiation therein and changing old building... 4,730.00
C. S. Telford, plumbing and heating in new building as per plans and specifications so as to furnish 70 degrees inside when 20 degrees outside, and changing old building 4,827.75

The slight difference between the last two bids caused the sub-committee investigating the matter, considerable anxiety as to which of the bids was really the lowest. A call on the different firms showed that while one was figuring for 2000 feet of radiation, the other was figuring for 2312. Owing to the fact that nearly all the radiation in the new building must be in the halls or corridors, it is evident that something in excess of the usual amount must be used; considerable more than if the radiators could be placed in the rooms. The best information we could find from parties not interested in either firm, assured us that in view of the indirect way of heating, and the amount of windows it was even doubtful if 2312 feet was enough, certainly not any more than was required. Your committee therefore believing Mr. Telford to be the lowest bidder have awarded him the work, and entered into a contract with him for the faithful performance thereof. The contract and bond being placed on file with the county clerk.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Committee.

On motion of Mr. Marks, the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

December Meeting, 1898.—Mr. Burkhalter of the building committee, read the following report:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee on the construction of the new annex to the Knox county almshouse, would respectfully report that the construction of the building is making some progress but on account of the inclement and cold weather, and the many difficulties encountered in obtaining suitable brick and other material, specified under the contract, the progress has not been as speedy as your committee has hoped for or expected, but with fair weather the conditions are such now that we may reasonably hope for more speedy progress towards completion of the annex.

On November 29th, 1898, your committee met at the almshouse and made their 5th monthly estimate of materials furnished and work done on the annex, which showed an aggregate of $10,406.99 expended on the building, from which amount your committee have deducted 15 per cent. (as provided for under the contract), viz., $1,561.05, leaving due and payable to the contractors $8,845.94, which amount has under the direction of your committee been paid to the contractors Munson & Tingleaf by county clerk's orders.

On September 27th, 1898, your committee met at the almshouse to receive and open proposals for the erection of a laundry building at the almshouse as provided for at the July meeting of the board, at which meeting three bids were received, from F. W. Hawk, D. H. Fink and P. O. Munson, varying materially in amounts or figures. F. W. Hawk being the lowest bidder was awarded the contract for the erection and completion of the laundry building for the sum of $1,600.00 to be paid for on the completion of the building provided the weather and other conditions were such that the building be finished by December 10th, 1898. But if, after a proper effort on the part of contractor, the building could not be finished by that date, a payment should be made equal to 75 per cent. of the amount of work done and material furnished on the ground. The first estimate was made December 9th, 1898, and shows the amount of labor and material furnished and on the ground to be $1,114.26, of which your committee retain as provided under the contract, 25 per cent. ($278.56), leaving amount due and payable to the contractor $835.70, for which amount we recommend that county clerk's order be issued to F. W. Hawk for the use of A. M. Parmenter and E. L. Lacey in payment of the first estimate.

In the matter of the bill of the Frost Manufacturing Co. for new boiler and tank for the laundry building, $321.00, we find the same correct and recommend that a county order be issued for the amount.

In the matter of the bill of Gottschalk & Beadle, architects, for one-half of the contract price for services as architects for the construction of the new annex and the laundry building at the almshouse, your committee would recommend that a county order be issued to Gottschalk & Beadle for $75.00.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. S. SIMPSON,

Committee.

On motion of Mr. Becker, the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

April Meeting, 1899.—Mr. Simpson of the building committee read the following report in relation to the building of the annex to the almshouse.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your building committee would respectfully report that they had hoped that they might have been able to report that the new annex to the almshouse was completed or nearly so, but owing to the length of time it has taken the plastering to dry, the work of finishing has been greatly delayed. With favorable weather we think it can be completed some time in the coming month.

During the process of construction your committee thought it best to substitute hollow tile for floor and ceilings and mackolite for partitions in place of expanded metal, which had been contracted for. For making this exchange the contractor agreed to deduct the sum of $200.00. We would submit the following statement of amounts paid the contractors to the present time, also the contract price:

Amount of contract		$19,600.00
Deduction for exchange from expanded metal to hollow tile and mackolite fire proofing		200.00
		$19,400.00
1st. estimate July 7	$1,371.48
2d. estimate Aug. 7	1,863.24
3rd. estimate September 9	1,551.80
4th estimate October 14	2,175.42
5th estimate November 29	1,884.00
6th estimate January 26	4,076.91
7th estimate March 30	2,329.94
Balance due on contract		$ 4,147.21

The following amounts we would recommend be allowed the contractors for extra work done, not called for in the contract, but thought to be necessary by your committee.

Door and entrance to basement	$30.00
Extra support for guttering	18.00
Moving partition and filling opening	6.25
Door under stairway and labor	5.25
Other extras, carpenter work, etc	12.00
Total	$71.50

Making a balance that would be due the contractors at the completion of the building of $4,218.71

Your committee would also recommend that upon the satisfactory completion of the building they be authorized to accept the same and make a final settlement with Messrs. Munson & Tingleaf, the contractors, and that upon the order of your committee the clerk be authorized to issue an order in payment thereof.

Your committee would further recommend that they be authorized to accept the new laundry building upon its completion, and make final settlement with F. W. Hawk, contractor, and that the clerk be authorized to issue an order in final payment of same on the order of the committee.

Your committee would further report that the specifications for the plumbing for the new building provide for a hot water heater of 40 gallons capacity. Your committee believing this entirely too small, would recommend that they be authorized to arrange with the contractors for one from 175 to 200 gallons.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. S. Simpson,
J. L. Burkhalter,
J. R. Young,
James Rebstock,
J. F. Latimer,
Committee.

On motion of Mr. Phelps, the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

December Meeting, 1900.—Mr. Gault of the almshouse committee presented a statement in regard to the construction of a cement walk and the recommendation in relation thereto was adopted.

Your committee would also report that in accordance with the instructions of the board at its last meeting we have had completed a cement walk leading from the almshouse to the road at a cost of 17 cents a foot for 2394 feet, amounting to $406.98 with the contractors' written guarantee attached to their bill reading as follows: "We guarantee this cement walk for the period of 5 years from date, should any defects show up during this period of time which are caused by the action of frost or the elements, or from defective material or workmanship, we agree to replace such walk at our expense." Signed Terry & Lewis, Oct. 18th, 1900.

We recommend the payment of the bill.

Terry & Lewis, 2394 feet cement walk at 17c per foot $406.98

And the almshouse committee also presented the following recommendation in regard to water supply, which was adopted:

Whereas, The present water supply at the almshouse is insufficient for the ordinary use of the almshouse, and is totally inadequate for fire protection. Therefore, we would ask that we be authorized to arrange for sufficient supply of water, either by digging new well or by contract with the city of Knoxville, as upon further investigation seems to us best.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

September Meeting, 1901.—Mr. Gale of the same committee read a special report in relation to the extension of water mains to the almshouse and on his motion the same was adopted and its recommendations concurred in.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Board of Supervisors:

Your committee who were directed to secure from the city of Knoxville, if possible, connection with the city water service so as to afford better fire protection, and water service for the almshouse—would report, that they have made with the city of Knoxville, the contract herewith presented, to-wit:

It is hereby agreed by and between the county of Knox, represented by the almshouse committee of the board of supervisors of Knox county and state of Illinois, and the city of Knoxville, a municipal corporation situated in said county and state that the city will extend its present water system so as to give water service to the almshouse in said city of Knoxville: That the city will at once lay a four (4) inch main pipe of standard weight from the end of their present system in front of St. Mary's school in said city to the northwest corner of Douglas and Market streets, there to connect with a pipe to be laid by the county, extending from that point to the almshouse and grounds and connecting with such hydrants in and about the premises as the said committee shall direct and provide. After the completion of such work the city of Knoxville will at all times furnish all water desired by said county for fire protection, house use and other purposes, the same as furnished other water customers and citizens of Knoxville.

For such service the county shall pay to the city quarterly a meter rate for the water used at the rate of two (2) cents per 100 gallons for an amount between 1000 and 3000 gallons per day, and one and three-fourths (1¾) cents per 100 gallons for an amount equal to 3000 gallons per day or more.

The county is to furnish a four inch meter and all connections and place same at a suitable place on the line of pipe and all work done on this line shall be under the supervision of the superintendent of water works of the said city.

Dated this 19th day of July, A. D. 1901.

(Seal) CITY OF KNOXVILLE,

(Seal) KNOX COUNTY ALMSHOUSE COMMITTEE,
By. O. L. Fay, Chairman.

Also that to carry out this agreement they had plans and specifications for the proposed work made by John McAuley, the city engineer of Galesburg, and advertised for bids for the performance of the work according to such plans.

That upon opening the bids B. O. Krotter was found to be the lowest bidder, and contract entered into with him for such work for the sum of $1,639.30. A copy of said contract together with the bond for its faithful performance and the plans of the proposed work are now on file in the office of the county clerk.

Your committee would also ask that upon the proper certificate of the almshouse committee the county clerk be directed to issue county orders in payment of such amounts as may be found due for work done, according to the terms of such contract.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

December Meeting, 1901.—The following mentioned is contained in the report of the almshouse and poor-farm committee presented by Mr. Gale at the December meeting 1901:

Your committee would also report that the pipe has been laid and connections made with the water works of the city of Knoxville so that the almshouse is now provided with the water service and fire protection we were directed to secure.

March Meeting, 1903.—The following communication was read and referred to the almshouse committee:

GILSON, ILL., March 14, 1903.

To the Board of Supervisors:

YOUR HONORABLE BODY.—Upon receiving information that you were wanting to purchase more land for the benefit and use of the Knox county almshouse, I take pleasure in announcing that the estate of Amos B. Palmer, deceased, is for sale, lying north and west of county farm containing 133⅓ acres, more or less; 80 acres of which is under cultivation, balance consisting of two pastures, one at the north and one at the south of said 133⅓ acres, with an abundance of water in both, and a never failing well at the house, a good young orchard and other fruit also a good house of 8 rooms, good barn, cribs and sheds, a good new windmill and tank. We can give you immediate possession. Price $11,000. Terms one half cash, balance on two years time, for first mortgage, with interest at the rate of 5½ per cent per annum if desired.

I further state that said estate is free from all incumbrance and can give a clear title.

Any information desired will be promptly attended to.

Hoping this may meet your approval, I remain yours very sincerely, awaiting an early reply.

The following is contained in a report of the almshouse committee made by Mr. Butt at the March meeting 1903:

THE AUDITORIUM

Located on the corner of North Broad and Ferris Streets. Erected in 1890. Seating capacity, 1,300.

In regard to a communication from Orlo S. Palmer, administrator of the estate of Amos B. Palmer offering the Palmer farm of 133⅓ acres to the county for the sum of $11,000.00, we would respectfully refer to the open board for your consideration.

The proposition of Orlo S. Palmer for the sale of land to Knox county referred to the almshouse committee and referred back to the open board, was, on motion of Mr. Gale, not accepted.

September Meeting, 1904.—Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was, on his motion, made a special order of business for Thursday at 11 a. m.

Resolved, That the almshouse committee be directed to prepare the south rooms on the lower floor of the west wing of the almshouse for use as a ward for contagious diseases and arrange for the care of all patients brought there suffering from such diseases.

And, that after said committee shall have so arranged and shall notify the several supervisors and poor masters of the county that they are prepared to care for such cases; all persons suffering from contagious diseases who shall become county charges shall, whenever possible, be by the several supervisors and poor masters removed to the almshouse for care, and that in such cases the county will not be responsible or pay any bills for aid rendered outside of the almshouse, except the expense of removal to the almshouse, and care of patients before such removal can be made.

Thursday Morning.—The hour having arrived for the special order of business relating to resolution of Mr. Gale, of the almshouse committee offered on Tuesday, Mr. Gale moved the adoption of said resolution whereupon a roll was demanded, which resulted as follows:

Ayes—McWilliams, Latimer, Gale, Sisson, Geer, Swanson, Burkhalter, George, Junk, Butt, Young, Farwell, Oberholtzer, Cardiff, 14.

Nays—Cowan, Epperson, Clark, Robson, Fredericks, Woods, McDowell, Sawyer, Sloan, Elliott, 10.

Motion carried.

December, 1904.—The hour having arrived for action on the motion of Mr. Butt of yesterday, which was set for a special order of business for 2 p. m. today, in the matter of rescinding the action of the board at the September meeting in relation to providing certain rooms in the almshouse for the care of patients having contagious diseases, the same was, on motion of Mr. Cowan, laid on the table.

December Meeting, 1906.—Mr. McWilliams of the almshouse committee read the following special report:

The committee which were appointed to meet with the city of Galesburg in regard to a pest-house will report that they find that Knox county has paid on smallpox cases for doctor bills, nurses and groceries, approximately the sum of $3,805.66 for the six years ending September, 1906.

And the committee would recommend that the chair appoint a committee of three to meet with a like committee of aldermen of the city of Galesburg to further investigate the advisability of building an isolated hospital for contagious diseases and report to the board at the March meeting before entering into any contract whatsoever. S. McWILLIAMS.

Mr. McWilliams moved the adoption of the foregoing report, which was seconded.

After some discussion, Mr. Gale moved as an amendment that the chair appoint a committee of three to act with a like number from the city council of the city of Galesburg to make temporary provision for the care of cases of contagious diseases now on hand and that may arise, which amendment was adopted.

Whereupon the chair appointed as said committee of three, Supervisors McWilliams, Gale and Butt. Mr. Gale stated that he would be unable to serve on said committee, whereupon the chair substituted Supervisor Farwell in his stead.

March Meeting, 1907.—Mr. Butt of the special committee appointed at the December meeting of the board read the following report, and on motion of Mr. Davison the same was adopted:

GALESBURG, Ill., March 21, 1907.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors.

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee of three, which was appointed at the December meeting to meet with a like number from the city council of the city of Galesburg, to make temporary provision for the care of cases of contagious diseases that were then on hand, and that might arise, would beg leave to make the following report:

The committee representing the board of supervisors, with a like committee representing the city council, met on January 9th, 1907. Present—Dr. Maley S. McWilliams, Henry Hawkinson, O. J. Johnson and H. J. Butt, and Robert Farwell, together with Dr. Hall of the board of health, and H. J. Butt, secretary. The matter of a temporary pesthouse or detention hospital were fully discussed and recommendations were offered by the doctors present. The committee adjourned until afternoon, when a meeting was again held, and the representatives of the city council that had conferred with the city board of health, and had concluded that in as much as there was an emergency existing, a temporary pesthouse should at once be secured. Dr. Hall of the board of health reported that the board of health had rented the house owned by Mr. Gray on the corner of Academy and Main streets.

Upon motion, Dr. Maley, representing the city council, and H. J. Butt, representing the board of supervisors, were appointed a committee to furnish the house as quickly as possible. The house was furnished as quickly and as cheaply as could possibly be done, and on the 10th day of January it was ready for occupancy.

On the 11th day of January, this committee and all the board of health and officers of the city of Galesburg were served with injunction to not further use the house rented by the board of health for a pesthouse. Dr. Hall reported that there was one case already in the house when the injunction was served. The injunction suit was finally tried and the temporary injunction was made permanent.

Your committee—Messrs. McWilliams, Farwell and Butt, met immediately after the injunction proceedings were finished, and concluded unanimously that so far as the county committee was concerned, they would take no further part in any further attempt to establish a temporary pesthouse in the city of Galesburg.

This committee would recommend to your honorable body that the county purchase a piece of land outside of the city limits of the city of Galesburg and build thereon a pesthouse at a cost of not to exceed $3,000.00 and report at April meeting of board.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. McWilliams,
Robert E. Farwell,
H. J. Butt,
Committee.

September Meeting, 1907.—Mr. McDowell offered a motion that the almshouse committee be authorized to purchase additional land for the almshouse and poor-farm at a cost of not to exceed the amount of $5,000.00.

A roll call upon the adoption of said motion resulted as follows:

Ayes—McWilliams, Latimer, Paden, Burkhalter, Geer, Larson, O'Neill, Barlow, Burgland, Davison, Deatherage, Jones, Butt, Spenny, Greig, Hoxworth, Rebstock, Young, McDowell, Whiting, Sloan, McIlravy, 22.

Nays—Farwell, Oberholtzer, 2.

Thereupon the chair declared that as a two-thirds majority of all the members of the county board had voted in the affirmative, the motion was carried.

December Meeting, 1907.—Mr. Whiting offered the following resolution, which on his motion was adopted:

Resolved, That the county clerk be directed to issue orders at the rate of seventy-five dollars ($75.00) per month for the ensuing year payable to the order of the Knox County Kindergarten Association of Galesburg, Illinois, upon the same condition as to the care of children who are, or may become, county charges as are now required by the rules of this board.

September Meeting, 1908.—Mr. McWilliams of the almshouse committee presented the following report, which, on his motion, was made a special order of business for Thursday at 1:30 p. m.

Galesburg, Ill., Sept. 8th, 1908.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors, Knox County, Illinois.

Gentlemen:—Your committee which were authorized by the motion of Supervisor Butt at the June meeting of this board to investigate the matter of lighting the Knox county almshouse and buildings, beg leave to submit the following report:

That your committee met at the court house in Galesburg on August 4th, 1908, and found that in order to get at the matter of investigation of a lighting system for the above-named buildings that it was necessary to have a blueprint made of the same; whereupon your committee contracted with Architect J. Grant Beadle to make the same at a cost of $50.00, and upon the receipt of the same we proceeded to advertise for bids for the wiring for electricity and the piping for gas of the said buildings, as per specifications, and received the following bids for piping said buildings for gas:

BID OF C. S. TELFORD COMPANY

"We hereby offer and agree to do the gas fitting in the Knox county almshouse, in Knoxville, Illinois, furnishing all pipe, fittings and labor in accordance to the plans and specifications furnished by J. Grant Beadle, architect, for the sum of five hundred and ten dollars ($510.00). This proposition does not include gas fixtures."

And also received the following bid for wiring for electricity:

BID OF THE KNOXVILLE ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY

"We the undersigned, will agree to furnish all material and labor for wiring the Knox county almshouse, and all of the outbuildings for electric lights as per your specifications, except the chandeliers, which were not specified what kind they should be, but will furnish all wire, sockets and labor for wiring and hanging such fixtures as you may choose, for the sum of $1,531.00.

"We also agree to furnish one switch or feeder panel board to be blue Vermont marble, 1¼ inches thick, 30 by 48 inches, complete with all switches and fuse, for the additional sum of $130.00.

"We, the undersigned, will agree to furnish electric current for lighting the Knox county almshouse at Knoxville at the following price: The first 250 kilowatts consumed each month, 10 cents per kilowatt; the second 250 kilowatts, 9 cents per kilowatt. All above 500 kilowatts consumed each month, up to 1,000 kilowatts, 8 cents per kilowatt; all above 1,000 kilowatts consumed each month, 7 cents per kilowatt; we to furnish all poles, wire and other material. Also all transformers, meters, and deliver the current on board in building, free of cost to you."

Your committee herewith also present the bids of the Arthur Frantzeen Company, McFell Electric Company and the Macomb Electric Construction Company, which we recommend be filed.

Your committee would respectfully recommend that the matter of lighting the almshouse and buildings be referred to the open board for final decision.

Bid for piping for gas.....$ 510.00
Bid for wiring for electricity..... 1,531.00
Bid for switchboard 130.00

Total cost as per bids.....$2,171.00

All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. M. McWilliams,
J. O. Baird,
John C. Geer,
John Spenny,
R. E. Davidson,
Committee.

The hour set for the special order of business relative to the matter of the piping and wiring of the Knox county almshouse at Knoxville, on motion, the report of the almshouse committee, presented to the board on Tuesday morning, was again read.

After some discussion Mr. Barlow moved that the almshouse committee be instructed to investigate the different lighting systems, and they be authorized to install such a system of lighting at the almshouse as the committee deemed advisable and most economical for the county, which motion carried.

December, 1908.—Mr. Davidson, of the committee on almshouse and outside pauper claims, read the following special report in relation to wiring and piping of the almshouse for lighting, which, on his motion, was adopted and its recommendations concurred in:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois:

Your committee on almshouse and poor-farm would respectfully present the following report on the matter of wiring the almshouse for lighting by electricity and piping the same for gas, in accordance with the meeting of the board of supervisors:

Your committee met at the Knox county court house in Galesburg on Thursday, September 17, 1908, to advertise for bids for wiring and piping the almshouse for light purposes according to plans and specifications on file in the county clerk's office.

Upon motion made by Mr. Geer and seconded by Mr. Baird, Mr. Spenny and Mr. Cooke were empowered to oversee work in regard to repairing and setting old boiler taken out of laundry at almshouse and to be used for heating purposes at almshouse. Motion carried.

Your committee again met at the Knox county court house on Monday, October 12, 1908, to open bids for wiring and piping almshouse.

Upon motion made by Mr. Geer and seconded by Mr. Baird, the Knoxville Electric Light and Power Company were allowed the contract for wiring the almshouse for the sum of $1,200.00, according to plans and specifications by J. Grant Beadle, architect, now on file in the county clerk's office. Also that said Knoxville Electric Light and Power Company be allowed the sum of $125 for one Vermont marble switchboard, 24x60 inches, 1¼ inches thick, all wired up complete. Motion carried; bond of $1,000 to accompany the contract.

It was further agreed to enter into contract with said Knoxville Electric Light and Power Company to furnish light at almshouse for two years from January 1, 1909, for the sum of 7½ cents per kilowatt.

The bid of C. S. Telford for piping almshouse for gas according to plans and specifications furnished by J. Grant Beadle, architect, now on file in county clerk's office, for $465, was accepted and contract entered into, a bond of $300 being attached to contract.

We would recommend that the clerk be directed to issue a county order to J. Grant Beadle, for $55, for making plans and specifications for wiring and piping the almshouse and buildings, in accordance with contract with him as heretofore reported by your committee to this board.

All of which is respectfully submitted. We move the adoption of the report and recommendations concurred in.

S. M. McWilliams,
J. O. Baird,
R. E. Davidson,
John C. Geer,
John Spenny,
Committee.

September, 1909.—On motion of Mr. McWilliams, the board granted the privilege of the floor to Dr. C. B. Ripley, who addressed the board on the subject of establishing a county sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis.

On motion of Mr. Sloan, the almshouse committee was authorized to enter into contract with one of the hospitals in the city of Galesburg for the care of county patients.

December, 1909.—The following special report of the almshouse committee, together with contract, order to county clerk and statements relative to purchase of the Nicholas Peterson farm were read:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Illinois:

Your committee authorized at the September meeting of the board of supervisors of Knox county to purchase additional land for the almshouse and poor-farm, beg leave to submit the following report:

That on October 23, 1909, your committee purchased from C. W. Morris his interest in what is known as the Nicholas Peterson farm, he holding a contract for the same, agreeing to pay therefore $19,925, and for which said interest of said C. W. Morris in said contract, we paid by county clerk's order $3,800, leaving due on said contract sums due as follows, to-wit:

January 1, 1910, $1,125, and March 3, 1910, $15,000.

Your committee would recommend that they be granted authority to make such arrangements as are necessary for meeting the further terms of the contract, and to direct the county clerk to issue clerk's orders in payment thereof. Said land described as follows: Situate in the county of Knox and state of Illinois, known and described as lots one (1) and five (5) (according to the plat on page 366 of Volume 44, Knox County Deed Records) of the southeast quarter of section twenty (20), and also the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of said section twenty (20), all of said lands situated in township eleven (11) north, range two (2) east of the fourth principal meridian.

June, 1911.—Mr. Sargent presented and read the following communication, together with the petitions accompanying same.

GALESBURG, Ill., June 13, 1911.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County.

GENTLEMEN:—At a meeting held on Tuesday evening, June 8, 1911, the undersigned discussed the question of the feasibility of a tent colony for the treatment of those in this county afflicted with tuberculosis, and it was the unanimous sentiment that the time had come for a positive step in this direction and that your honorable body is best situated to take the initial steps, in view of the fact that the county has already purchased the land needed for that purpose. It was generally understood at the time of the acquisition that ultimately the county would establish such a tent colony or sanitarium there for the accommodation of the people of this county. Since the procuring of the land there have been many deaths in the county from consumption, and there are now within its confines many such with the disease. It seems only the part of mercy that all such be afforded the modern facilities for treatment close at home. It was the unanimous opinion of those of us who are physicians that the tent colony offers the best method of stamping out the disease. As taxpayers and citizens we ask your respectful consideration of the subject, and also that you assist insofar as your honorable body can in the dissemination of information among the homes of the county regarding the disease to the end that its ravages may be mitigated. All of which, with the accompanying petitions, is respectfully submitted.

A. I. Sargent,
A. B. Dietz,
Fred R. Jelliff.

We, the undersigned, being firmly convinced that the time has come when this county should provide suitable equipment for the stamping out of tuberculosis in our midst, and thereby saving to the community hundreds of useful lives; and believing that further delay is unjustifiable, do hereby respectfully petition the honorable board of supervisors of Knox county to take immediate steps toward equipping a tent colony on the land recently purchased by the board for that purpose.

and 200 others.

Dr. Sargent then stated that Dr. Cox and others of the Medical Society of the City of Galesburg and Knox county were present and he requested that they be permitted to address the board. Whereupon he introduced Dr. Cox, who stated that he was representing the Medical Society of the City of Galesburg, and came before them to urge the necessity and importance of the establishment of a sanitarium for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with tuberculosis, and suggested the appointment of a committee of the members of the board of supervisors to investigate the question and give it thorough consideration, with the object of establishing such a sanitarium on a broad basis so that all classes could and would avail themselves of the advantages thereof.

Dr. William O'R. Bradley also addressed the board, and he urged the co-operation of the board of supervisors with the medical societies of the city of Galesburg and Knox county in establishing and putting in order and thoroughly equipping a sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis.

Dr. G. A. Longbrake also appeared and emphasized the importance of isolation of tubercular patients for their own benefit and for the prevention of the spread of the disease among persons not affected by it.

Dr. Ryan also spoke to the board and emphasized the importance of the establishment of a sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis.

Dr. Ripley stated that he appeared as the representative of the County Medical Society, and the County Society joined with the City Medical Society in urging the importance of the matter of the establishment of a sanitarium for the proper treatment of tuberculosis.

Mr. Greig here stated to the board that personally he realized the need of the proper care and treatment of tubercular subjects and the great importance of the matter; but that if the sanitarium mentioned in the discussion before the board would be solely for the accommodation of patients from Knox county, he questioned whether the community was large enough to warrant the great expense necessary to establish and properly equip and maintain a sanitarium, and he expressed his belief that the time would come when the treatment and care of tubercular cases would be carried on in like manner by the state as the insane patients are now cared for, and in such a case the large outlay by counties for the purpose would be useless.

Dr. Sargent then offered a motion that a special committee of five members of the board be appointed by the chairman, with instructions to confer with the medical societies of the city of Galesburg and Knox county and make some definite recommendations as to the propriety of establishing a colony or sanitarium for the care and treatment of tuberculosis, and report the results of their considerations to the next September meeting of the county board, which motion prevailed.

Mr. Deatherage then offered a motion that the special committee be appointed for the consideration of the tubercular colony and sanitarium matter, be given authority to visit sanitaria in other places and investigate the methods and expense of conducting such places and make a full report of same to the board, and the county to pay the expense of the committee in making such investigations, which motion prevailed.

September, 1911.—The chair announced that the hour had arrived which was set for a special order of business, and offered the representatives of the Knox County and Galesburg Medical Societies that were present the privilege of addressing the board.

Whereupon Dr. Cox appeared and discussed the estimated cost of establishment and maintenance of a sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis for Knox county, as based upon reports on like institutions in the state of New York and other eastern states.

Mr. Minnich, secretary of the Illinois association for the prevention of Tuberculosis also spoke briefly along the same lines and of the purpose and value of such as institution.

Dr. Franing then spoke briefly on the same subject.

Mr. Robson of the special committee on the sanitarium for the treatment of tuberculosis read the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors:

Your committee, to whom was referred the matter pertaining to the establishment of a tuberculosis sanitarium, would respectfully report to your honorable board, that they met on Aug. 9th at the court house, at which time a number of the physicians were present and their arguments were heard, and we are presenting herewith a folder presented by the physicians as their final argument in favor of the establishment of a county sanitarium.

From the statement made by the physicians we have their estimate that there are approximately 234 people in Knox county affected with tuberculosis. We have the statement of the physicians that in 1909 there were in Knox county 297 deaths, from all causes, and 50 of these were from tuberculosis. We find from the records that during the year from Nov., 1909, to Nov., 1910, there were 28 deaths reported as caused from tuberculosis and 8 more from some form of tuberculosis other than pulmonary tuberculosis. From this information it would seem, that if a tubercular sanitarium were to be established, that it should have a capacity of from 50 to 60 patients.

With the idea of seeking further information, as to what was necessary in the establishing of a proper tubercular sanitarium, your committee visited the Edward sanitarium, at Naperville, Ill. This is an institution for the treatment of incipient pulmonary tuberculosis, and only patients in the early stages of pulmonary tuberculosis are admitted.

This institution has a permanent service building, with dining room, kitchen, laundry and accommodations for the employees. It also has a medical building, including office, medical facilities, laboratory, infirmary and rooms for the medical and nursing staff. The service building was a gift, and represents an expenditure of approximately $12,000. The medical building was built at a cost of $21,435. This cost does not include the installation of a laboratory, such as seems to be necessary for an institution of this kind, and which would cost approximately $4,000, this being the cost of the laboratory at Ottawa. This institution has also 4 open air shacks with a capacity of 36 beds. These shacks cost approximately $1,100 each. There are also 5 tents, having a capacity of 10 beds, which cost about $125.00 each. This gives a capacity of 46 patients in the shacks and tents, the balance being provided for in the medical building. There are also in this institution, two day resting shacks, representing a cost of a little over $500 or a total investment of approximately $42,500.

This institution shows a total operating expense, outside of improvements to buildings and grounds and furniture and furnishings, of approximately $21,600 per year. The per capita expense at this place is approximately $10.00 per patient per week. It will also be noted that these patients are expected to do considerable towards their own care, in the way of taking care of their accommodations, such as care of sleeping quarters, etc.

Your committee also visited the colony at Ottawa, Ill., and found there an institution with a capacity of about 60 patients. This institution has an administration building, containing the dining room, offices, and accommodations for the employees, together with heating plant and kitchen, which represents a cost of approximately $25,000. There is a bath house costing $4500 and an annex or shack, containing the laboratory and sleeping apartments for 5 or 6 patients. At this institution the patients are principally kept in tents, each patient having an individual tent. About half of the tents in this institution are permanent affairs and cost about $250.00 each, and the other are temporary tents and cost about $215.00 each. The total investment here represents approximately $48,000.00.

At this institution, not only the incipient cases are admitted but also the more advanced, although the latter are not desired. The annual cost of maintaining this institution was not obtainable although we were advised by the superintendent that the pay roll was about $2000 per month, and judging from the records of the Edward Sanitarium at Naperville, your committee is inclined to the belief that this represents about one-half of the actual cost of operation.

The cost of construction given herein for the two institutions does not include the cost of real estate or the installation of the proper water service, nor the drainage or sewerage proposition.

Both of the institutions mentioned, cater principally to the patients who are able to pay their way, more especially the colony at Ottawa. The colony at Naperville received contributions from outside sources which enables them to provide for a number of free patients. Their statement from 1907 to 1911, shows that 40 per cent of the patients were pay patients, 51 per cent were free patients maintained by private subscriptions and from other sources, and 9 per cent were semi free, or in other words, assisted in part by various organizations and individuals.

The costs enumerated herein, are for the care of the incipient cases. It would appear that this cost would necessarily be insufficient where the care of advanced cases are to be undertaken.

Your committee is very firmly of the belief, that if Knox county is to undertake the establishment of a tuberculosis sanitarium that it should, most emphatically, provide for the care of the advanced cases, although there is no way by which these apparently dangerous cases may be compelled to submit to treatment or even to the sanitarium, except in the most advanced cases, coming from the homes where the illness causes dependency. These cases have been, and are now being received at the almshouse and cared for in a very satisfactory manner.

Your committee is further of the opinion that should this honorable board see fit, at this time, to establish a county sanitarium for the care and treatment of tuberculosis, that a reasonable sanitarium could be established at a cost of approximately $25,000.

The fact that the present tax levy is practically up to the limit allowed by law, would make it necessary that this amount be provided by a bond issue of the county for this purpose.

Your committee further believes that a great deal of good might be done along this line by education and would recommend that the matter be taken up with the county superintendent of schools in order that the results obtained from proper care in cases of tuberculosis might be taught in the public schools of the county.

To the Honorable, the Special Committee of the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, on the Question of a Tuberculosis Sanitarium.

GENTLEMEN:—In this final argument in favor of the establishment of a county sanitarium for the treatment of tubercular patients, it is not our intention or desire to wear out the patience of this honorable body. We wish to present simply the salient points touching upon the cause of the disease, its universal dissemination, false ideas about its propagation and spread, its social side and its financial aspect, its prevention and lastly its care and cure, so that you will have a firm basis of fact for your action.

The disease was named phthisis or consumption by the Greeks because of its wasting action. Hippocrates, the Greak physician, who lived twenty centuries ago, gives an accurate description of the disease, which does not vary much from what we see today. The disease has spread so that today it is found in every clime and among all people. Its virulence varies with the physical development of the people, their racial history and their environment and social habits. Some people are unusually susceptible to the disease, notable the negroes, and mulattoes and the Indians, especially half breeds. People who have lived an outdoor life for generations and are then housed by civilization are very prone to it and whole tribes have been "literally wiped off the face of the earth" when they have been educated to clothes and foul smelling hut.

The real nature of the disease was not known until 1882 when Koch, the great German scientist, discovered the germ, and by cultivation and inoculation proved it to be the cause of the disease. Prior to this time it was supposed to be hereditary and when a person was attacked all hope was gone and little was done in the way of prevention or cure.

The disease is caused by the bacillus tuberculosis, a small germ which has to be magnified 800 or 1,000 times and colored before it can be detected. It is hardy and tenacious of life. When expectorated and allowed to lodge in a warm, damp place, it will live two months.

Heating to a temperature of 145 degrees will not kill it. If, however, it is exposed to the air and sunlight for two days it will be destroyed. Sunlight and fresh air sounds the death knell of tuberculosis. The germs have never been discovered in the blood nor is there an authentic instance where the disease has been transmitted from the mother to the unborn child.

It is mildly contagious, if at all. It is transmitted in two ways usually—by inhalation and by means of the food. Sixty-four per cent occurs by inhaling the dried sputum and 20 per cent by ingesting the germs. There may be other ways but they are not fully proven, possibly by inoculation. The infection occurs by means of the dried sputum, which is carried about by the air and inhaled, or by drops of mucous which may be expectorated on the pillow or sheets and some one lies on them and becomes infected. The tonsil is an excellent resting place for the germ until it matures and develops.

It is quite well established that children are infected by tuberculosis cow's milk. That fact that nearly all children who have tuberculosis have the glands of the bowel and its covering infected, would seem to prove this conclusively.

Years ago when it was the common belief that the disease was hereditary and, therefore, inevitable in a family, it was no uncommon thing to see a sick patient cover the floor with foul expectoration which was allowed to dry and was wafted by the wind to all parts of the neighborhood, infecting not only the family, but every one in the vicinity. Domestic animals have often been thus infected.

It has been conclusively proven that 7 per cent of all deaths are due to the disease the world over. That, however, does not tell half the story. German pathologists have proven by autopsies that fully 75 per cent of all the people who died had the disease in some form or other. This was true of children as well as adults. What a sad state of affairs! Fortunately all people who have tubercles do not develop the disease. They are a constant menace, however, so that when the system becomes debilitated and the people live in dark houses with foul air, there is a physical explosion and consumption results. The far greater frequency of tuberculosis in cities as compared to country districts and villages is shown by statistics of Paris in the number of cases per thousand 5 per cent and in the villages 2 per cent. Under preventive measures and better hygiene the ratio of tuberculosis is gradually decreasing. In New York the mortality has decreased 50 per cent in 10 years, and it has fallen 40 per cent in Philadelphia in the same time. Hilles has shown that by the same rate of decrease as has occurred in Prussia in the past ten years, the disease will be extinct in 1927, and in England 1947.

It is an appalling thing to contemplate that at least 75 per cent of our people carry the germs of tuberculosis. It is estimated that more than one hundred thousand die from the disease annually in the United States. During 1909 there were 65,612 deaths in the state of Illinois from all causes and 7,078 were from consumption. In the age period between 20 and 30 there were in Illinois 5,205 deaths from all causes. Of this number 1849 were from tuberculosis which is a death rate of 35 per cent. Thus during the most active period of life 35 per cent of the deaths are from this dread disease. In Knox county alone there were 497 deaths from all causes and 50 of those were from consumption. This is not a sporadic condition due to some sudden epidemic, but is a continuous condition.

Thus the matter is brought down to our homes. Every year fifty of our people die of this disease and almost half of them are at the development period. It is time something were done to check the ravages of this death dealing agent. How many homes have you seen in your county completely decimated by this disease because the patients could not get proper care? Prevention is the watch word. The people are being educated along the line of hygiene by the schools and various organizations for the prevention of tuberculosis, but it will be several generations before the disease is under control. In the meantime the unfortunates who have the disease have to be cared for and cured if possible. While change of climate plays a part in the checking of the disease, it is unimportant as compared to the proper care and feeding in the climate and environment to which the consumptive is accustomed. Home treatment is almost a failure in those cases. They need at all times intelligent supervision. They may be educated to sleep out of doors which helps a great deal, but their diet must be well balanced and of such a quality that it can be properly assimilated. It is much harder to control the patients in their own home because of the anxious solicitation of their friends, who break the rules laid down and irretrievably injure the patient. It is impossible to make unhygienic surroundings fit for consumptive patients. The surroundings should be pleasant and everything done that would tend to take his mind from himself and his terrible affliction. It would be a revelation for you to see the patients sent even from good homes to the sanitarium by people who thought they were competent to handle the patient. In nearly every case a crime against good judgment was committed when it was sought to do only good.

The sanitarium is as necessary in the treatment of tuberculosis as is the hospital in the successful handling of medical and surgical cases.

It is an institution equipped for the care of the sick and has facilities for the successful application of physiological therapeutics that cannot be provided in the home.

Of the many obstacles to the successful application of the treatment of tuberculosis, not the least is in meeting the necessary expense of treatment. When sanitarium treatment is suggested as it has been in the past, we were met with the obstacle that the patient was not able to stand the expense. That was all too true, and it is for that very reason that county sanitariums are being established. They will reduce the expense to the minimum, and at the same time will be near at hand for the patients.

However, we cannot escape from the burden of tuberculosis, no matter which way we turn. It must be borne by the patient or his friends or by the state. Fortunately the cure is the least expensive, but up to the present the fact has not been realized. There is as much money spent in the care of tuberculosis patients as would be necessary to cure all those afflicted if properly applied. It will usually cost less to cure a patient in a sanitarium than to care for him during the months and even years of his illness, to say nothing about the loss of his own time and that of his friends who care for him.

THE ECONOMIC VALUE OF THE SANITARIUM TREATMENT OF PULMONARY TUBERCULOSIS

Dr. David Russell Lyman, Wallingford: The Gaylord Farm Sanitarium was opened September, 1904, and on May 11, 1911, they had 676 discharged patients who had been away from the institution for six months or longer. Thirty-four were school children and had no earning capacity. This left 633 cases on which my study is based. The results of treatment are in direct ratio with the stage of the disease at which the diagnosis is made. The incipient cases show an average total earning of $1,020.60, the moderately advanced of $842.22, while the far advanced earned an average of $192.10. The incipient cases showed a working capacity of 70 per cent, of their total time since discharge; the moderately advanced 59 per cent, and the far advanced only 23 per cent. The average weekly wages varied but little for the three classes. In another table dealing with 262 cases discharged as "arrested," 253 "improved," and 118 "progressive" the arrested show an average total earnings of $1,039.48; the improved $719.53; the progressive only $72.55. The percentage of "weeks of work" to "weeks of life" is 67 per cent, for the arrested, 47 per cent, for the improved and 14 per cent, for the progressives. The total expenditure was $236,744.51, whereas the amount already earned by discharged patients was $464,406.00, a return of about 200 per cent, within six years from the commencement of the work.

Truden: Reports at the Adirondack's Sanitarium show 72 per cent, of incipient cases cured, and 17 per cent of advanced cases. Rutland Sanitarium shows 72 per cent of incipient cases cured and 46 per cent of advanced.

Truden says that out of 1,000 cases treated and followed up at the end of 15 years 46 per cent were still living.

The apparent simplicity of the treatment of pulmonary tuberculosis is one of the chief sources of error in its application and involves a real danger. This is a fundamental fact which is not but must be realized before we are on a solid footing. The medical profession have reached substantially the agreement that the underlying principles of treatment is constant fresh air, good and abundant food and rest.

We have not attempted to go into the details of the economic loss from tuberculosis, because it would consume too much space, but, the few data given above will show the great saving to the state from the cure of those afflicted.

Tuberculosis is the greatest scourge of all the ages.

It has the highest death rate of any disease.

It is not hereditary.

It is preventable.

It can be cured if taken in time.

The sanitarium is the proper place for the care and treatment.

With this great array of scientific facts and data attesting the universality of the disease and its enormous death rate before you, what is your duty as supervisors?

The legislature at its last meeting passed a bill giving counties the right to provide suitable sanitaria for the care of its tubercular patients. By so doing they recognize the right of the state to provide for its delinquents and to protect its citizens in their health as well as in their social or financial status. At various times in the last few decades the state has passed laws giving the health department, in the state as well as in the cities, the power to induce quarantine for the protection of its citizens, and in some cases it has even provided means of cure, viz., the supplying of antitoxin for the cure of diphtheria.

In addition to the state law recently passed prohibiting the public drinking cup. Chicago has passed a local ordinance to the same effect so that they might better control the situation.

If Knox county supervisors were to pass a resolution favorable to the erection of a suitable sanitarium it would not be a pioneer in this matter—for already it is found from statistics published in the new tuberculosis directory of the national association for the study and prevention of tuberculosis, that over 700 cities and towns of the United States and Canada are engaged in the war against consumption and that on April 1, 1911, there were nearly 1,500 different agencies at work in the crusade; an increase of nearly 700 per cent in the last seven years.

The new directory lists 421 tuberculosis sanitaria hospitals and day camps; 511 associations and committees for the prevention of tuberculosis; 342 special dispensaries; 68 open air schools; 98 hospitals for the insane and penal institutions making special provision for their tuberculosis inmates, besides giving an account of the anti-tuberculosis legislation in every state and in about 250 cities.

The evidence of the necessity for a sanitarium is so overwhelming that it seems as if no doubt could exist. If your honorable board have any doubts about the feasibility of the institution, it must be because of the financial consideration alone. When our committee appeared before you nine weeks ago the matter was presented in a crude form, and at that time no plan of sanitarium or plan of handling the patients was presented. We considered it advisable to leave that to the better judgment of the board, and we felt sure that they would be able to elaborate a plan after mature consideration which would answer the purpose and would not be a burden to the tax payers.

From the statistics presented it appears that it is a matter of personal interest to at least 75 per cent of the people of the county, which is indeed a large majority.

Following our last conference with the board we were told to go out among the people, the voters and tax payers, and get an expression of opinion upon the project. Your honorable committee of the board, we have done so. We have worked hard and held meetings in sixteen cities and towns of our county. We have endeavored to educate the people as to the great danger of the disease, while at the same time we have presented the plan as proposed and asked for a suitable expression of their opinion as to whether or not they wanted such a means of treating the disease. In every place resolutions were passed urging the supervisors to immediately arrange for the erection of a suitable sanitarium. These sixteen resolutions passed in open meeting and signed by the secretary and president of the meeting are herewith attached for your perusal and consideration. All the newspapers of the county are favorable to the plan and they certainly voice the sentiment of the community—all the people are for it—and they speak for themselves. Honorable supervisors, what more can you ask? Pass the resolution authorizing the erection of such a sanitarium. We do not come as beggars asking a crust for ourselves, we come simply in the spirit of a broad humanity, the representatives of the people whom you serve. They demand it. I might say that we come as representatives of our great republic, whose citizens we are; of the great State of Illinois of which Knox county is a part and which has given you the power in this matter to protect and preserve its citizens; of this fine County of Knox, whose supervisors you are. We come at the instance of the fathers and mothers who demand that their sons and daughters be given an equal chance in this great struggle for existence by upbuilding their physical condition so they may cope on a more equal footing with their more fortunate neighbors.

Of all the good things you have advocated for the county none, I am sure, will redound to your credit more than this.

Gentlemen, in the name of humanity we ask that you resolve to supply a sanitarium for the cure of these debilitated and unhappy people.

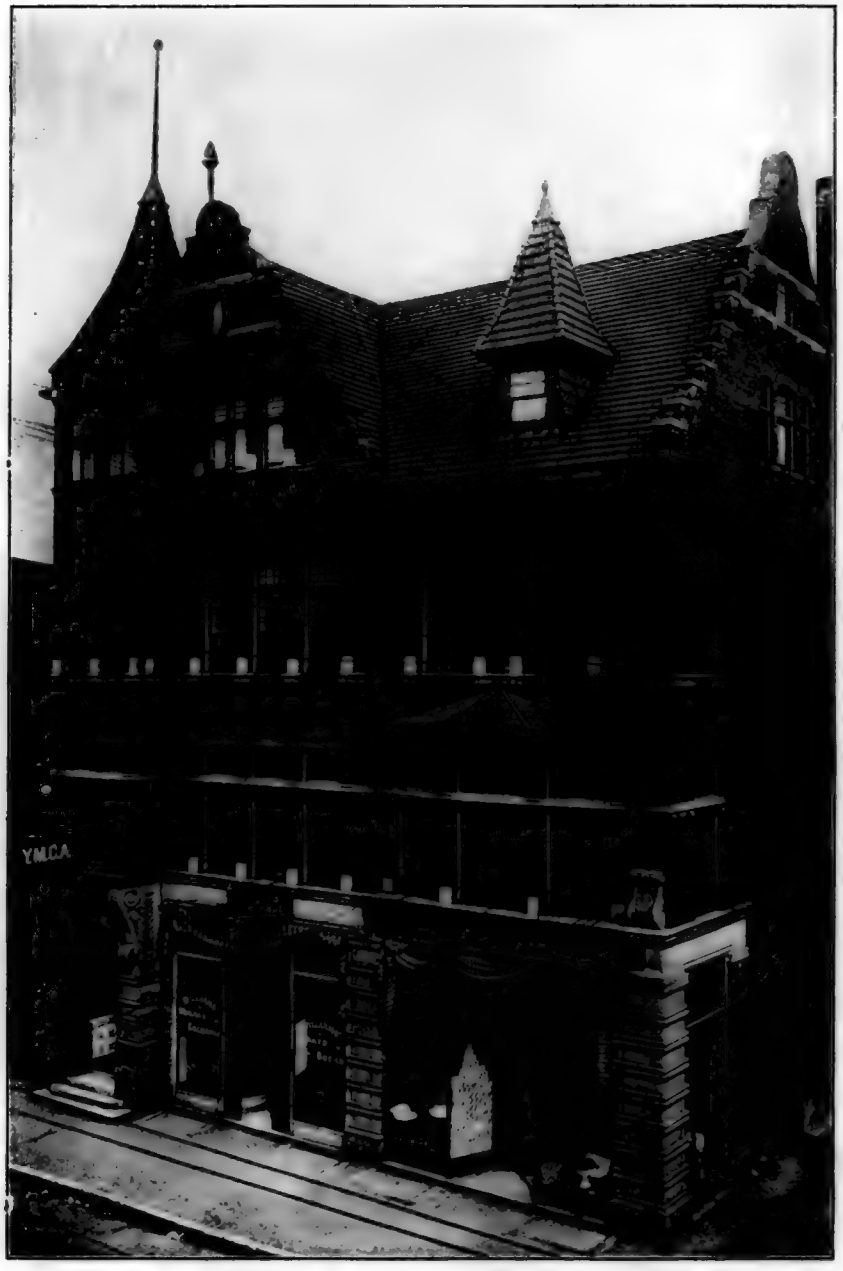
Mr. Mott offered a motion that the report of the special committee be filed and made a matter of record and that the committee be discharged, which motion prevailed.

MILITARY HISTORY OF KNOX COUNTY.

By Capt. Chas. C. Craig.

Knox county was named from a soldier, General Henry Knox, of Revolutionary war fame, chief of artillery under Washington and afterward secretary of war.

The earliest inhabitants of what is now Knox county, of which we have any record, were the Indians. Their principal pursuits were war, and the chase, and many of their implements of warfare have been found in all parts of the county.



While little is known of them in this vicinity prior to the advent of the early French explorers, the woodlands and prairies of Illinois abounded in game and the fertile and productive lands of this vicinity were altogether as desirable to the savage tribes in their day as they are to us at the present time.

The first tribe of Indians that occupied the Illinois country called themselves the Illini, which in their language signified "Men" or "Superior Men," and for a long time they held the hunting grounds of this state and waged successful warfare against the Miamis and Iroquois on the east, the Chickasaws on the south, the Osage and Pawnees of the southwest and the Pottawatomies of the north. At a later day the wonderful resources and fertility of the Illinois country were fully appreciated and coveted by the explorers from the old world. The European wars of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries extended to the American colonies, even to the extreme frontiers, and the adventurers of France, England and Spain, with hostile Indian tribes as their allies, successfully fought for possession of the beautiful Illinois country, and more effectively than we now realize. Whether any of their battles took place in Knox county, or in this immediate vicinity, we do not know.

There was a difference in the arrows, spears and axes made and used by the different tribes, and the presence of such implements of warfare used by tribes whose territory was far from Illinois would indicate they had been used in warfare between them and the Indians inhabiting this state.

There is a field on the banks of Sugar creek, where it crosses the northwest quarter of section fourteen in Persifer township in this county, where, according to the residents of that neighborhood, quantities of bullets have been found within an area of a few acres. This place is on the old Indian trail that ran from the towns of the Illini, about where the village of Utica now stands; in a southwesterly direction across Knox county to where the Des Moines river empties into the Mississippi. These bullets are mostly the round, old-fashioned musket balls in use over two hundred years ago. When the Illini were defeated and driven from their villages along the upper Illinois by the treacherous and savage Iroquois, as narrated by Tonti, La Salle's able lieutenant, and an eye-witness to the massacre, their flight was toward the southwest, possibly some of the fugitives followed this trail. Again, a century later, when the last of the Illini were defeated by the Pottawatomies, some of them may have been overtaken on this trail, or an expedition from the Spanish colonies or a band of traders may have there fought to the death.

We have no record of any operations in the Revolutionary war in Northwestern Illinois. In the War of 1812 and the Indian wars preceding, the settlers took an important part, and the muster rolls have been preserved of several companies of rangers from the southern part of the state who were in that war. These rosters are published in Volume 9 of the Adjutant General's Report of Illinois. During this war the British incited the Northern Indian tribes to harrass the frontier settlements, and the settlers of Illinois territory organized to protect themselves. One of the expeditions, under General Howard from Fort Russell, marched up the Mississippi river to about the present site of Quincy, from there crossing over to the Illinois river to Havana, and from there to Peoria. In this expedition Major Boone was sent with a force to scour the Spoon river country towards Rock river, and penetrated into what is now Knox country, crossing Spoon river, or the Amaquonia, as it was then called by its Indian name, probably about where the village of Maquon now stands, and from there returned to Peoria, or Fort Clarke as it was then known. This is the earliest record that has been found of any military expeditions into what is now Knox county.

The first war in which the inhabitants of Knox county participated was the Black Hawk war of 1832. Knox county, with its present boundaries, was organized in 1825. The jurisdiction of the Knox county commissioners extended as far north as Rock river and the actual scene of hostilities. As early as 1831 the few families of the county sent Thomas McKee, Thomas Maxwell, Joseph Rowe and Robert Greenwell to consult with General Gaines, commander of the military post on Rock Island, about means of defense. This party came upon a large band of mounted Indians, who followed them for some distance, but were assured by Major McKee, who was able to speak their language, that they were on their way to trade with Davenport, who was well and favorably known by the Indians, and they were allowed to proceed. On arriving at the fort they were assured by the general that there was no immediate danger and returned with this news, after many adventures.

The following spring, 1832, Black Hawk recrossed the Mississippi. Major McKee, together with James McMurtry and Fontleroy Freeman, again made the perilous journey to Rock Island, where they secured one hundred guns with accoutrements. These were sent down to river to Oquawka, and from there brought in wagons to this county, where they were distributed among seventy-two men living in Knox and Warren counties, comprising nearly the entire male population.

Another party commanded by Mr. St. Vrain, which was sent by General Atkinson to Rock Island about the same time was massacred. With the arms thus secured a military organization called the "Volunteer Rangers" was organized, consisting of the following men and officers:

Captain, William McMurtry; first lieutenant, George G. Lattimore; second lieutenant, Turner R. Roundtree; sergeants, Edward Martin, Benjamin Brown, Josiah Vaughn, James McMurtry; corporals, Edward Fuqua, James H. Roundtree, Thomas Maxwell, Jr., Obadiah Fuqua; privates, Edmund Adcock, Jesse Adkins, Peter Bell, James Brown, Franklin B. Barber, Wilson Brown, Alfred Brown, George Brown, Joshua Brown, Henry Bell, James McM. Criswell, Ebur Criswell, William Corban, Solomon Davis, Daniel Fuqua, Alexander Frakes, James Ferguson, John Fraker, Luster T. Gillett, James Goff, Zachias Hunt, William Hilton, Robert K. Hendricks, Joseph Holiday, Berryman Jennings, Theodore Jennings, Reese Jones, William Lewis, Thomas W. McKee, John McMurtry, James McGehee, Thomas Maxwell, Sr., James Maxwell, John Miles, Thomas C. McCallister, ——— McCallister, Daniel Miles, Elisha Miles, John Norton, James Nevett, Andrew Osbourn, Stephen Osbourn, Parnach Owen, Simeon Pennington, John D. Roundtree, John P. Robinson, Joseph Row, Jonathan Rice, Alexander Robertson, Josiah Stillings, John Vaughn, Samuel S. White, Joseph Wallace, Calvin Williams and William Williams.

The command was mounted, each man furnished his own horse. They ranged over the country from this county to the Mississippi river in the neighborhood of Oquawka. They were out about sixty days, but were in no engagements with the enemy.

For further protection three log forts were constructed, two in Henderson township, one on section ten and the other on section thirty-three, and one in Rio township in section twenty-two. Each fort consisted of a stockade about 200 feet square, built of oak timbers 12 feet in length, forming a fence about 8 or 9 feet high, lined with sod. On two of the corners were erected block houses by which each of the four sides of the fort could be protected. These were 16 by 20 feet and the second story projected beyond the walls, thus enabling the guard to prevent the approach of incendiaries.

Several times during the Black Hawk war the settlers left their homes in the county and fled to these forts for protection on rumors that the Indians were coming. It is probable that but for the efforts of Shabbona, a Pottawatomie chief, who had great influence with the Indians of this part of the state, and who prevented his people from taking part with the Sacs and Foxes, that the frontier settlements would have been devastated even south of the Illinois river. Shabbona was a great chief, and often visited this county, where he had many friends among the whites. He and his warriors fought in the War of 1812. Tecumseh was killed by his side in the Battle of the Thames. Afterwards he befriended the whites, and when Black Hawk was taken prisoner he said had it not been for Shabbona the whole Pottawatomie nation would have joined him, and he could have continued the war for years. After the surrender of Black Hawk in August, 1832, hostilities ceased. In 1833 rumors were rife that the Indians were dissatisfied with the treaty they had made and would again cross the Mississippi resolved upon another war, but these reports proved to be unfounded, and that was the last of Indian warfare in Knox county.

The only survivor of the Black Hawk war now living, as far as known, is Mr. Avery Dalton of Elmwood. Mr. Dalton is upwards of a hundred years old and formerly lived in Knox county. He was a member of Captain David W. Barnes' company, from Fulton county. This company was in the Battle of Stillman's Run and several of its members were killed or wounded. A few years ago the writer of this article had an interesting visit with Mr. Dalton at his home in Elmwood, in which the old gentleman narrated his personal experiences as a soldier in the Black Hawk war and as a hunter in the pioneer days.

As the county became more settled, the militia was organized. The officers were appointed by the governor, who organized the men of the county into companies. These would meet once or twice a year, following the fashion of the New England Muster Day. Thomas McKee was chosen major of the militia in 1838, and for several years held that office. At the beginning of the Mexican war he assembled the militia of the county at Knoxville, to the number of fifteen hundred; from this number a company of one hundred and nine men were formed and volunteered for the war with Mexico, but the quota of this state was already full, so this company was not accepted.

In a company from Fulton county, commanded by the late Lewis W. Ross as captain, there was at least one Knox county man, Hugh Patton, who lived many years at Maquon, and probably others.

Hon. Rufus Cleveland, one of the few survivors of the Mexican war, is still living in the city of Galesburg, at this writing, full of years and honors, having served in both the Mexican and Civil wars.

In the Civil war there were only seven counties in the state that furnished a larger number of soldiers than Knox county, and none that filled their quotas more promptly. Knox county was called upon to furnish 3,842 men, but finally credited by the adjutant-general of the state with only 3,837. There were many who left the county to enlist in foreign regiments, and the colored troops to the number of from twenty-five to fifty were never credited to Knox county.

Besides the filling of her quota of the regular calls of the president, she furnished 326 men in answer to the governor's call for 100 day men, making a total of at least 4,200 men. These were distributed among 82 regiments, and in 190 different companies. Of this number 123 were killed in action, 168 wounded and 344 died; 96 suffered the horrors of prison life, some of whom died at Andersonville and Libby.

One of the famous characters of the Civil war was ..... Bickerdyke, "Mother Bickerdyke" as she was known. She went from Knox county as an army nurse and by her efforts with the sanitary commission and in the army hospitals did untold good among the sick and wounded. A monument has been erected to her memory in the Court House park.

After the Civil war little was done in military matters for many years. In 1876 the Fourth Regiment Illinois National Guard was organized; the commanding officer was Colonel William Whiting of Altona, and among the other field officers were, Major O. L. Higgins of Oneida; Lieutenant William O. Whiting, adjutant, Altona; Lieutenant Theodore A. Wetmore, quartermaster, Oneida, and among the non-commissioned staff were D. W. Wooley, color sergeant, Altona; George W. Williams, drum-major, Galesburg; Charles S. Matteson and Arthur W. Ladd, principal musicians, Oneida. Three companies of this regiment were stationed in Knox county, Company A at Oneida, commanded by Captain Frank Murdock; Company B, known as the College City Guards, commanded by Captain E. F. Phelps at Galesburg, and Company C, commanded by Captain Charles A. Smith, stationed at Altona. Also there were two sections of a battery commanded by Captain Aaron Brown at Altona, the regimental band at Oneida and drum corps at Galesburg.

Among the members of the Galesburg company were Frank D. Bellows, Ed. R. Drake, Fred H. Holmes, Charles J. Munson, Charles W. Munson, George W. Prince and Daniel S. Hecker. This regiment was called into service during the railroad strikes of 1877 and rendered efficient duty at East St. Louis and Galesburg.

On the reorganization of the Illinois National Guard the Sixth regiment was organized from the companies in the northwestern part of the state. The Galesburg company became Company C of the Sixth. This company was again called into service at East St. Louis during the railroad strikes in 1887 under Captain William Weeks; again in 1894 at the Miners' and American Railroad union strike at Pekin and Spring Valley under Captain T. L. McGirr.

In 1897 Company D of Abingdon was organized and assigned to the Sixth regiment. July 7, 1897, Battery B of the artillery battalion was organized from the Galesburg Light artillery, which up to that time had been a private organization. At the outbreak of the Spanish war members of Company C and Company D volunteered and were mustered in with the rest of the regiment forming the Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. The rosters of these respective companies were as follows: Captain, Thomas L. McGirr; first lieutenant, Conrad A. Byloff; second lieutenant, Daniel K. Smith; first sergeant, Frank E. Johnson; sergeants, Edwin C. Reed; Carl J. L. Borine; corporal, Walter F. Coolidge; musicians, Thomas W. Thomson; Mark J. Potter; privates, Benjamin Anderson, Ivan Bohman, Alfred B. Bawman, Ira E. Benson, Jacob C. Benedict, Jacob D. Bir, Alvin P. Burkhalter, William Campbell, Willis E. Calkins, William H. Copp, Edqin J. This regiment was ordered to Springfield April 26, 1898, and mustered into the service for two years May 11, 1898. Left Springfield, Illinois, May 17, 1898, by rail to Camp Russel A. Alger, Virginia, arriving May 20, 1898. Remaining until July 5, 1898, when regiment left by rail for Charleston, South Carolina, arriving July 6, 1898. Companies E, F and I embarked on board U. S. S. Columbia, Company A embarked on board U. S. S. Yale, July 8, 1898, for Cuba, arriving at Santiago, July 13, 1898. Companies B, C, G, H, K and L embarked on U. S. S. Rita July 10, 1898, arriving at Santiago July 15, 1898. Companies D and M embarked on board Transport No. 21 July 21, 1898, arriving at Ponce Porto Rico July 27, 1898. The troops did not disembark at Cuba, at Sibony, July 16, 1898, Guantanomo Bay July 18th and 20th, at Baigniri July 20, 1898, returned to Guantanomo Bay July 21, 1898. Sailed from Guantanomo Bay July 21, 1898, for Porto Rico, arriving at Guanica, Porto Rico, July 25, 1898. In camp at Guanica until July 30, 1898. Company G in action July 26, 1898, four miles from Guanica. The regiment marched from Guanica to Youco, July 30, 1898. Marched from Youco to Tallaboia July 31, 1898. Marched from Tallaboia to Ponce August 1, 1898. In camp at Ponce until August 9, 1898, when regiment marched to Guaragnos. Left Guaragnos and marched four miles over the mountain August 10, 1898. Advanced to Adjuntas August 11th. In camp at Adjuntas until August 16, 1898, when regiment marched to Utuado. In camp at Utuado until August 26th, when regiment returned to Adjuntas. Left Adjuntas August 28, 1898, and marched to Ponce. In camp at Ponce until September 7, 1898, when the regiment embarked on board U. S. S. Monitoba at Port Ponce. Arrived at Weehawken, New Jersey, September 13, 1898. Left Weehawken by rail for Springfield, Illinois, arriving at the latter place September 16, 1898. In camp at Springfield, Illinois, until September 22, 1898, when the various companies left by rail for their respective home stations under G. O. No. 130, A. G. O. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, Illinois, November 25, 1898.

The two Knox county companies were through the war with this regiment. Battery B volunteered but was not accepted as only one battery of artillery was taken from the state. During the same year the battery was called into service at Springfield, Pana and Virden during the coal strike and received the thanks of the governor for efficiency. The battery was out altogether about six weeks. The members of the battery were as follows: Captain, Charles C. Craig; first lieutenant, Frank C. Henry; second lieutenants, John F. Hamilton and William W. Smith; sergeants, Lewis W. Patric, Guy P. Williams, Armor Moreland, James Temple, Fred W. Smith; quartermaster sergeant, Edward C. Branham; commissary sergeant, Buford N. Stoner; stable sergeant, John E. Maley; corporals, James E. Davis, William F. Lovejoy, Fred C. Remier, Albert F. Scogland, George W. Flynn, Leroy A. Scudder, Howard A. Freer, John B. Bridge; musicians, Roy L. Martin and Friend L. Smith; privates, Norman C. Allen, Fred L. Andrews, Jay Addleman, John O. Barton, Charles S. Brown, Orvie Bone, Ward J. Carley, Frank W. Crain, Ben S. Carpenter, Fred C. Clay, Fred Cookley, Clyde

In addition to the foregoing organization the following served in Battery A from this state:

Gustaf J. Kohler, Clyde W. Beson, Charles M. Colkins, Henry C. Hill, Joseph Krother, Rolla Mount and W. W. McConnell, Ervin Hunt, H. E. Stecker and Chauncy Cooke of the Third United States Engineers and several others from Knox county served in the regular army and navy and organizations from other states besides those already mentioned.

In 1899 Captain McGirr and Captain Latimer were both appointed captains in the United States volunteers and Captain McGirr enlisted several men in the county, which he took with the Forty-fifth volunteer infantry to serve in the Philippines. Captain Latimer served as captain in the United States volunteers.

Battery B after being in the state service many years was mustered out in 1907. At this writing the only military organization in the county is Company C of the Sixth Regiment, Illinois National Guard, commanded by Captain Roy C. Wright, First Lieutenant Alfred E. Nuller, Second Lieutenant James E. Davis.

It is impossible in this brief sketch to give the individual records of Knox county soldiers, or to narrate their experiences and adventures; to do so, interesting as it would be, would take many volumes.

The record of achievements of the soldiers of Knox county is a part of the honorable history of our great state of Illinois, and of the United States. No community has a prouder history of brave men and noble women. To the women war was all sorrow and suffering.

The people of Knox county in war and in peace have acted well their part. May our future history be as honorable as our past.

17TH INFANTRY

The 17th Reg. Ill. Inf. Vols. were mustered into the United States service at Peoria, Ill., on the 24th day of May, 1861. Left for Alton, Ill., late in July, proceeded to St. Charles, thence to Warrenton, Mo., where it remained about two weeks. The regiment left Warrenton for St. Louis and embarked on transports for Bird's Point, Mo.; thence to Sulphur Springs Landing; debarking, went to Pilot Knob, Mo., in pursuit of Gen. Jeff Thompson, and joined Prentice's command at Jackson, Mo., thence to Kentucky and aided in the construction of Fort Holt. Was then ordered to Cape Girardeau and were again sent in pursuit of Jeff Thompson; participated in the engagement near Greenfield; returned to Cape Girardeau and performed provost duty until February, 1862. Were then ordered to Fort Henry; participated in that engagement and Fort Donelson, losing several men killed, wounded and taken prisoners. Soon after went to Pittsburg Landing and was assigned to the army of West Tennessee; engaged in the battle of the 6th and 7th of April, suffering great loss in killed and wounded; was in the advance to Corinth; after the evacuation of Corinth marched to Jackson, Tenn.; remained until July, when they were ordered to Bolivar, where they remained until November, 1862, participating during the time in the expedition to Iuka to reinforce Gen. Rosecrans, where they were engaged in the battle of the Hatchie; marched to Lagrange, Tenn.; the middle of November, reporting to Gen. John A. Logan, and were assigned to duty as provost guard. Early in December marched to Holly Springs, via Abbyville and Oxford. After the battle of Holly Springs were assigned to Gen. McPherson's command, then proceeded to Moscow, Collierville and Memphis, and were assigned to duty at the navy yard, remaining until June 16, then embarking for Vicksburg, re-embarking for Lake Providence, La., where they remained until the investment of Vicksburg began. Went to Milliken's Bend, May 1, commenced the march across the Delta to Pekin's Landing, advanced with McPherson's command to the final investment of Vicksburg. After the surrender of that city, remained there, making frequent incursions into the enemy's country until May, 1864, the term of service expiring on the 24th of May of that year.

The regiment was ordered to Springfield, Ill., to muster out, when those who had not re-enlisted as veterans, received their final discharge. A sufficient number not having enlisted to entitle them to retain their regimental organization, were consolidated with the 8th Ill. Inf., and were finally mustered out with that regiment in the Spring of 1866.

There were 131 men from this county in the 17th, 4 were killed, 3 wounded, 8 died, 1 taken prisoner.

33D INFANTRY

Was organized at Campt Butler in 1861. Sept. 20, moved to Ironton, Mo., remained during the winter. March, 1862, moved with the command of Gen. Steele southward, passing into Arkansas at Pitman's Ferry, and marching via Pocahontas and Jacksonport to Batesville, where it joined Gen. Curtis' army; thence via Jacksonport, Augusta and Clarendon, to Helena. Was engaged in the battle of Cache, and in many skirmishes. At the battle of cotton plant, Co. A, on skirmish line, met and checked a charge of 2,000 Texan Rangers.

During July and August were camped 20 miles south of Helena, and engaged in eight expeditions up and down the river. Sept. 1, was moved up the river to Sulphur Springs, and thence to Pilot Knob Nov. 15, moved to Van Buren, Ark. Made winter campaign in Southeast Missouri. Was ordered to Ste. Genevieve, Mo., where, with the command, it embarked for Milliken's Bend, La. Attached to the 1st. Brig., 1st. Div., 13th Army Corps, it was engaged in all its battles, participating in the battles of Fort Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, assault and siege of Vicksburg and the siege of Jackson. In August, moved to New Orleans with 13th Corps. In October engaged in the campaign up the Bayou Teche. Returned to New Orleans in November. Thence ordered to Brownsville, Texas, but, before landing, was ordered to Arkansas Pass. Disembarked on St. Joseph's Island, marched up St. Joseph's and Matagorda Islands to Saluria, participating in the capture of Fort Esperanza. Thence moved to Indianola and Port Lavaca. January 1, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and March 14 reached Bloomington, Ill., and received veteran furlough. April 10, 1864, was re-organized at Camp Butler, and proceeded to New Orleans, arriving 29th and camping at Carrollton. May 17, ordered to Brashear City, La. Soon after its arrival the regiment was scattered along the line of road as guard. Sept. 17, 1864, the non-veterans, were started home, via New York City with rebel prisoners in charge. March 2, 1865, ordered to join the 16th Army Corps. Near Boutte Station the train was thrown from the track, and 9 men killed and 70 wounded.

18th Regiment embarked on Lake Ponchartrain for Mobile expedition. Moved, via Fort Gaines and Navy Cove, landed on Fish River, Ala., and marched with Gen. Canby's army up east side of Mobile Bay. March 27 arrived in front of Spanish Fort, the main defense of Mobile, and until its capture, April 8, was actively engaged. After the surrender of Mobile, marched for Montgomery, Ala. Here it received the news of Lee and Johnson's surrender. Moved to Vicksburg, April 14, 1865. Mustered out of service Nov. 24, 1865.

The 33d. Regiment had 106 men from Knox County; 2 were killed, 13 died, 5 were wounded, and 4 were prisoners.

43D INFANTRY

The 43d. Infantry was organized at Camp Butler in September, 1861, by Col. Julius Raith. Oct. 8 the regiment was ordered to St. Louis. Feb. 6, moved to Fort Henry, arriving on the 10th; 18th moved to Fort Donelson. March 4, moved to Bell's Landing, and 14th arrived at Savannah, Tenn.; 22nd moved to Pittsburg Landing. The strength of the regiment was then 610 men. The regiment was in the two days' bloody battle of Shiloh, losing in killed and wounded 200. Was engaged during the siege of Corinth. In the spring of 1863, 200 men of the regiment were mounted, by order of Brig.-Gen. Mason Brayman, commanding post, and did excellent service capturing guerrillas. At Jenkin's Ferry, the army of Kirby Smith having come up, they were attacked with great fury. The 43d, and a section of Vaughn's Battery, being rear guard, were first attacked; loss in this battle, 700; but that of the enemy over 2,000. About 4,000 men engaged the enemy's force, which amounted to 20,000 men. May 3, arrived at Little Rock, Ark., where the regiment was mustered out Nov. 30, 1865.

The 43d Regiment had 83 men from Knox county; 1 was killed, 3 were wounded, and 14 died.

45TH INFANTRY

The Washburne Lead Mine Regiment was organized at Chicago, Dec. 25, 1861. Mustered into service as the 45th Infantry Jan. 15, 1862, moved to Cairo, Ill., Feb. 11; moved toward Fort Donelson, and during the succeeding days bore its part of the suffering and of the battle. The flag of the 45th was the first planted on the enemy's works. Loss 2 killed, 26 wounded. The 45th took a conspicuous and honorable part in the two days' battle of Shiloh, losing 26 killed, 199 wounded and missing—nearly half the regiment. On the 5th, marched to Bethel, 7th to Montezuma, and on 8th to Jackson, Tenn., the enemy flying at its approach. Mustered out July 12, 1865, at Louisville, Ky., and arrived at Chicago, July 15, 1865, for final payment and discharge.

The 45th Regiment contained 79 men from Knox county; 5 were killed, 6 wounded, 9 died, and 1 was taken prisoner.

55TH INFANTRY

Was organized at Camp Douglas, and mustered into service Oct. 31, 1861. Nov. 9 left Camp Douglas. Remained at Camp Benton until Jan. 12, 1862, when it was ordered to Paducah, Ky. On the morning of March 15 marched out with expedition from a point some 14 miles above Pittsburg Landing, for the surprise and overthrow of Corinth.

The opening of the battle, Sunday morning, found the regiment in position with an effective force of 873 men. Col. Stewart was wounded and 9 of the line officers, 3 of whom died of wounds; 102 enlisted men were killed and mortally wounded, and 161 wounded and taken prisoners. The regiment was with the army in advance on Corinth, and at Russell's house, May 17, lost in skirmish 8 men—2 killed and 6 wounded. Entered Corinth May 30; thence with Gen. Sherman, westward along Memphis and Charleston R. R. The regiment re-embarked with army and was present and under fire at battle of Arkansas Post Jan. 10 and 11, 1863, losing three men, wounded. Was at Vicksburg in 1863, participating in the fight. Participated in the siege of Jackson, Miss. On 30th Oct., 1863, marched from East Point, on Tennessee river, for Chattanooga. During night of 23rd, with rest of brigade, manned a fleet of pontoon boats in North Chickamauga creek, and in the midst of rain and intense darkness, with muffled oars, descended and crossed the Tennessee river and captured the enemy's picket line. Nov. 25 marched with Sherman to the relief of Knoxville, E. Tenn. June 27, 1864, participated in assault upon Kenesaw Mountain, Ga. July 22 the regiment was again engaged with an effective force of 239 men, and came out of the engagement with 180 men. Was in the siege of Atlanta; in battle of Jonesboro. In a short campaign of a little over two months the regiment lost half its number. Marched with army, via Richmond, to Washington; participated in the grand review at Washington. During its term of service the rigment marched 3,374 miles.

The 55th Regiment had 81 men from Knox county, of whom 3 were killed, 2 wounded, 7 died, and 1 was taken prisoner.

59TH INFANTRY

The 9th Infantry Missouri Vols. was organized at St. Louis, Sept. 18, 1861. The companies composing the regiment had been raised in Illinois, and mustered in at sundry times. Sept. 21, 1861, ordered to Jefferson City; 30th moved to Booneville; Dec. 15, 1861, moved to Georgetown, Mo.; 23rd, returned to Lamine Bridge. Jan. 1, P. Sidney Post was commissioned major. Feb. 12, 1862, by an order of the War Department, the 9th of Missouri Vols. was changed to the 59th Illinois Vol. Infantry. Feb. 22 moved to Cross Hollows. March 6 moved to Pea Ridge. On the 7th fought the enemy all day; Major P. Sidney Post was severely wounded. Lieut.-Col. Frederic was severely wounded, and Capt. Hale commanded the regiment during the fight. April 1, Col. Kelton having resigned, Maj. Post was commissioned colonel. After evacuation of Corinth, pursued the retreating enemy as far as Booneville; 18th crossed the Tennessee at Eastport and camped at Waterloo; Col. Post took command of brigade. Oct. 8 was heavily engaged at Chaplin Hills, losing 113 killed and wounded, out of 361 men going into action. Arrived at Nashville Nov. 7, near which place the regiment remained during the year.

The 59th Regiment had 104 men from Knox county; 3 were killed, 8 wounded and 14 died.

Colonel

72D INFANTRY

Was organized at Chicago, as the 1st Regiment of the Chicago Board of Trade. Its first bills were put out for one company, calling itself the "Hancock Guards," on July 23, 1862, and exactly one month afterward the entire regiment was complete and mustered into service for three years. The very day of their muster they were started for Cairo, where they arrived on the 24th. Their strength at that time was 37 officers and 930 men. On the 6th of September they were ordered to Paducah, Kan., March 1 the division of which the 72d Regiment formed a part started down the Yazoo Pass, but finding Fort Pemberton in their way, and not being able to take it then, went back April 23, then landed at Milliken's Bend, La., and from there marched with Grant's army to Vicksburg. May 16 they arrived at Champion Hills, just in time to turn the enemy's left, and by that movement decided the fate of the day. Oct. 30, 1864, they were ordered to report to Maj.-Gen. Howard and in pursuance of this order arrived at Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 13. They there found themselves too late to join Sherman in his "great march to the sea."

Schofield's army found it convenient to retire toward Nashville. On Nov. 29 they evacuated Columbia, and the 72nd was in a severe skirmish with the enemy at Spring Hill, on the road between Columbia and Franklin. On the succeeding day they arrived at Franklin, and hastily threw up some light earthworks. About 4 o'clock that afternoon Hood attacked them, and the battle raged from that hour until midnight with terrific fury. In that fight the 72d lost 9 officers out of 16 engaged, and 152 men, who were either killed or severely wounded. On Aug. 6 they were mustered out of service at Vicksburg, and then marched directly home to Chicago. During their term of service they received 450 recruits and when ordered home they transferred 270 of these to the 32d Illinois Veteran Vols., at Meriden, Miss. They brought home 22 officers and 310 men.

The 72d Regiment contained 80 men from Knox county; 6 were killed, 3 wounded, 7 died, and 5 were taken prisoners.

77TH INFANTRY

This regiment was mustered into the United States service Sept. 3, 1862, at Peoria; remained in camp there till Oct. 4. It then proceeded to Covington, Ky., and reported to Maj.-Gen. Gordon Granger. Nov. 20, 1862, the regiment embarked on steamer for Memphis; remained there until Dec. 20. The division was re-organized and reported to Maj.-Gen. Sherman. Embarked at Memphis on the 20th, and proceeded down the river with Sherman's army for the capture of Vicksburg. The 77th occupied the extreme right of the line, and participated in the attack on rebel works. After four days fighting the attack was abandoned, and the army proceeded to Milliken's Bend, La. Left there Jan. 5, 1863, and arrived at Arkansas Post on the 10th. Participated in the assault on the following morning; after a few hours hard fighting, carried the place, capturing all it contained. The loss of the regiment here was 6 killed and 39 wounded—some of the latter mortally. The regiment in this battle behaved admirably, and was complimented by the commanding general for its gallant conduct.

The regiment remained with Gen. Grant's army during the entire campaign around Vicksburg, and the siege of the latter place, until its surrender. It was engaged in the actions at Champion Hills, May 17; Black River Bridge, May 19; first charge on Vicksburg, the 22nd and 23rd; losing in these engagements 20 killed, 86 wounded and 26 missing. Vicksburg surrendered on the 4th of July, and the next day the regiment marched to Jackson with the army under Sherman. Arrived July 9, and was under the fire of the enemy at that place till the 16th, when Jackson was evacuated, and the 77th returned to Vicksburg, where it remained till Aug. 25, when it embarked for New Orleans, where it remained in camp until Oct. 3. Left New Orleans at that time for Western Louisiana; marched up Red River, driving the enemy until Sabine Cross Roads was reached on the 8th of April, 1864, where it met the enemy in force. The 77th belonged to the division under Gen. Ransom, which was ordered forward to support the advance cavalry. Before the army could be brought forward to their support the whole rebel army came down on them and overwhelmed the entire division. In this engagement the 77th suffered terribly: Lieut.-Col. Webb was killed instantly, besides 176 officers and men killed, wounded, and made prisoners, leaving only 125 men in the regiment for duty. On the next day Gen. A. J. Smith's corps came up, and at Pleasant Hill another battle was fought, ending in the complete defeat of the rebels. The regiment was with Gen. Canby's army during the entire siege and capture of Spanish Fort, Blakely, and Mobile, and was under fire the entire time. It remained in camp at Mobile until July 10, 1865, at which time it was mustered out of service.

In this regiment were 154 men from Knox county, in four companies. Of these 3 were killed, so far as we can learn, 17 died, 10 wounded, and 5 taken prisoners.

83D INFANTRY

Was organized at Monmouth, Ill., in August, 1862, by Col. A. C. Harding, and mustered in Aug. 21. Knox county furnished for the 83rd 416 men, represented in five different companies. They moved from camp to Cairo, Ill., Aug. 25th, arriving there on the 29th, and reported to Brig.-Gen. Tuttle, Sept. 3rd. Moved to Fort Henry, and on the 5th, leaving two companies at Fort Heiman and three at Fort Henry, was ordered to Fort Donelson, where the headquarters remained during the year, Col. Low, 5th Iowa Cavalry, commanding brigade. The companies remaining behind afterwards rejoined the regiment, and it remained at Fort Donelson until Sept. 20, 1863, when the right wing moved to Clarksville. The whole country, especially the banks of the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers, was infested with guerrillas; the regiment had daily skirmishes with the enemy; some of them were quite severe, as at Waverly, Tenn., and at Garretsburg, Ky., where the lamented Gen. Ransom then colonel of the 11th Illinois, had command.

On the 3rd of February, 1863, nine companies of the 83rd, with Company C., 2nd Illinois Light Artillery, successfully resisted the attack of Forrest and Wheeler, with 8,000 men. The battle lasted from half-past 1 o'clock till half-past 8, p. m., when the enemy was compelled to retire, with a loss of 800 killed and wounded. The loss of the regiment was 13 killed and 51 wounded. Col. Harding, was promoted to brigadier-general for gallant conduct on this occasion, and Lieut.-Col. A. A. Smith, to colonel.

While at Clarksville the regiment was engaged in several expeditions under Maj.-Gen. L. H. Rosseau, in pursuit of Forrest and Wheeler, who were attempting the destruction of Ben. Sherman's communications.

During the year 1864, the regiment had some 200 miles of communication to guard, and much heavy postal duty. During the winter of 1864-5, the 83rd was on postal duty at Nashville, Tenn.

Of the men furnished by Knox county, there were 30 died from various diseases, 6 killed and 3 wounded. On the 26th of June, 1865, the 83rd was mustered out at Nashville, and moved for Chicago, Brevet-Brig.-Gen. Arthur A. Smith commanding, where it received pay and final discharge.

86TH INFANTRY

Was organized at Peoria, Ill., in 1862. Moved for Louisville. Marched from camp Oct. 1, and on the 8th was engaged in the battle of Perryville; engaged in the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 19, 20 and 21. Moved into Lookout Valley Oct. 29. In the night of Nov. 23, crossed the river on a pontoon and camped at the foot of Missionary Ridge. Pursued the enemy on the 26th to Ringgold, and was then ordered to Knoxville, Tenn. Marched as far as Little Tennessee River, and returned to Chattanooga Dec. 18, after a most severe march. Was engaged at Buzzard's Roost, May 9, 10 and 11; Resaca, May 14, 15; Rome, 17th,—6 killed, 11 wounded; Dallas from May 27 to June 5; Kenesaw Mountain, from June 11 to 27,—losing 110 killed and wounded. It again engaged the enemy on the banks of the Chattahoochie on the 18th of July; at Peach Tree Creek on the 19th, and near Atlanta, 20th and 22nd. Engaged in the siege of Atlanta. Commenced the "march to the sea" Nov. 16. Arrived at Savannah, Dec. 21. After the surrender of Johnson, marched, via Richmond, to Washington City, at which place was mustered out of service, June 6, 1865. Died, killed, and wounded, 346. Marched 3,500 miles; by rail 2,000.

The 86th Regiment contained 93 men from Knox county; 5 were killed, 3 wounded, 8 died, and 3 were taken prisoners.

89TH INFANTRY

The "Railroad Regiment" was organized by the railroad companies of Illinois at Chicago in August, 1862; ordered to Louisville, Ky., Sept. 4. The regiment on leaving Louisville started in pursuit of the rebel forces under Gen. Bragg, and after a fruitless and wearisome march of a month reached Bowling Green. Chickamauga seemed to fix the seal of its devotion. There fell Lieut.-Col. Duncan J. Hall, Capts. Rice, Spink and Whiting, and Lieut. Ellis, besides the scores of brave men who fought with noble heroism, and who dared to "do and die" in defense of the "old flag." At Mission Ridge the regiment again encountered the foe. It then marched to the relief of Burnside, besieged at Knoxville. This accomplished, it moved on with the brigade in the marches and counter-marches through East Tennessee.

Early in April, 1864, it marched with the command to South Tennessee, preparatory to Gen. Sherman's glorious campaign through West Georgia, for the occupation of Atlanta. With the brigade it participated in the splendid victories of Rocky Face, Resaca, Pickett's Mills, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek and the flank movement of Atlanta, and pursued the routed enemy in his retreat to Jonesboro and Lovejoy's Station. The regiment passed winter quarters at Huntsville, Ala., in January, 1865, and on the 1st of February traveled by rail to Nashville. About the middle of March the command embarked on the cars for East Tennessee to re-establish communications through to Virginia and prepare to repel rebel invasion. On the surrender of Lee's army further movements in that section were abandoned. On June 10, 1865, the 89th was mustered out of the United States service.

The 89th Regiment had 171 men from Knox county; 17 were killed, 6 wounded, 28 discharged and 15 were taken prisoners.

102D INFANTRY

The 102d Inf. Ill. Vols. was organized at Knoxville, Ill., in August, 1862, by Col. Wm. McMurtry, and mustered in Sept. 1 and 2. Knox county was represented in this regiment by 414 men, in 9 different companies.

On the 22nd of September the regiment moved to Peoria, Ill., and Oct. 1, to Louisville, Ky., and was assigned to Ward's brigade, Dumont's division, and immediately moved southward, marching via Shelbyville, Frankfort, Bowling Green, and Scottsville to Gallatin, Tenn., arriving Nov. 26.

The regiment went into winter quarters at Gallatin. On June 1, 1863, moved to Lavergne, and from thence marched to Stewart's Creek, where the regiment was divided and stationed to guard bridges. On the 9th of November, 1863, moved to Lebanon, and returned on the 11th. Surgeon Stanley was severely wounded by guerrillas. On Feb. 25, broke winter quarters at Lavergne, and marched via Tullahoma, Decherd, Stevenson, Ala., and camped in Wauhatchie Valley, Tenn. The regiment was assigned to the 20th Army Corps, Gen. Ward's brigade. While at Wauhatchie five companies of the regiment, which had been mounted, gave up their horses, but retained their Spencer rifles during the Atlanta campaign. May 2 commenced the campaign. May 14 was engaged at Resaca, leaving 3 killed and 19 wounded. On the 15th the brigade captured a battery from the enemy at Camp Creek. The 102nd lost 18 killed, 6 mortally wounded, 70 wounded. May 25 encountered the enemy at Burnt Hickory, and was engaged four days, leaving 4 killed and 14 wounded. June 1 was engaged at Big Shanty. June 15 and 16 engaged, losing 13 wounded, including Col. Smith and Capt. McManus. Engaged July 20 at Peach Tree Creek, losing 2 killed and 11 wounded. Sept. 16 moved to Atlanta. Nov. 15, 1864, commenced the Savannah march, arriving on the 22nd at Milledgeville; crossed the Ogeechee on the 29th, and Dec. 11 established lines of battle at Savannah, and on the 21st entered that city. Jan. 5, 1865, moved to Hardesville, and on the 30th to Robertsville, near Sister's Ferry. Feb. 2 marched westward to Blackville and Williston, thence northward to Columbia, arriving Feb. 19th. March 11 reached Fayetteville. March 16 was engaged at Averysboro, losing 2 killed and 19 wounded, among the latter were Captains. Merritt and Matteson, and Lieut. Trego. March 22 camped at Goldsboro. April 10 marched toward Raleigh, where the army remained until Johnson's surrender. On the 30th marched for Washington, arriving May 19.

Of the number from Knox county in the 102nd, 37 died from disease and wounds received during the war, 12 killed, 14 wounded, and 3 prisoners. On May 24 the regiment passed review with our army and June 6, 1865, was mustered out of service and started home, arriving in Chicago, Ill., on the 9th. June 14 received payment and final discharge.

The 4th Regiment, I. N. G.

The 4th Regiment Illinois National Guards was first organized at Peoria, February 2, 1876. Capt. John Huff, commanding the National Blues, was elected Colonel; Capt. W. Whiting, commanding the Altona Rifle Company, was elected Lieut.-Colonel, and Capt. A. T. Johnson elected Major. The Adjutant-General notified Lieut.-Colonel Whiting that he was in full command of the regiment, owing to the refusal of the Legislature to confirm Col. Huff. During the same winter the State Legislature passed a very imperfect code, to organize and govern the militia of the state. The new code went in force July 1, 1877. As commanding officer of the regiment, Col. Whiting ordered an election at Galva, on the 29th day of June, for the purpose of electing a Colonel to command until February 2, 1878, as that was the time agreed upon to hold the first election. There was some question about the time designated for the election, some commands claiming February 2, others February 12, and others February 22. On February 1, Gen. Jasper N. Reese, commandng this brigade, whose duty it was under the new code to order elections, issued special order No. 3, ordering an election to be held at Altona, February 12. The order was promulgated by Col. Whiting. On the 7th he received a telegram from Gen. Reese, revoking order No. 3, without any explanation. On the 12th there was a meeting of the field and line officers at Oneida. Col. Whiting, with the expectation of receiving a reprimand for something he had or had not done, was called into an adjoining room, when he was notified why order No. 3 was revoked, and handed a petition, signed by the field and line officers, with the information that they would not submit to an election, and insisted that he was duly elected for five years under the new code. Col. Whiting refused to comply with the request, and issued an order calling the field and line officers to meet at Kewanee for consultation. At said meeting it was moved and carried unanimously that there should be an election ordered for the purpose of electing a Lieut.-Colonel and Major, but no election for Colonel. Col. Whiting requested Gen. Reese to issue an order to elect a Colonel, Lieut.-Colonel and Major, or accept his resignation. March 22 he received Gen. Reese's order No. 7, ordering an election at Galva, April 4, at which time Gen. Reese was present. Col. Whiting received the entire vote for Colonel, Major Wm. Jackson was elected Lieut.-Colonel, and Capt. O. L. Higgins, Major. The fore part of July 1877, it was thought best to re-district the State under the new law. Peoria, with three companies, was detached from the 4th, and with several companies in that district formed the 7th Regiment. Two companies from Moline were detached from the 8th and assigned to the 4th, and a company was formed at Princeton and assigned to the 4th. Another company formed at Moline and one at Rock Island when the companies were detached from the 4th, and the four companies at Rock Island and Moline were formed into the 4th Battery. Owing to the re-organization it became necessary for the members of the 4th Regiment to re-enlist; but it being in the busy season, it was not deemed necessary to muster the men in until cooler weather. On the 23d of July, when the great "strike" assumed such formidable proportions that it hung like a pall over the commerce and manufactories of the country, threatening not only to block the wheels of the nation's industries, but the life of the nation itself, the companies were all notified to hold themselves in readiness for marching orders at any moment. History furnishes few instances where men responded with such alacrity. Twenty minutes after Capt. C. A. Smith, commanding Company C at Altona, had received his orders, he had twenty men in uniform at the armory; and where a few moments before all was quiet, and no thought of trouble, now could be seen and heard the tramp of the military and the commands of officers. In four hours all the companies of the 4th Regiment reported their men ready for duty. On Friday, July 27, Col. Whiting received orders from Gen. E. N. Bates, then in command of the 2d Brigade, to which the 4th Regiment belonged, to take any train and proceed to Alton Junction as fast as possible. Col. Whiting received the order at 5 p. m. and promulgated it, and at 12 p. m. the same night Cos. A, C, and H were at Galva. Soon after midnight Co. G, of Toulon, came to Galva in wagons; a train from the east soon brought Co. F, from Kewanee. At 8 a. m. they took the cars for Peoria, by the P. & R. I. R. R. At Wyoming county I joined them, and they all continued their journey toward East St. Louis, arriving there early on Sunday morning. They went immediately on duty, and continued so until Tuesday morning, when they were ordered to proceed to Galesburg. This being the point of intersection of four of the branch lines of the C., B. & Q., and the residence of a large number of the striking employes of the company, it was feared serious trouble might ensue; and the fears were founded upon the fact that the strikers congregated about the depots, held consultations, and, by persuasion or intimidation, prevented the running of nearly all the trains over the road. But by the prompt though considerate action of the authorities, and the good sense of the more intelligent strikers, who cautioned moderation and no violence to property or person, the trouble ended peaceably on the first day of August, after six days' duration, without the destruction of life or property or the shedding of blood. The regiment arrived at Galesburg soon after dark, hungry, dirty and tired, and remained there until Wednesday evening, when all the companies except C and F were sent home; they remained until Saturday afternoon. In justice to the field, staff and line officers, and especially to the private soldiers, upon whom the brunt of the labor rested, it is but proper to say that their ready and willing response to the order, calling them from their work in the shops, business-places, fields and homes, will ever be remembered as a proud record. There was no duty required of them that they were not ready and willing to perform at any moment.

The organization of the militia is for the purpose of assisting the civil authorities to enforce law and obedience, when called upon. The citizens of the great State of Illinois need have little fear that that duty will be well performed, when necessity requires it, by the men who have shown such willingness to discharge it in the past.

Below are the names of the members of this organization who reside in this county. The headquarters of the Regiment are at Altona.

BAND

The 4th Regiment Band was organized in the fall of 1865, and has kept up a continuous organization ever since. Previous to the summer of 1877 it was known as the Oneida Cornet Band. At that time it became the regimental band for the 4th Regiment, I. N. G. The band is the oldest organization of the kind in the county. The following are its members: C. S. Matteson, leader, 1st E flat cornet; M. J. Ladd, 2d E flat cornet; A. W. Ladd, 1st B flat cornet; Arthur Somner, 2d B flat cornet; Harry Swafford, solo alto; F. C. Bristol, 1st alto; E. Nelson, 2d alto; Fremont Cawkins, 1st tenor; Leroy Cawkins, 2d tenor; W. Jelliff, barytone; John Howland, 1st base; W. W. Ladd, basso; Willis Swafford, snare drum; Henry Howland, bass drum.

BOUNTIES AND COUNTY AID TO SOLDIERS AND THEIR FAMILIES DURING THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

The annals of the human race furnish no instances of a more exalted patriotism than was shown by both North and South during the struggle between the spring of 1861 and 1865. This struggle came as the climax to a heated contest, nation wide, in and out of Congress. There were two quite distinct civilizations, one in the South based on Slavery and one in the North based on Freedom. The election of Abraham Lincoln as president of the United States in 1860 by the party of freedom was understood throughout the South as a direct assault upon their home life and one which, if not promptly resisted, would successfully bear down all opposition. It was the storming and carrying their outposts and first line of defenses. Ordinances of secession were promptly passed by eleven states, a well equipped and carefully drilled army called into the field, and a successful charge made upon the forts and other property of the government situated in the South. This action was responded to by the government, backed by the whole North, and four years' conflict ensued which for patriotism, magnitude, devotion to principle, was never seen before. It is doubtful if money ever played so important a part in war before. There was but little money in the country at the start, but millions of it was created.

It is hoped that some view of what was done at home to maintain the man in the field may be gained from the action of the board of supervisors. This account, it must be remembered, represents only the money voted by the county. In addition to this the state, cities, villages and townships voted liberal taxes to carry on this war and individuals gave to the limit of their means. It is not the intention to do more in this article than to consider the action of the board and thereby give some idea of the taxation to which the people submitted for the sake of principle.

May Meeting, 1861.—Report of committee on the question of aid to the families of soldiers.

The committee to whom was referred the proposition to aid the families of volunteers report: The committee are of the opinion that the county should make provision to secure from want the families of volunteers during their absence on service. The committee recommend the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the supervisor and assistant supervisor of each town be authorized to render such assistance as in his judgment may be needful to the families of volunteers in actual service, and that for such advances and such contracts as may be so made, the county will be responsible.

On motion said resolution was adopted.

September Meeting, 1861.—Motion by Supervisor Copley in regard to soldiers.

Resolved, That the supervisors of the several towns in Knox county furnish the names of all the volunteers in his town, together with the number of those having families, and the number of individuals in each, and also report the name of the company in which each volunteered, and that such report be made at the January meeting of this board.

May Meeting, 1862.—Report of committee in aid of families of soldiers.

Supervisor Hamrich, from committee on claims in aid of the families of volunteers, reported, recommending the allowance of certain claims therewith presented, the payment of a percentage named on others, and the rejection of others, as will appear more fully below, and also the following recommendation, to-wit:

We, your committee, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of the wives and families of volunteers, report to the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, that we have examined the bills presented by the several supervisors, and have recommended the passing of orders for the foregoing amounts, and we further recommend that in future the appropriations for the said purpose be suspended.

C. H. JACKSON,
J. G. HAMRICH,
CALEB FINCH,
Committee,

Which report was on motion accepted and the committee discharged.

Resolution of Supervisor Jackson in regard to aid of soldiers' families.

Resolved, That no assistance be hereafter rendered by the board of supervisors to the wives and families of volunteers after the said volunteers shall have been in the service of this state, or the United States, for the period of three months, but that in lieu of such assistance the board recommend that each township take such action and make such provision for the assistance of said families residing in such townships respectively as to them shall seem meet.

On which the yeas and nays were demanded, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Jackson, Robertson, Godfrey, Hamrick, Lotts and Wood—6. Nays—Messrs. Meek, McKinnie, Finch, Newell, Arms, LeBarron, Miles, McCornack, Buffum, Wilson, Copley and Gibbs, 12. Resolution lost.

Resolution of Supervisor Jackson in regard to assisting the poor, which was adopted.

Resolved, That this board particularly request and instruct the supervisors of the respective townships to use the utmost diligence to prevent frauds, unnecessary expenditures, or improvident bills, such as sugar, tea, coffee, expensive clothing, high rents or board bills, etc., etc., and to give relief only in cases of absolute necessity, and to certify to all bills presented to this board for the relief of the families of volunteers, and in future no bills be allowed for the aforesaid purpose, except those so certified.

Resolutions of citizens of Knox county in regard to bounties to volunteers.

July 31st, 1862. Special meeting of board of supervisors.

The clerk then read petitions from the city councils of Knoxville and Galesburg for the appropriation by this board of a sum of money for bounty purposes, to be paid to volunteers from this county, when

On motion of Supervisor Gale a committee of three were appointed to draft and recommend some plan of action for the payment of bounty to volunteers in accordance with the recommendation of said petitions. The chair appointed Messrs. Gale, Arms and LeBarron said committee.

Resolved, By the people of Knox county, in mass meeting assembled:

That to encourage enlistments into the volunteer service, this Board of Supervisors of Knox County, now in session at the court house, are hereby petitioned and recommended to appropriate the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars to be expended as bounty money to enlisted men from Knox county under the recent call of the President, to be paid upon such volunteers being regularly mustered into the service.

At a special meeting of the common council of the city of Knoxville, Knox county, state of Illinois, on Tuesday evening, July 29th, 1862, on motion of Alderman A. W. Martin, the following paper was unanimously adopted:

In view of the recent call of the President for troops, and the evident necessity of getting a large number of men in the field at an early day, and considering the existence of the United States Government in peril, and that in the absence of stable government there can be neither personal security, nor security in the possession and enjoyment of property, and believing that the people are fully alive to the necessities pressing on their government and that they are willing to contribute any amount of means necessary to subdue the existing rebellion,

The mayor and common council of the city of Knoxville do respectfully request the Board of Supervisors of Knox County to appropriate a sum of money, not less than twenty-five thousand dollars, to be expended in bounties to volunteers, and in the support of their families, in such manner as the board may deem best.

JOHN G. SANBORN, City Clerk.

Office of the City Council, Galesburg, Ill., July 19th, 1862.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Ill.

Gentlemen: By direction of the board of aldermen of the city of Galesburg, I have the honor of laying before you the following preamble and resolution, passed unanimously by that body this day.

Respectfully,

W. A. WOOD, City Clerk.

Whereas, At a meeting of the citizens of Galesburg, convened at Dunn's Hall, on the evening of the 17th inst., to take into consideration the call of the Government for more troops to take the field immediately, at which meeting the following resolution was unanimously adopted, to-wit:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this meeting the city council should appropriate a liberal bounty to each resident of the city who will volunteer for three years of the war; and the council are requested to take the matter under consideration as soon as practicable, and whereas the condition of the country calls for immediate action to make the war effective, therefore,

Resolved, By the Board of Aldermen of the City of Galesburg: That they recommend to the Board of Supervisors of Knox County to meet and appropriate the sum of twenty thousand dollars for war purposes, and that out of that sum they offer as a bounty to each able-bodied man volunteering for three years, or for the war, the sum of fifty dollars, to be paid to them when mustered into the service.

(SEAL) W. A. WOOD, City Clerk.

Supervisor Gale, from the committee appointed to report a plan of action for the board in accordance with the foregoing petitions and recommendations, reported the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the board of supervisors will pay to each of the first five hundred soldiers enlisting for the war, enlisted in Knox county, for Knox county companies, or to fill up old regiments, or who may have enlisted in any company organizing or forming in this county, under the President's call for 300,000 men, during the month of August next, a bounty of forty dollars, and an additional bounty to as many of them as shall have enlisted before the 15th of said month, of twenty dollars.

2nd. That a committee of three be appointed by the board, whose duty it shall be to audit all claims for such bounty, and on presentation of suitable proof, that such claimant has fulfilled the conditions, and been duly enlisted and received, to issue suitable certificates, which shall entitle the bona fide holder thereof to demand and receive at any future meeting of this board, within one year from its date, a county order, and it shall be the duty of said committee to file with the clerk of the county a statement of all certificates issued.

Which report, on motion of Supervisor Finch, was accepted and the committee discharged, and the adoption of the first resolution moved.

Supervisor Jackson moved to amend by inserting after the words "forming in this county" the words "for a Knox county regiment," which amendment was lost, and the question being on the adoption of the first resolution, the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. McKinnie, Gale, Arms, LeBaron, Hamrick, Miles, McCornack, Copley and Gibbs—9. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Finch, Jackson, Robertson, Godfrey, Lotts, Knable, Wood, Wilson and Chairman—10. Rejected.

Supervisor LeBaron then offered the following as a substitute for the report of the committee, which was accepted:

Whereas, The citizens of Knox county, in mass meeting assembled, have passed a resolution requesting this board of supervisors to appropriate the sum of $25,000 to be expended in additional bounties to volunteers, and thus secure at the earliest day possible, the full quota of Knox county of the 300,000 men called for by the President, to aid in suppressing the rebellion, and conquering a peace and reunion of the states. And whereas similar petitions have been received from the cities of Galesburg and Knoxville from their respective city councils, and such recommendations meeting with our hearty approval, therefore,

Resolved, 1st, That for the purpose of aiding in the enlistment of volunteers for the United States service to be raised in the county of Knox, there be appropriated a sum not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars in this county, in pursuance of an act entitled, "An act to encourage the formation of and equipment of volunteer companies." Approved May 2nd, 1861.

2nd. That out of the sum so appropriated there shall be paid to each volunteer of the first five hundred who shall enlist in such service on or before the 15th day of August, A. D. 1862, the sum of fifty dollars. The said sum shall be payable to said volunteers when and as soon as they are legally mustered into the service of the United States. The right of the party entitled to the above named bounty shall be decided by the committee having charge of the aforesaid appropriation, upon presentation to them of his certificate of enlistment, and such other vouchers as may be required, provided that volunteers in any companies now forming, or partly organized, shall be entitled to the same bounty; and that the bounty hereby authorized shall only be paid to such volunteers as have not received an equal or greater amount from any other source than the United States as a bounty. And whenever any volunteer shall have received any bounty from any other source than the United States, the amount so received, if less than the amount hereby authorized, shall be considered as a part of the bounty hereby authorized, such fact to be established under such regulations as the committee may provide.

3rd. That a War Fund committee of the Board of Supervisors of Knox County be appointed to disburse said appropriation, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by said board. That the committee be authorized and required to make the necessary arrangements with the volunteers enlisted under this act, for the purpose of securing such portion of the pay of such volunteers as they are willing to appropriate towards the support of their families.

4th. That all orders on the treasurer, under the authority of these resolutions, shall be receivable for payment of the tax levied for this appropriation.

5th. That the committee hereby appointed be required to make the necessary arrangements for the redemption at par of such county orders as may be issued under these resolutions, and be authorized in the name of the county to borrow the necessary sum of money, at a rate of interest not exceeding ten per cent.

6th. That said committee be authorized to pay such bounty to such person or persons only as have been or shall be enlisted at a recruiting office in this county in answer to a call of the President of the United States for 300,000 troops, unless the committee having in charge this fund shall be able to make an arrangement with the governor of this state, to have duly credited to this county on said call such men as shall enlist to fill up companies previously organized in this county.

7th. That this board at its September meeting will levy a tax under the act of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, entitled, "An act to encourage the formation and equipment of volunteer companies." Approved May 2nd, 1861, sufficient to meet all expenditures under the foregoing resolutions.

Supervisor Godfrey moved to amend the first resolution by inserting $16,000 in place of $25,000. Lost.

Supervisor Godfrey moved to amend second resolution by inserting $40 for bounty in place of $50. Lost.

Supervisor Copley moved to amend second resolution by inserting $60 for bounty in lieu of $50, on which the yeas and nays were called, resulting Yeas—Messrs. Arms, LeBaron, Hamrick, Miles, McCornack, Copley and Gibbs—7.

Nays—Messrs. Meek, McKinnie, Gale, Finch, Jackson, Godfrey, Lotts, Knable, Woods and Wilson—10. Amendment rejected.

Supervisor Jackson moved to amend by adding the following to the second resolution:

And that no further inducements or bounty shall be offered by this board or aid furnished to the families of those who shall volunteer under the present requisition of the President, and receive the aforesaid bounty.

On which amendment the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, McKinnie, Finch, Jackson, Robertson, Godfrey and Lotts—7.

Nays—Messrs. Gale, Arms, LeBaron, Hamrick, Miles, McCornack, Knable, Wood, Wilson, Copley and Gibbs—11. Lost.

When the question recurring upon the adoption of the substitute as introduced it was unanimously adopted.

Supervisor LeBaron introduced the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, to-wit:

Resolved, That the county clerk is hereby authorized to procure a strongly bound book and to inscribe therein the name of each volunteer into the United States Army, from this county, for service during the present rebellion; the township in which he resided, the company and regiment in which he was mustered into service, and his fate, whether discharged by expiration of service, on account of sickness or wounds, and if killed, when and where. Which shall remain in the office of the county clerk as a permanent record.

2nd. That the supervisor of each township is hereby authorized to collect, through the school directors of his town, or otherwise, the information contemplated in the first resolution, and report the same to the county clerk prior to the September meeting of the Board for 1862.

On motion of Supervisor Copley, the chairman and Messrs. LeBaron and Arms were appointed War Fund committee under resolution number three.

Supervisor Miles offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Board of Supervisors of Knox county would recommend that the various companies forming in Knox county, be organized in one regiment if practicable.

SEPTEMBER MEETING, 1862

Resolved, That the board extend the appropriation, made at its last meeting for volunteers for the service of the State of Illinois or for the United States, to-wit: The sum of fifty dollars for each volunteer to all who may volunteer up to and including the 15th inst., or have already volunteered under the last two calls of the president of the United States, and who have not, or do not receive the same amount of bounty from other sources aside from the bounty paid by the state or the United States; and that in case such volunteers shall receive any less amount than the said fifty dollars that such deficiency be made up by Knox county upon the production of the proper vouchers by the volunteer or his attorney, of the amount he may have received from the said other sources.

REPORT OF WAR COMMITTEE, SEPTEMBER MEETING, 1862.

Supervisor LeBaron from War Fund committee made the following report, which was on motion accepted, and ordered to be spread upon the record.

The War Fund committee appointed at the special meeting held July 31st, 1862, report as follows:

In Capt. Gilson Co.	85
In Capt. Jackson Co.	21
In Capt. Reynolds Co.	83
In Capt. Donleys Co.	16
In Capt. King Co.	72
In Capt. Shinn Co.	36
In Capt. Hamrick Co.	4
In Capt. Burkhalter Co.	73
In Capt. Hardin Co.	46
In Capt. Burdett Co.	29
In Capt. Willsay Co.	27
Total	492

Being all who enlisted up to the night of the sixth of August. Your committee find the total number of enlistments in the county under the last calls to be about eleven hundred men. We have as yet paid no bounty, having been unable to get the muster rolls of the various companies until the present date.

The special business of the morning being the consideration of the resolution of Supervisor Jackson extending the bounty to volunteers, offered yesterday, said resolution was so modified by the mover as to restrict the bounty offered "To those who shall enlist in Knox county companies, or who were or are residents of Knox county, and who volunteer to fill up old regiments, specially excluding the three months men."

Supervisor Newell offered the following substitute for the whole resolution of Supervisor Jackson, to-wit:

Resolved, That this board extend the appropriation made at its last meeting, for volunteers for the service of the State of Illinois, or for the United States, to-wit, the sum of fifty dollars for each volunteer who is a resident of Knox county, who has volunteered under the late two calls of the President of the United States previous to the 8th inst., provided such volunteer has not received the said amount from any other source aside from the bounty of the United States.

Supervisor Jackson moved to amend by inserting after the words "resident of Knox county" the words "or who have volunteered in a Knox county company" as defined in the resolution adopted at the last meeting of this board. Amendment lost.

Supervisor Gale moved to amend by striking out all the resolution after and including the word "provided" and inserting "And that the bounty hereby authorized shall only be paid to such volunteers as have not received an equal or greater amount from any other source than the United States as a bounty, and whenever any volunteer shall have received any bounty from any other source than the United States, the amount so received, if less than the amount hereby authorized, shall be considered as a part of the bounty hereby authorized, such fact to be established under such regulations as the committee may provide." Which amendment was concurred in.

Supervisor Gale further moved to amend by inserting after the "8th inst." the words "or who have volunteered into old regiments since the first of said calls was made." Which was agreed to.

Supervisor Buffum moved to substitute 15th inst. in place of 8th inst. in the resolution, which was agreed to by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Finch, Jackson, LeBaron, Potter, Lotts, Miles, Buffum, Knable, Wood, Wilson, Copley and Gibbs—13. Nays—Messrs. Gale, Robertson, Newell, Godfrey and McCornack—5.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution as amended, the same was unanimously adopted, and as amended reads as follows:

Resolved, That this board extend the appropriation made at its last meeting for volunteers for the service of the State of Illinois or for the United States, to-wit: The sum of fifty dollars for each volunteer who is a resident of Knox county, who has volunteered under the late two calls of the President of the United States previous to the 15th inst., or who has volunteered into old regiments since the first of said calls was made, and that the bounty hereby authorized shall only be paid to such volunteers as have not received an equal or greater amount from any other source than the United States as a bounty. And whenever any volunteer shall have received any bounty from any other source than the United States, the amount so received shall be considered as a part of the bounty hereby authorized, such fact to be established under such regulations as the committee may provide.

On motion of Supervisor Gale, it was Ordered, That the War Fund committee appointed at the special meeting of this board be continued with authority to act fully under the foregoing resolution, and that said committee be requested to report at its earliest convenience the best plan to be pursued in raising the money to pay the bounties appropriated thereby.

Resolution by War committee to borrow money, by Supervisor Copley.

Resolved, That the War Fund committee be authorized to borrow such sums of money on the credit of the county for the terms of two and three years, at a rate of interest not exceeding ten per cent per annum as shall be sufficient to pay all the bounties to volunteers that are entitled to bounties by the act of this board of supervisors at their annual meeting held September term, A. D. 1862, and we hereby pledge the faith of the county for the redemption of all obligation entered into by said committee in pursuance of this resolution.

January Meeting, 1863.—Supervisor Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the supervisors of the respective towns be authorized in extreme cases to extend aid to the families of soldiers who have received the $50 bounty.

The following report of the War Fund committee was presented to the board:

To the Board of Supervisors of Knox County:

The undersigned War Fund committee, appointed by your honorable body, would respectfully report: That by the authority granted us at the July special meeting of the board, we borrowed on the credit of the county, for the purpose of paying bounty to the first 500 volunteers in this county, under the president's first call for 300,000 men, the sum of $24,900

And under the extended authority given at the September meeting, for the purpose of paying bounty to additional volunteers required by the second call of the president for 300,000 men, we borrowed the further sum of 33,710

Making a total sum of $58,610

Bal. Ford. $58,610

We have paid bounties to volunteers as follows, through the several bankers with whom we deposited, to-wit:

Through C. Runkle & Co	$21,600
Through A. D. Reed	10,300
Through J. F. Dunn & Co	23,125
By certificate of indebtedness issued in payment of bounties	700
		$55,725
There yet remains unexpended of the fund, on deposit at Reed's Bank	400

At Runkle's Bank	110
At Dunn's Bank	2,375
		2,885

Total amount paid out and on deposit.....$58,610

The amount on deposit is subject to the payment of seven outstanding checks, amounting in the aggregate to.....$ 400

Leaving a balance, after paying outstanding checks of..... 2,485

Your committee would further report, that an examination of the bounty rolls show that without doubt there is bounty yet due and unpaid to 36 volunteers, the payment of which will require $1,800 and that eight others claim the bounty, but who have not made satisfactory proof that they are entitled thereto; if proof is made they will require $400. Leaving still a balance in the hands of the committee with which to pay bounty to parties who may prove themselves entitled thereto, under the action of the board, the sum of $285.

Respectfully submitted,

C. ARMS,
WM. B. LEBARON,
Committee.

May Meeting, 1863.—Supervisor Holyoke moved that a committee of three be appointed to examine and report on all claims presented for support rendered to families of volunteers. Adopted.

The committee on relief to the families of volunteers reported claims aggregating $1,816.96, and recommended the payment of same which was adopted.

C. ARMS,

The payment of bills for the maintenance of soldiers' families seems to have become burdensome in the estimation of certain members of the board as shown by the following resolution introduced by Supervisor Nelson at the same meeting.

Resolved, By the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, that from and after the September meeting of said board, 1863, each town of said county provide for the maintenance of the families whose husbands or sons are engaged in the United States military service; and from then that the supervision of such families be under the direction of the supervisor of such town, where such family or families reside; and further that such claims shall be presented for adjustment before the board of town auditors, at their respective sittings.

Mr. Matthews moved to lay the resolution on the table. Carried. Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Lourie, Matthews, Finch, Newell, Newman, Arms, Holyoke, Potter, Lacey, Miles, Balthis, Phelps, Copley and Gibbs—15. Nays—Messrs. Nelson, Deatherage, Stuckey, Wood and Shaffer—5.

The bounties for the enlistment of soldiers seemed quite troublesome at times and led men into positions that they would think it unjust to be charged with in private matters. The following action of the board at the same meeting shows how men will sometimes relieve themselves of responsibilities which they ought manfully to assume.

Mr. Potter offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, Cary Combs, Wm. H. H. Harshbarger, Milo Harlin, Francis Phillippi are now in the army of the United States faithfully discharging their duties in sustaining our government, and, Whereas, said soldiers enlisted under the solemn promise from the officers by whom they were enlisted, that they should receive the same bounty as men who were residents of Knox county, and that said promises were made in good faith and so accepted by said volunteers, and whereas said volunteers are residents of Fulton county, in the State of Illinois, and said county having refused to pay any bounty to her soldiers, except to such soldiers as were heads of families, and that such volunteers are unmarried, and therefore have received no bounty from any source, therefore

Resolved, That said volunteers be paid the sum of fifty dollars each from the bounty fund of Knox county, and that the proper committee are hereby authorized to pay the same upon proper evidence being presented.

Mr. Nelson moved that said resolution be laid under the table. Lost. Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Lourie, Nelson, Deatherage, Lacey and Shaffer—6. Nays—Messrs. Matthews, Finch, Newell, Newman, Arms, Holyoke, Potter, Miles, Balthis, Stuckey, Phelps, Copley and Gibbs—13.

Mr. Deatherage then moved that said resolution be laid upon the table. Lost. Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Lourie, Nelson, Deatherage, Newman, Arms, Lacey and Shaffer—8. Nays—Messrs. Matthews, Finch, Newell, Holyoke, Potter, Miles, Balthis, Stuckey, Phelps, Wood, Copley and Gibbs—12.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution it was negatived. Yeas—Mr. Potter. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Lourie, Matthews, Finch, Nelson, Deatherage, Newell, Newman, Arms, Holyoke, Lacey, Miles, Balthis, Stuckey, Phelps, Wood, Shaffer, Copley and Gibbs—19.

The committee on aid to soldiers' families reported to the January, 1864, meeting of the board bills created in aid of soldiers' families aggregating over $3,300 which were allowed and paid.

May Meeting, 1864.—Supervisor Holyoke moved that a committee of three be appointed to audit claims for the support of wives and families of volunteers, which was adopted. Supervisor Potter offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all disabled soldiers, from any cause, be assisted in the same manner and under the same regulations as aid is rendered to the families of volunteers for the next nine months.

To which resolution Mr. Stewart offered the following amendment:

Resolved, That we understand the resolution passed at the May meeting, 1861, embrace the case of families of deceased and discharged soldiers, if their families are actually in need of assistance.

After some discussion Mr. Potter withdrew his resolution.

Supervisor Stewart offered the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the County of Knox will pay a bounty of twenty-five dollars to each volunteer accepted in the one hundred days' service under the call of the governor of this state.

Supervisor Stewart moved that a committee of three be appointed to prepare a resolution in regard to payment of bounty to volunteers and all matters in relation thereto, on which motion the yeas and nays were demanded, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Stewart, Arms, Holyoke, Potter, Pickrell, Stuckey and Gibbs—7. Nays—Messrs, Meek, Lowrie, Nelson, Heflin, Newell, Hagey, LeBaron, McCornack, Nicholson, Shaffer and Lyons.

Supervisor Potter offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Knox county will pay a bounty of twenty-five dollars to each accepted recruit in the one hundred days' call by the governor of the state, for the first three hundred who shall enlist prior to the 22nd day of this month, provided such recruit shall be actually mustered into the service, said bounty to be paid upon the same vouchers as have been heretofore required, and as soon as said vouchers are presented.

On which resolution the yeas and nays were called, and adopted by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Lowrie, Finch, Stewart, Hagey, Arms, Holyoke, Potter, Pickrell, Miles, McCornack, Stuckey, Lyons and Gibbs—13. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Nelson, Heflin, Newell, LeBaron, Knable, Nicholson and Shaffer—9.

The committee on claims for aid rendered soldiers reported, which on motion of Supervisor Finch was accepted and adopted, and the clerk directed to issue orders in accordance with the report of said committee.

The undersigned committee on claims of supervisors for aid furnished the families of volunteers have investigated the several claims presented as thoroughly as time and circumstances permitted and recommend the allowance of all claims enumerated in the following schedule, and that orders issue in favor of the persons, and for the several amounts so enumerated. The claims as audited amount to $5,326.99. An aggregate seemingly large, but considering the large number of volunteers sent from the county, the high price of all articles of family subsistence, your committee are satisfied the supervisors have in general acted as economically as the people of the county expect or desire.

Special Meeting, Aug. 22nd, 1864.—The clerk of the board made a statement of the quotas of Knox county as near as can be ascertained under the president's call for 500,000 more men.

Supervisor Stewart moved that a committee of three be appointed to recommend some course of action to be adopted by the board to fill the deficiency of Knox county under the call and to recommend some course to be adopted to ascertain the exact condition of the county in regard the several calls for men. Adopted. The chair appointed Messrs. Stewart, Potter and LeBaron said committee.

Supervisor Stewart, from committee, made the following report:

Your committee beg leave to report that in our opinion the proper way to ascertain the number of men to be credited to this county, would be to have each supervisor ascertain as far as possible the number of enlistments from his township, and report the result of his investigation to the county clerk by the 25th inst.; and that a committee be appointed to proceed at once to Springfield and have the proper credits placed to the township and county. The said committee to report to an adjourned meeting of this board of supervisors.

On motion of Supervisor Holyoke said report was accepted and adopted.

Supervisor Finch offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this board of supervisors will pay a bounty of fifty dollars to any citizen of Knox county enlisted for one year, and mustered into the service of the United States, after the date of this meeting to a sufficient number to fill any deficiency which may hereafter be found to exist in the quota of Knox county, under the present call for 500,000 more men.

Which resolution, after some discussion, was withdrawn.

The committee appointed at the special meeting of this board to visit Springfield, reported through the county clerk that they had visited Springfield, and that the deficiency of Knox county as reported at its last meeting had been reduced and that the county on its entire quota had an excess of thirty-nine men; that according to the statement received from the Provost Marshal's office, the excess of the several towns which had furnished a surplus of men amounted to 183, and that the towns deficient were behind 144 men; by which it appeared that the county was in the aggregate 39 men in excess.

The report of the committee was on motion approved, and the committee discharged.

On motion of Supervisor Potter it was voted that a committee be appointed to continue the investigation in regard to where the several volunteers from the different towns in the County of Knox have been credited; and that the committee have power to appoint such persons as they may deem necessary to assist them in their investigation; and further that the county clerk prepare and procure to be printed for the use of said committee, full rolls of all men enlisted in Knox County from the commencement of the war, furnishing to each supervisor a full statement of enlistment in each town and the published lists of the entire county.

September Meeting, 1864.—Report of committee in aid of soldiers' families.

Supervisor Matthews, from committee on aid rendered soldiers' families, reported that said committee had examined all bills presented and recommended the payment of bills amounting to $6,831.84.

Which report was adopted.

Supervisor Holyoke, from War Fund committee, made the following report, which on motion of Supervisor Stewart was accepted and approved.

The undersigned War Fund committee respectfully report, that since the last regular meeting of the board, bounty has been paid out of the county treasury as follows:

To three enlisted men claiming under the first resolution of the board authorizing bounty, the sum of $50 each.....$150

To 312 men enlisted for 100 days' service under the order of the board at its May meeting at $25 each.....$7,800

It will be seen that the committee have exceeded the authority conferred by the resolution of the board, which limited the number to be paid to three hundred. The committee commenced paying under the impression that the whole number enlisted would be less than 300; which was the number intended to be paid. But on proceeding with the payments, your committee soon found the number enlisted somewhat exceeded the number authorized to be paid, and as a portion of the payments had already been made, we could find no proper line of discrimination. Your committee therefore concluded to assume the responsibility of paying the whole, and trust to the future action of the board for relief. The whole number enlisted under that resolution will not probably exceed 325, leaving the number of twenty-five to be provided for by this meeting. Your committee can see no good reason for making a discrimination among those volunteers in regard to bounty. They came promptly forward under the governor's call, and having equally assisted in establishing the honor of Knox county as being the only county in the state, except Kane, which has furnished the full number called for, it seems to your committee that they should all be equally entitled to pay.

J. M. Holyoke,
Wm. B. LeBaron,
C. Arms,
Committee.

September Special Meeting, 1864.—Mr. Arms offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a bounty of fifty dollars be paid by this board to each drafted man, under the present call of the president, mustered into the United States service, whose family may be in needy circumstances, said bounty to be paid to the respective families of such drafted men in such articles as they may need, by the supervisor of the town where they reside.

Mr. Knable moved to substitute the following:

Resolved, That the County of Knox will pay $100 to each man drafted to fill the quota of the several towns of said county under the present call, to be paid when proper evidence is presented of his having been mustered into the service of the United States.

On which substitute the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Holyoke, LeBaron, Knable, Lyons, Gibbs and Chairman—6. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Lowrie, Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms and McCornack—7. Lost.

The question recurring on resolution of Mr. Arms, the same was adopted.

On motion of Supervisor Holyoke, it was Voted, That the resolution of May 14th, 1861, in regard to aid rendered to families of volunteers, be extended and apply to the families of drafted men.

January Meeting, 1865.—Supervisor Arms offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That our senator and representative in the general assembly of this state, be requested to use every effort to procure the passage of a law at this session of the state legislature giving to every volunteer who may be credited to the quota of this state, under this or any succeeding draft, the sum of three hundred dollars, as a state bounty.

Further action taken to furnish the quota of Knox county in the additional call of the government for troops.

Supervisor Gray offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Knox county will pay a bounty of two hundred dollars to each acceptable volunteer, who shall, on or before the 15th day of February next, enlist in the service of the United States to serve one year, said bounty to be paid on the certificate of the Provost Marshal of this district, that such volunteer is mustered into the service of the United States to serve one year; and that such volunteer is credited on the quota for volunteers from Knox county. All volunteers so paid shall be apportioned to the several townships according to the existing enrollment.

For which resolution Mr. LeBaron offered the following substitute:

Whereas, The president has issued a call for 300,000 men, and a draft has been ordered to take place on the 15th day of February next, for the purpose of filling said call, therefore

Resolved, That Knox county will pay a bounty of three hundred dollars for each acceptable recruit, to make up the deficiency of any town in Knox county, to be paid on the certificate of the Provost Marshal of the 5th district, that said recruit is accepted and duly credited to some town in this county.

Resolved, That any town in said county who may have or shall furnish any recruit by town authority or association, to fill deficiency of said town, such town shall be entitled from the county treasury to the sum of three hundred dollars, bounty for each recruit so furnished.

When the yeas and nays were called on accepting of said substitute, it was decided in the affirmative by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Lowrie, Stewart, Nelson, Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Gray, LeBaron, Pickrell, Miles, McCornack, Knable, Shaffer, Lynes and Gibbs—17. Nays—None. Absent—3. Excused—1. Substitute accepted.

The committee on aid to the families of soldiers in the army of the United States made the following report:

Mr. Lowry, from committee to audit bills for aid rendered to the families of soldiers, presented the following report, which was on motion accepted, and adopted, and the clerk directed to issue orders to the several parties named for the amount so found due them.

Your committee to whom were referred the claims presented for the support of soldiers' families would respectfully report:

That they have examined said bills and recommend the following be allowed, and orders issued in payment to the several persons as indicated, making a grand total of $12,390.13.

Your committee would remark in conclusion that the amount allowed seems too large; and that it has come to the knowledge of the committee that there are some soldiers' widows in the county who are drawing their support, whose husbands have been killed in the army and who have received their bounties, and are now drawing their pensions from the government, and your committee would recommend that in such cases further assistance be withheld by the supervisors.

Mr. Arms offered a resolution in regard to the raising of funds, payment of bounties and the manner of paying the same. This resolution was amended and finally passed unanimously and reads as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed who shall be authorized to negotiate a loan for the terms of one, two and three years, in sufficient amount to pay the bounties to soldiers voted at this meeting, said committee to be fully authorized to issue such certificate, or bonds, as may be necessary to secure the same, and this committee shall be known as the Knox County Bounty Fund Committee.

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the treasurer of Knox county on the presentation of the certificate of the Provost Marshal, as required by the action of this board, providing for bounties, to pay the bounty out of the fund provided by the bounty fund committee. And it shall be the duty of the treasurer to provide a suitable book in which he shall record the name of the recruit certified to by the Provost Marshal, with date of payment and to whom paid. Provided, that if any recruit shall elect to let his bounty remain in the treasury of Knox county, said certificate shall draw interest from date of presentation at the rate of seven-thirty per cent, per annum, and the treasurer shall make the necessary acceptance on the back of said certificate, and also register the same opposite the name of said recruits in his book of recruits.

On motion the board appointed Messrs. Rufus W. Miles, Cephas Arms and Wm. B. LeBaron Bounty Fund committee of Knox county.

Pursuant to notice authorized by the seven members of the board of supervisors, said board met in special meeting Jan. 27th, 1865, at the court house in the City of Knoxville for the purpose of furthering the question of bounties to soldiers.

Supervisor Matthews offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted at the regular meeting in January instant, be so amended as to include in its offer of bounty, drafted men who have contributed to draft associations, as well as to volunteers. Lost. Yeas—Messrs. Matthews, Stewart, Nelson and Heflin—4. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Newell, Arms, Gray, LeBaron, Potter, Pickrell, McCornack, Knable, Nicholson, Shaffer, Lynes and Gibbs—13. Absent—3.

Mr. Stewart offered the following resolution, and thereon moved the previous question.

Resolved, That the soldiers now in the field, or those who may hereafter volunteer, the widows of deceased soldiers, and widows who have sons now in the army, or who may hereafter volunteer from the County of Knox, shall be exempt from the payment of the bounty tax levied, or to be levied, to pay the bounty authorized by the board of supervisors at the regular January meeting of this board.

The question being, shall the main question be put, the yeas and nays were called, resulting in the negative: Yeas—Messrs. Matthews, Stewart, Heflin and Lynes—4. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Newell, Arms, Gray, LeBaron, Potter, Pickrel, McCornack, Knable, Nicholson, Shaffer and Gibbs—12. Absent—4.

Supervisor LeBaron moved to amend said resolution by adding:

Provided it does not conflict with the constitution and laws of the State of Illinois.

Which amendment was carried, and the resolution, as amended, unanimously adopted.

Mr. Arms offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the board hereby endorse the action of the Bounty Fund committee in advertising for money to pay bounties, and order that taxes be levied for the payment of such sums of money as may be needed to pay bounties, under resolutions passed January 11th, A. D. 1865, and that said taxes be levied, during the years 1865, 1866 and 1867 at such rates as will produce the necessary amount of money to pay indebtedness of each year respectively, and interest accruing thereon from time to time.

Mr. LeBaron then offered the following:

Resolved, That our senator and representative in the general assembly be requested to procure the passage of a bill legalizing the acts of the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, at their meetings January 11th and 27th, A. D. 1865, for paying bounties, and authorizing said county to issue bonds, and levy taxes for the payment thereof.

When Mr. Potter offered the following as a substitute therefor, which was accepted.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the chair, whose duty it shall be to prepare a bill to be presented to the legislature of Illinois, legalizing the action of this board in levying a tax for the payment of county bounties, as contemplated by the resolution adopted at our January meeting, 1865, and procure the passage of the same.

Which resolution was unanimously adopted.

The chairman appointed Messrs. Potter, Arms and Gray committee provided for by resolution of Mr. Potter.

On motion of Supervisor Matthews, it was ordered that the time for the reception of bids for bounty loan be extended until the 10th day of February next, and that bids therefor remain unopened until that day.

The struggle of the board of supervisors to raise money to fill the quota of soldiers apportioned to Knox county was again manifested at another special meeting held Monday, February 27, 1865.

At the request of the Bounty Fund committee the clerk stated the condition of the loan authorized at the January meeting of the board, from which it appeared that but a small portion of the loan had been taken, and that from that source the necessary funds to pay bounties allowed at the January meeting could not be obtained.

Mr. Potter, from committee appointed at the January special meeting of the board, to draft a bill authorizing the County of Knox to issue bonds for the purpose of procuring money to pay bounties to volunteers, and to procure the passage of the same by the legislature, then in session, reported: That in compliance with the resolution of the board, he had prepared such a bill and had been to Springfield to procure its passage; that when said bill was presented, opposition was made to its passage by citizens of this county, through their influence the bill was defeated, and the authority to issue bonds withheld.

On motion of Mr. Gray the report was accepted.

Mr. LeBaron offered the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, at the January meeting of this board, the County of Knox offered a bounty of three hundred dollars to each volunteer mustered into the service of the United States, on the call of the president for 300,000 men, who shall be credited to the quota of any town of said county, to the amount of its deficiency; and this board appointed a committee to procure the money by loan, and

Whereas, said committee, after due publication and notice given, has failed to secure loans to a sufficient amount to pay the indebtedness incurred, by reason of such volunteering, and it being found that under an act of the legislature of the State of Illinois, approved .....A. D. 1865, known as "the Burchard bill" authority is given to the Board of Supervisors of Knox County to levy and collect a special tax for the payment of such indebtedness, and to prescribe the time for the collection of the same; and it being necessary to do so, to preserve the credit and good faith of the county, it is therefore Ordered by the Board of Supervisors of Knox County, that a special tax of two per cent (two dollars on every one hundred dollars valuation) be, and is hereby levied and assessed upon each dollar's worth of taxable property, both real and personal, within the County of Knox; which tax shall be known and designated as the bounty tax, and the proceeds thereof be known as the bounty tax fund, and shall be applied strictly in conformity with said law.

Ordered, That the county clerk procure suitable books, and immediately extend such tax thereon, taking the assessment of 1864 as his basis for such tax.

Ordered, That on the completion of said tax books, the clerk issue his warrant, as provided by law, for the collection of the same, directed to the collectors of the several towns, taking bonds from said collectors as provided by law, for the faithful performance of their duties, and requiring said collectors to make returns thereof by the 1st day of May, A. D. 1865.

Ordered, That all taxes returned as delinquent by the town collectors to the county collector, be collected by said county collector, in the same manner and at the same time, as is now provided by law for the collection of state and county taxes.

On the adoption of which preamble and resolutions, or orders, the yeas and nays were ordered, resulting: Nays—Messrs. Meek, Lowrie, Heflin, Newell, Heagy, Arms, Gray, LeBaron, Potter, Pickrel, McCornack, Stuckey, Knable, Nicholson, Gibbs and Mr. Chairman—16. Nays—none. Absent—5. And therefore declared adopted.

Mr. Lowrie moved that the town collectors be required to make returns of all collections made every ten days after the reception of the tax books from the clerk. Adopted.

On motion it was voted that each supervisor be required to certify to the treasurer the name of each volunteer, who may have been credited to his town respectively, to fill the quota thereof; and that said treasurer shall only pay on such certificates of the Provost Marshal as shall embrace the names so certified by the supervisors.

Resolved, That the county will pay 10 per cent. interest on all certificates of enlistment from the date of their issue by the Provost Marshal until the same are paid by the treasurer.

On which resolution the yeas and nays were called, and the resolution lost by the following vote:

Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Heagy, Knable and Nicholson—4.

Nays—Messrs. Lowry, Heflin, Newell, Arms, Gray, LeBaron, Potter, Pickrel, McCornack, Stuckey, Gibbs and Mr. Chairman—12.

The regular meeting, April, 1865, of the board was held and the allowances reported by the committee on aid to soldiers seemed excessively large and an effort of the board was made to limit expenditures in aid to soldiers' families.

Mr. Gray presented the following:

Mr. Gray, from committee appointed to audit claims presented for aid rendered to families of volunteers, rendered the following report which was on motion accepted. Mr. Arms moved to adopt so much of the report as relates to the claims audited and the recommendation that orders be issued in payment to the several parties named for the sums specified. Motion adopted and orders directed to issue, aggregating $11,155.39.

Your committee would recommend that the claims allowed as above, be audited and paid. as the goods were furnished and services rendered under the approval of the supervisors of the several towns, but the accounts indicate that in some cases supervisors have not adhered strictly to the rules adopted by this board, for example, Indian Point claims aid is allowed $339.35 for the single article of meat, which is more than the whole amount claimed by either Ontario, Sparta, Copley, Walnut Grove, Persifer, Haw Creek, Chestnut, Orange, Rio and Truro, for all purposes. That no sufficient explanation is given for this great difference in claims from towns having about the same population, and as a check to this large disbursement of public money, we would recommend that the board so amend the resolution under which we are now acting, that each supervisor shall render assistance to only such families of soldiers as have volunteered or been drafted in Knox county; that they use greater care, that all supplies so given shall be absolutely necessary. We would further recommend that the supervisors give orders, naming the articles necessary in such order, and that the orders be attached to all bills presented to this board for payment.

JOHN GRAY,
H. R. SANDERSON,
E. S. HARDEN,
Committee.

Mr. Arms moved the adoption of the recommendations of the committee, but subsequently withdrew his motion, when

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the supervisors be instructed to aid only the families of soldiers, citizens of this county, and who have not received a county bounty exceeding fifty dollars.

Mr. Vaughn moved to amend by striking out the word "county" in the resolution, and insert the word "state." Amendment lost.

And the question recurring on the adoption of the resolution, the same was passed.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That each supervisor be directed to render to each meeting of the board a statement of the number of families assisted by him, the number of persons in each family and the amount of assistance given to each.

April, 1865.—Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That each member of this board be and is hereby requested to obtain the names of those residing in the town which he represents, who are now (serving) or have served three years in the United States Military service, and also who may have received wounds or died in such service, that have been assessed, or have paid the taxes assessed on their property to raise funds to pay bounties to volunteers, known as the 2 per cent. tax; and also the amount that each may have been assessed or paid, and report the same to this board at the next annual meeting.

And be it further

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the chair, whose duty it shall be to get the opinion of competent counsel with a view to determine whether there is any legal way in which the taxes so assessed or paid by such persons can be refunded to them by the county by any act of this board and report at the next annual meeting of this board.

Mr. Gale moved to amend by adding after the words "assessed or paid," and said supervisors shall ascertain and report how much money has been paid by the county to the parties contemplated to be benefited by this resolution, as donations from the county.

Mr. Curtis moved that the whole subject matter be indefinitely postponed and called for the yeas and nays.

Yeas—Messrs. Gale, Sanderson, Dunlap, Gray, Curtis, Pickrel, McCornack and Nicholson—8. Nays—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Heflin, Ferris, Heagy, Arms, Maple, Miles, Stuckey, Pease, Vaughn and Lafferty—12. So the board refused to table the resolution.

The question being on the amendment it was adopted by the following vote:

Yeas—Messrs. Harden, Gale, Sanderson, Dunlap, Heagy, Arms, Gray, Curtis, Pickrel, McCornack, Stuckey and Chairman—12. Nays— Messrs. Smith, Heflin, Ferris, Maple, Pease, Nicholson, Vaughn and Lafferty—8.

The question then being on the adoption of the resolution as amended was decided in the negative by the following vote:

Yeas—Messrs. Smith, Heffin, Ferris, Heagy, Maple, Pease and Vaughn—7. Nays—Messrs. Harden, Gale, Sanderson, Dunlap, Arms, Gray, Curtis, Pickrel, McCornack, Stuckey, Nicholson, Lafferty and Chairman—13.

Mr. Stuckey moved that the resolution of Mr. Gale passed yesterday cutting off aid to families of soldiers, not residents of Knox county at time of enlisting, be reconsidered. Passed.

The question then being, shall the resolution of Mr. Gale pass, was decided in the negative.

Yeas—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Gale, Sanderson, Ferris, Gray, Curtis, McCornack and Stuckey—9. Nays—Messrs. Dunlap, Heflin, Arms, Maple, Pickrel, Miles, Nicholson, Vaughn and Lafferty—9.

September, 1865.—Mr. Curtis moved the allowance of bounty of fifty dollars to Patrick H. Gilgan, a volunteer in the 102nd regiment, which had not been paid owing to informality of certificate. Motion allowed, and clerk directed to issue order therefor.

Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That each supervisor be, and is hereby requested to make out a list of the names of those in his township, who have paid any part of the tax, known as the two per cent. tax, which was levied for the purpose of paying bounties to volunteers—who were at the time of such payment in the military service of the United States, or who had been honorably discharged from such service; and report such list, with the amount each has paid, to this board at its next meeting.

The yeas and nays being called, resulted: Yeas—Messrs. Heflin and Vaughn —2. Nays—Messrs. Smith, Gale, Dunlap, Ferris, Heagy, Arms, Gray, Curtis, Pickrel, Miles, McCornack, Stuckey, Pease and Nicholson—14. Absent—Messrs. Harden, Sanderson, Maple, Thompson and Lafferty—5. Lost.

Mr. Miles offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That John S. Winter, present county clerk, furnish the board of supervisors at their next meeting, a list of all who have volunteered in the service of the United States from Knox county, and who have not received any local bounty.

We, the undersigned committee, appointed to audit claims presented by the several supervisors of Knox county, for support rendered soldiers' families, furnished since the last meeting of this board, beg leave to make the following report: And recommend that an order be passed ordering the clerk of this county to draw orders in favor of the several parties for the amounts named below, as follows, and amounting to $7,755.74. Which report on motion of Mr. Arms was accepted and the recommendation of the committee concurred in.

January, 1866.—The clerk then presented a list of volunteers who had not received local bounty (so far as the same could be ascertained) in this county, as directed by the board of supervisors at their September meeting, which report was accepted; and on motion of Mr. Gale, the report by townships was referred to the supervisors of the several towns, with instructions to examine and correct the same, and return to the county clerk and that the clerk make another report at the next meeting of this board.

Mr. Sanderson offered the following motion which was adopted:

Resolved, That the county clerk prepare a statement of the amount of money expended by Knox county for bounties; and also the amount expended for aid to families of volunteers, and report to the adjutant general in accordance with the tenor of his circular; and that the board recommend to the several cities, towns and associations to make returns of the amount each town has expended for like purposes, to the county clerk, that such amounts may be duly certified and forwarded to the adjutant general.

Mr. Gale, from committee on claims for aid rendered to the families of soldiers reported, and recommended the allowance of claims amounting to $2,896.74.

Mr. Gray offered the following resolution:

Whereas, The necessity for assistance to soldiers' families has nearly ceased, and whereas, the further assistance to such families can be better rendered by each town for itself, therefore

Resolved, That the resolution under which families of volunteers are assisted by the county is hereby annulled.

Mr. Gray's resolution being in order, Mr. Pease moved to amend by postponing the operation of the resolution until after the next meeting of the board. Amendment adopted, and the question recurring on the adoption of the resolution as amended, the same was adopted. Yeas—E. S. Harden, A. J. Dunlap, R. Heflin, L. D. Ferris, G. W. Heagy, Cephas Arms, John Gray, A. S. Curtis, James McCornack, S. V. Stuckey, Jas. H. Nicholson, John Lafferty—13. Nays—Messrs. P. H. Smith, W. Selden Gale, A. M. Maple, James Pickrel and H. J. Vaughn—5. Adopted.

April, 1866.—Petition of Gen. A. A. Smith for bounty, under resolution passed July 31st, A. D. 1862, presented by Mr. Gale, and on motion said petition was referred to a committee of three. (The chair appointed Messrs. Arms, Heagy and Keller.)

The committee to which was referred the claims presented for aid rendered to soldiers' families, reported the following claims, and recommended their allowance, which report was accepted, the recommendation concurred in, and the clerk directed to issue orders for the several amounts allowed amounting to $1,281.61.

Mr. Dunlap offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the board adopt and ratify the resolution passed at its last meeting refusing further aid to families of volunteers by the county from and after this date.

When Mr. Vaughn offered the following as an amendment:

Resolved, That the supervisor of each town, be and is hereby authorized to extend aid to the families of volunteers who are still in the service of the United States, or who have died or been disabled in such service, when such families are really in need of such aid; and although the families of any deceased soldier may receive a pension from the government of eight dollars per month, this shall be no bar to such aid when absolutely needed, any resolution of this board to the contrary notwithstanding.

The yeas and nays on said amendment being called, resulted: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Gale, Conger, Clay, Heagy, Ebright, Beadle, Combs, Thompson, Vaughn, Gibbs and Chairman—12. Nays—Messrs. Dunlap, Heflin, Arms, Kellar, Johnson, Rhea, Adams and Newell—9. Resolution as amended, adopted.

September, 1866.—Mr. Meek, from committee to which were referred the bills for aid rendered to families of volunteers, reported recommending the allowance of claims amounting to $585.92 plus $222.50.

Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That the sum of one thousand dollars be and is hereby appropriated to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, to be paid on the order of treasurer of the above mentioned institution, upon the condition precedent, that some agent of the aforesaid institution shows, to the satisfaction of the county clerk, and the chairman of this board, that said institution has already secured the balance of fifty thousand dollars, as subscription to said institution.

The county clerk is hereby authorized to borrow the above amount on the credit of the county, and pay over the amount on the condition above stated.

January, 1867.—Mr. Gale presented report of committee on aid rendered families of soldiers, and recommended the allowance of the following claims to the parties named for the sums specified. Report accepted and adopted. And on motion of Mr. Gale the clerk was directed to issue orders in payment, aggregating $607.33.

Mr. Gale presented claim of Benj. Lombard for furnishing substitute, for the sum of $300.00 and moved the payment thereof. Rejected. The board also refused to pay bounty to Col. F. C. Smith.

April, 1867.—The committee on miscellaneous subjects to whom was referred claims for the support of soldiers' families, beg leave to report a total of $967.91, which was allowed.

Mr. Holyoke presented a claim for a one hundred days' service bounty under former resolution of the Board, and it appearing that said bounty had never been paid, it was voted that the clerk issue an order to Wilson Bandy, assignee of Thomas Mollen, for the sum of twenty-five dollars, in payment of such bounty.

September, 1867.—Mr. Sumner offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, Many of our fellow citizens fell in the War of the Rebellion, it is but just that a tribute to their worth and patriotism be erected by the county, and their memories preserved by a grateful community, therefore

Resolved, By the board of supervisors, that a suitable monument be erected upon the public square of the City of Knoxville, upon the tablets of which the names of each citizen of the county who lost his life in the service of his country shall be engraved and such other memoranda as may be deemed proper by a committee hereafter to be appointed to carry out this resolution.

Mr. McKee moved to amend by inserting, that when built it be at the county seat. Amendment withdrawn.

On motion of Mr. Whiting, the whole subject was laid upon the table.

Mr. Keightley moved that the resolution of Mr. Sumner in regard to a soldiers' monument be taken from the table. Yeas—Messrs. McKee, Sumner, Charles, Keightley, Hamrick, Miles, Hall, Wood, Shaffer, Vaughn and Gibbs—11. Nays—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Gale, Conger, Whiting, Dunlap, Beadle, Johnson and Chambers—10. Carried.

Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution as a substitute for Mr. Sumner's resolution:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this board, it is not now prudent for the county to make an effort to erect the proposed monument, in as much as large expenditures have lately been made by the county, and that we are not now in a condition to do justice to this matter. And that the resolution for the present be laid upon the table.

On which the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Harden, Clay, Gale, Conger, Whiting, Dunlap, Wykoff, Newell, Charles, Beadle, Miles, Johnson, Chambers, Vaughn and Gibbs—16. Nays—Messrs. McKee, Sumner, Keightley, Hamrick, Swigart, Hall and Wood—7. Carried.

Mr. Miles then offered the following substitute which was adopted:

Resolved, That Messrs. Sumner, Vaughn and Beadle be appointed a committee to report to the next meeting of the board the probable cost of erecting a suitable monument to the soldiers of Knox county who fell in the service of their country during the war of the great rebellion.

Mr. Gale offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That it is not expedient to continue to aid the families of soldiers in the manner heretofore done, and that such aid cease after sixty days from this date.

January, 1869.—Mr Vaughn offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the supervisor of each town report to this board at their next meeting, the names of those who paid any portion of the tax levied to raise money to pay bounties to soldiers, known as the 2 per cent. tax, and the amount that each so paid who were at the time of such payment in the military service of the United States. Lost.

Mr. Vaughn offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Hon. W. Selden Gale be, and he is hereby requested to procure if possible the passage of a law authorizing the County of Knox to refund the tax paid by those who were at time of such payment in the military service of the United States, which tax was levied to raise money to pay bounties to soldiers, and known as the 2 per cent. tax, and that the clerk of this board forward a copy of this resolution to Mr. Gale.

Mr. Whiting moved to amend by inserting private soldiers. Lost. The question recurring on the passage of Mr. Vaughn's resolution, it was lost by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Whiting, Dossett, Johnson and Vaughn—4. Nays—Messrs. Smith, Harden, Clay, Frisbie, Sanderson, Lanphere, Robertson, Betterton, Charles, Beadle, Lacy, Chambers, Corey, Wood, Tucker, Gibbs and the Chairman—18.

December 1895.—The following communication from the state's attorney in relation to aid to indigent soldiers, sailors and marines was read:

To the Hon. Chairman and Board of Supervisors, Knox Co., Ill.

Gentlemen:—Your chairman has requested that I give an opinion in relation to the construction of one of the statutes of this state, being an act entitled an Act to regulate the granting of relief to indigent war veterans and their families; the question being, whether the relief provided for in said act is furnished by the individual townships or by the county at large. An examination of this act reveals the fact that it is very loosely drawn. The only thing I am able to discover in the act which indicates that the relief granted to the old soldiers and their families is to be furnished by the county is from the reading of the first section of the act, which provides, "That the overseer of the poor, as used in this act, shall be construed to mean all persons whose duty it is under existing statutes to care for, relieve or maintain wholly or in part any poor or indigent person who may be entitled to such relief under the statutes of the State of Illinois."

Now in this county the overseer of the poor is the supervisor of each township (outside of the City of Galesburg, where we have a regularly appointed overseer of the poor) and with the exception of this fact I find no where through the balance of this act anything which would further indicate that the care of the old soldiers and their families was a county charge, but I do find by a careful reading of the act that indications all point to the fact that such care, so furnished, shall be a charge upon the individual townships.

This is as near as it is possible for me to construe this statute without precedent or authority, and leads me to conclude that it was the intention of the legislature in passing this act that the care of the indigent old soldiers, sailors, marines and their families should be a charge upon the several townships throughout the county where they resided and not a charge upon the county at large.

GALESBURG, ILL., Dec. 18, 1895. EUGENE W. WELCH.

On motion of Mr. Latimer, the foregoing opinion of the state's attorney in reference to the law granting relief to indigent war veterans and their families be adopted as the rule of this board.

Mr. Nelson, of the special committee on Memorial Hall and Soldiers' Monument, read the following report:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Knox County, State of Illinois.

Gentlemen:—Your committee appointed at the September meeting of the board, to act with the memorial committee of the Grand Army of Knox County, would respectfully report that we have made careful inquiry of the county clerks in the different counties of this state, as to what has been done in their respective counties to perpetuate the memory of the men who offered their services and their lives for the protection of our great government when its existence was assailed, and we have together with the memorial committee of the Grand Army, carefully canvassed the answers and explanations thus received.

We find in many of the counties in the state, nothing has been done in relation to this matter, but in many other counties either a monument or a memorial hall has been erected, and in some cases both monument and a memorial room are built. We find that the money to defray the expenses of such memorials has in some cases been raised by private subscription and in other cases by taxation through the county board, but in most cases the county board has made an appropriation direct from the county treasury for the purpose.

Your committee find that there is no law authorizing such appropriations by the county board, but we believe that the patriotic citizens of Knox county feel that there should be no further unnecessary delay in taking some action that will insure the erection of such suitable memorial to the memory of the men who sacrificed their lives for the salvation of our government and brought peace and prosperity to the people, as will be a credit to the county, a fitting object lesson to the rising generations and some measure of consolation to the large number of our people who lost near and dear ones in the terrible conflict that brought lasting peace to our country.

Your committee would therefore recommend:

First, That the court room on the third floor in the east wing of the court house be set apart as a memorial room to the soldiers and sailors who enlisted from Knox county in any of the wars in the country that occurred since the organization of this county; said room to be used for storing such relics from the wars herein named, as may be desirable to save, and as a meeting place for soldiers and sailors of the late wars at such times as the Grand Army posts of the county may determine. We recommend that said room be properly fitted up for the purposes above named, at the expense of the county, under the direction of a committee from the board to act in conjunction with a committee from the Grand Army posts of the county.

Second, That the following proposition be submitted to the voters of the county at the regular municipal and town elections to be held next spring, to-wit:

"For the appropriation of $10,000 by the board of supervisors for the erection of a monument to the soldiers and sailors of Knox county." } Yes

"Against the appropriation of $10,000 for a soldiers' monument." } No and that the proposition be submitted on separate ballots and that separate ballot boxes be kept at the polls for the reception of such ballots and the regular judges and clerks at said election shall officiate in receiving, recording and counting said ballots, as are appointed for the regular election to be held at that time, and they shall transmit without delay to the county clerk said poll books, tally lists, ballots and certificates of the election pertaining to said appropriation; and that the county clerk be directed to furnish the necessary poll books, tally sheets, ballots, and instructions for said special election.

Respectfully submitted,

NELS NELSON,
J. F. LATIMER,
JOHN MCCREA,
Committee.

On motion of Mr. Becker, the foregoing report was adopted and its recommendations concurred in, and the chair appointed as such committee Messrs. J. F. Latimer, John McCrea and C. E. Allen.

March, 1896.

The following communication was read and referred to the special committee on soldiers' monument and memorial hall:

To the Hon. Board of Supervisors of Knox County, Ill., Greeting.

At a regular meeting of Morgan L. Smith Post, No. 666, Dept. of Ill., G. A. R., held at Yates City, Ill., March 7th, 1896, the following action was taken, viz:

L. A. Lawrence introduced the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, At the last meeting of the board of supervisors of Knox county, Ill., held Dec. 17th, 1895, a resolution was passed submitting to the voters of Knox county, Ill., a proposition to vote for an appropriation of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), for the purpose of erecting a suitable monument to the memory of the soldiers and sailors of said county who fell in the war of the Rebellion of 1861 to 1865, and also to those who have since passed away, that bore their share in that honorable struggle; said proposition to be voted on at the regular annual town meeting to be held in all the townships in said county on the first Tuesday in April, 1896; and

Whereas, Believing that said appropriation of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) is not a sufficient sum to erect a monument suitable to the purpose proposed, or one that will be an honor to Knox county's fallen sons, or even to the present generation of voters who may act upon said proposition if successful; therefore, be it

Resolved by this Post, That we most earnestly and respectfully request the honorable board of supervisors of said Knox county to reconsider its action taken concerning that appropriation and withdraw said proposition before it goes before the voters for their action, and when so withdrawn that a committee be appointed by said board whose duty it shall be to solicit plans and estimates of monuments of modern designs, from competent persons, that when erected, will reflect credit upon the builders, and do deserved honor to those whose deeds we would commemorate; and, be it

Resolved, That when such plans and estimates shall have been presented and shall be found to fully answer the demand as above set forth, that the board of supervisors of said Knox county be requested then to present to the voters of Knox county, a proposition to vote an appropriation of such sum as by the above estimates presented, shall be found sufficient and worthy the high purpose of erecting a beautiful memorial to those who, by their patriotic devotion, have made it possible for us to say today in honorable fact what for nearly a century before the Civil War could only be said in unmeaning words.

"This is the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Resolution adopted.

THE CITY OF GALESBURG

The city of Galesburg owes its existence to a company of men and women who loved education and religion. The founders of the city were already educated, refined and religious themselves and they wanted to extend these advantages and influences to the youth of the land. In the charter of the college it is declared in Sec. 2: "The object of said corporation shall be to promote the general interests of literature and to qualify young men in the best manner for the various professional and business occupations of society." It is also stated in the original circular: "The indications of Providence, as well as the requisitions of Christ, impose on Christians of this day peculiar obligations to devise and execute, as far as in them lies, liberal and efficient plans for spreading the gospel through the world. The supply of an evangelical and able ministry is confessedly the most important for the accomplishment of this end."

It is for these purposes that certain men and women left Oneida county, New York, with their friends from other parts of the east, and journeyed overland to Illinois, meeting many trials and thrilling experiences on their way thither. The world has had many migrations of people from place to place. In the early history of men these migrations were probably due to the lack of food or the desire for plunder and a severe struggle for existence, making it necessary that a portion of the people separate from the tribe and go elsewhere. Since the dawn of history these migrations have taken place because of religious oppression, the aggressions of the ruling class and the increasing curtailment of the liberties of the common people. Not so, however, with the people who came to Galesburg. They lived in comfort, they had their share of this world's goods, they were respected for their attainments, they enjoyed the blessings of religious and civil liberty, and their homes were in a prosperous country, in a prosperous community and there was still plenty of land to admit of expansion. A high and noble declaration setting forth the reason of their migration must therefore stand in all truth and sincerity.

It is this same band who came to organize a Christian college, that also organized the city of Galesburg. We have here a remarkable example of the persistence of a living principle. Every high ideal, every devotion to a pure, Christian faith that was present with the founders of Knox college and Galesburg, is still to be found in the founders and their descendants and in the accretions that have come to our city from other and independent sources. And in this fact we find a fulfillment of the high hopes and purposes of the founders. Not only in a general way have they left to their descendants the noble spirit with which the founders came but there is everywhere evidence that much of the same spirit has permeated the lives of all our citizens. We would not say that every thought in its entirety that was entertained by our ancestors is still common in Galesburg. Those thoughts have been modified and broadened with the lapse of time and in the ripening fruit we see clearly the real sweet and nutritious kernel that was then partly hidden within the somewhat forbidding but protecting shell. And this is true of all communities within this county in which these founders settled. They brought with them and have made generous distribution of their own noble qualities.

The story of migration has been so often told that it need not here be repeated in detail. There is scarcely a newspaper published in this county that does not occasionally refer to the experiences of these men. Again and again the story is told to the children of the public schools and to the students in our colleges. Much of it also will be found in different parts of this history, but rather let us turn our attention to some things of interest which have occurred in the course of the policies pursued in the corporate capacity of our city.

The village records prior to the year 1851 are not available, therefore a commencement address upon by Miss Helen M. Ryan, read June 13, 1912 at her graduation from Knox college, is submitted to cover that period. It gives so complete a description, in so small a space, of Galesburg life prior to the city's incorporation and is so full of interest that all will be glad to find it in these pages.

Of the scores of pioneer towns, which during the early part of the last century sprang up like mushrooms upon the rolling prairie of Illinois, from some tiny spores wafted on the breeze of western migration, Galesburg is a typical example. Its religious history has been traced from the very beginning; we have long been familiar with the early annals of the college, which indeed was the forerunner of the town, while but slight emphasis has been placed upon the industrial metamorphosis through which the village passed in the early fifties, when after strenuous effort on the part of loyal citizens, a railroad came through Galesburg, and rescued it from the oblivion which would otherwise have been its fate.

Founded in 1837, Galesburg had grown steadily until in 1845 it was a flourishing village of some seventy dwellings, "situated on the main stage line between Peoria and Oquawka" as an old Knox catalogue tells us. Around the New England square were a general store or two and a blacksmith shop, while on the southwest corner stood the first church, the ever watchful guardian of the moral life of the community.

Galesburg passed the first two decades of its existence quietly—independent of the rest of the world. But should we picture it in 1857 we would see a change, evidences of the industrial revolution, ushered in by the coming of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, which resulted in a new era of industrial development. No longer does one store do the business of the community but there are merchants of various kinds. No longer do the people gather in their dooryards as the clumsy stage coach, with horn blowing, thunders down the road. No longer is the whir of saw or grist mill the only evidence of industry, since from the "Q" yards to Frost's foundry, there is a buzz and shriek of machinery, the clang of engine bells and the scream of whistles, announcing the employment of scores of men.

That first epoch in Galesburg's economic history was characterized by a lack of transportation facilities and by an absence of machinery, two factors affecting all fields of activity, but especially prominent in determining the condition of agriculture at that time. The primitive methods of farming alone were sufficient to limit production, while the difficulty in reaching markets made large crops unprofitable and offered no incentive to inventive genius for the improvement of agricultural implements. Corn has always been the chief export until after the coming of the railroad. Wheat, however, has always been produced in comparatively large quantities. With the only farm implements an old fashioned wooden mold-board plow, a sickle, a harvesting cradle, and a threshing flail, necessitating the use of manual labor in all the processes, the acreage under cultivation was naturally small. Moreover, when the farmer had succeeded in harvesting his wheat, he must make the tiresome journey with loaded wagons, to Peoria or farther still, to Chicago—the latter trip consuming two weeks with a tedious wait in the elevators in the city if prices were high, perhaps sixty cents—causing farmers to rush their wheat to market. Hog raising owing to the distance from available markets, was an unsuccessful financial venture, if one may judge from the experience of the man from Knoxville who once succeeded in driving 1,300 unruly pigs to Chicago at a loss of $5,000.

The absence of railroads and the consequent isolation, resulted in the industrial independence of the community; whereas, within Galesburg itself, owing to the abundance of land, each family was practically self-supporting. There was little need of meat market or grocery store since each one slaughtered his own meat and raised the necessary grain, garden vegetables and fruit upon his ten acre lot. The housewife's tasks, included besides the cooking and other duties of the present, spinning and weaving, the dipping of candles and the making of all the garments for the family, with her own hands.

Whatever articles were needed aside from the domestic productions could be obtained at the general store and you need not hesitate to purchase if your funds were low, for Mr. Colton would accept whatever farm produce you had to offer in exchange for needles, farm implements or calico. There was little competition and prices may have been high but the credit was long.

The village had its own grist mills and its saw mills make into lumber the hard wood from Henderson Grove. All building materials with the exception of hardware, glass and white lead, were the product of the neighborhood. In the sash, door and blind factory, all the labor was performed by hand for years.

But Galesburg's system of domestic economy was nearing its close, when, in 1854 the first construction engine entered Galesburg over the railroad linking it with east and west. For simultaneously with the railroad came factories and machinery. The cornplanter, invented and manufactured by Geo. W. Brown, the steel plow and the threshing machine revolutionized agricultural methods; new appliances simplified household tasks, increase of population and multiplication of machinery led to specialization of labor and industrial interdependence and Galesburg became a unit in the economic life in the nation."

There does not seem to have been very much of a scramble for office in 1854. On April 13th of that year a committee from the village trustees was appointed to wait upon L. C. Conger and find out if he would accept the office of supervisor at 12½ cents per day that the trustees agreed to allow him. Here is one instance at least, of the office seeking the man.

In the spring of 1857, after it became apparent that Galesburg was to be a railroad town, the citizens aspired to give their town the more dignified appellation of CITY OF GALESBURG. An election was called for the 6th of April, the village trustees met, canvassed the votes and declared the following officers elected: H. R. Sanderson, mayor; O. S. Pitcher, city clerk; F. P. Sisson, marshal; David Sanborn, assessor; George Davis, collector; And. Phelps, treasurer; John Burlingham, street commissioner; A. C. Wiley and L. C. Conger, police magistrates; M. S. Cooke, city justice of the peace. Aldermen: 1st ward, J. H. Sherman; 2nd ward, Edwin Post; 3d ward, J. F. Dunn; 4th ward, J. W. Cothren; 5th ward, Marcus Belden; 6th ward, E. M. Jordan.

Majority against license, 358.

Majority against gaming, 371.

After closing up the business of the meeting the trustees shook hands and bid each other farewell.

On April 9, 1857 the mayor and city council met in the session room of the First Presbyterian Church. Mr. Pitcher, clerk, presented his certificate of election, took the oath of office before A. C. Wiley, J. P., and proceeded to organize the council. The mayor being absent, Mr. J. H. Sherman was made acting mayor. The city had no corporate seal and it was ordered that a "Scrawl" around the word "seal" should be the seal of the city and that the clerk report a suitable design at the next meeting for a city seal.

The council met again April 13th when the clerk reported a representation of the main building of Knox college as a device for a city seal which was unanimously adopted.

A room for meeting for one year was rented of R. H. Rugar for $100.00. It will be noted that the vote on license or no license resulted in "no license" by 358 majority. This vote applied to the charter which, therefore denied to the council the right to license the sale of intoxicating liquor until the adoption of the present charter containing license privilege.

On April 16, 1857 the council declared by ordinance all roads within the city to be public streets and any continuation of any of said streets should bear the name of the street so continued. Questions like this kind came in rapid succession and were taken up and disposed of, thereby adjusting matters in conformity with the broader outlook arising from the new powers and duties of the newly born city. In 1860, a census was taken, showing the total number of inhabitants to be 5,544, of whom 2,753 were males, 2,791 females; divided among the different races as follows: Swedes, 654; Irish, 422; Germans, 222; other foreigners, 220; Americans, 4,026; colored, 78; entitled to vote, 1,153.

A census of the city of Galesburg was also taken Oct. 1, 1867, and reported to the council October 7th, showing the following:

Total population Oct. 1	9,230
American	5,674
Swede	1,650
Irish	865
German	467
Colored	574
Total population, 1863	6,475
Total population, 1865	7,700

In the same year a Norwegian—name unknown—asked the privilege of establishing a brewery within the city limits.

It was in this year that the rumblings of the Civil War were first heard.

GALESBURG IN THE CIVIL WAR

Overt acts were committed by the south at different points during the winter of 1861 and war began in earnest in the spring. The pressure was immediately felt by the families of the men who had volunteered to defend the nation. On Nov. 19, 1861, the council voted an allowance of thirty to forty cents a day for each man regularly certified. An appropriation of $5,000.00 had been made for this purpose in the tax levy of April 19, 1861. The young city did her full share. In January, 1865 when the government wanted to close the war with a mighty dash and called loudly for additional troops, the council offered a bounty of $500.00 to include the $300.00 offered for the first sixteen men who would volunteer. This action was rescinded when it was learned that the quota required of the city was much larger than supposed and it was voted to have placed to the credit of the township sixty volunteers and pay each $200.00. teed to protect any person against the draft who would pay to the city treasurer on or before February 25th, the amount assessed against him by the township committee, the township to procure thirty additional volunteers. The collapse of the rebellion came April, 1865, and August, 1865 the council voted to take no further action upon the subject of bounties except the payment of $50 to Samuel Stevens as a deserved gratuity by virtue of his intentions and losses subject to enlistment.

February 12th, 1866, the clerk reported that Galesburg had expended $16,660 on account of the war.

November 18, 1863, the council voted to pay $12.00 per month while in the service of the United States under the call for 300,000 men then made. Mayor Dunn was absent and upon his return, declined to sign the resolution and returned it with his endorsement "I hope the council will reconsider the order for bounty for volunteers, I am afraid it will entail a heavy expense on the city and at the same time fail to secure the desired object." At the next meeting, December 7th, he offered his resignation which was laid upon the table until called up for further consideration. Under Timothy Nash, acting mayor, the council continued to vote bounties and do everything possible to keep Galesburg's quota of soldiers full.

THE NEW CHARTER

May 15, 1876, Mr. Sanderson (Henry R.) introduced a resolution directing the mayor to give notice at once for an election, submitting the question to a vote of the people: "Shall this city become incorporated under the general law of this state." The motion was laid upon the table until next regular meeting. It was called up on June 10. The resolution was amended so as to read "and that the time for holding such election be fixed on the 3d Monday on the 17th of July," and in that form it was passed.

The vote in the affirmative was carried by a majority of 220. The licensing of dram shops was permitted under the new charter and an ordinance to that effect was passed April 9, 1877. Other changes were made. On May 1, 1882, the city attorney was instructed to prepare an ordinance providing that the offices of city and town clerk shall be united in the same person and that the offices of supervisor and poor master shall be separated, and the poor master appointed by the city council. The next year the offices of treasurer and town collector were united.

POLICE DEPARTMENT

This department consisted of a constable only at the start. The clerk's record shows that on June 2, 1856, a police force was established consisting of five men to be selected by Constable Wilsey, whose duties shall be "to arrest all disorderly persons and such other duties in the premises as is usually performed by such officers." A year later a police department was established by ordinance consisting of the mayor, marshal and such policemen as then were or may thereafter be appointed. Two years later it was voted that the services of the police be dispensed with from and after this date and until further order from the city council.

Today the police department of the city comprises the mayor as head over all, the chief of police, the desk sergeant and six patrolmen. Exclusive of the mayor, the annual salaries aggregate something over $6,700.00. Attached to the department is a fine ambulance, a good patrol wagon, and a good team of horses, the upkeep of which is about $200 per annum.

FIRE DEPARTMENT

This department is the joy of the small boy, the comfort of the adult and the pride of all good citizens. It is generally believed that Galesburg has the best fire department of any city of like size in the state. It had its origin in an old-fashioned volunteer fire brigade.

On Feb. 5, 1858, the city council called upon all good citizens of Galesburg to call at the council room of the city and enroll themselves members of a volunteer bucket company, each agreeing to keep a bucket for the special purpose, and hold himself in readiness to attend all fires in the city and, at the same time it was ordered that an ordinance for the organization of a fire department be prepared. The ordinance provided that the department consist of an engineer, two assistant engineers, a city fire warden and such fire engine men, hose men, hook and ladder, ax and saw men and bucket company men as may from time to time be approved by the council, and when so approved, and not otherwise, they shall be enrolled as members of the fire department, the aldermen to be ex-officio fire wardens of their respective wards. Forty-five names were subscribed to the enrollment. Among the subscribers were the following:

B. O. Carr, J. B. Boggs, George Ekins, O. B. Judson, A. S. Hoover, Chas. L. Stevens, S. B. Hoisington, Geo. Davis, Nelson Finch, A. E. Higgins, E. Benner, G. C. Lanphere, J. F. Edgerton. The only persons among the above now living are: B. O. Carr, O. B. Judson and S. B. Hoisington. It is believed this was the first systematic effort to secure a fire department although in June, 1856, authority was voted to purchase a fire engine and hose suitable to the town, and there must have been some way of operating it. The greatest difficulty was the lack of water. The only source of supply were private wells. George W. Brown & Co. had a well which they thought inexhaustible and The Frost Manufacturing Co. had one, but the area over which these two could be made servicable was very limited. A large cistern was dug one block east of the Brown factory and another one near the Frost company's works. These cisterns were kept full from the two wells. A fire district was reached by water pipes that were connected with or rather served by these two cisterns. But such service was necessarily very imperfect. In 1870 there was a movement in the council for the purchase of a steam fire engine. The better judgment prevailed and nothing was done. The fire apparatus already owned was equal to the water supply. In 1879 the city purchased a fine chemical engine which did excellent service until the construction of the present system of water works. With the finding of plenty of water the fire department of Galesburg began to grow and today it is one of the most efficient that can be found. The central station is located on the south side of Simmons street between Prairie and Cherry streets. It is fitted up in the most up-to-date style. There are 5,000 telephones that may be used to notify central in case of fire. In case of alarm the central telephone station starts everything working by electricity. It lights the building, rings all the bells, releases the horses, opens the doors and the department is ready to rush to a fire in ten to fifteen seconds. There are two outside stations—one on Maple avenue, near the Bateman school house, and one on the corner of East Brooks street and Churchill avenue. The department has fourteen fine horses, one aerial truck, 65 feet high, which can be used as a water tower, one steam fire engine, one chemical double 60 gallon cylinder engine, two combination hose and chemical engines, with 50 gallon tanks, 550 feet of hose, and one fire chief buggy. All of this apparatus is in first class condition and is kept clean and neat by the men. The roster of men includes the fire chief, one assistant fire chief, three captains and sixteen privates. These men all undergo frequent thorough examinations to test their efficiency in every duty they have to perform, including, of course, localities. Every man must know without asking the shortest route to every locality in the city and must also know the nearest hydrants to the place where the fire is. The equipment is ample, the discipline is perfect.

WATER DEPARTMENT

It has already been stated that the water supply was very inadequate to the necessity of the city, and that private wells and large reservoirs, in the shape of cisterns, located at different points, were resorted to. These cisterns were kept filled with water as storage for use in case of fire, but the city council became uneasy and dissatisfied with this meagre chest for a water supply. There was a spot south of Main street and lying on both sides of Henderson street that seemed to be yielding a great deal of water. A small artificial lake had been constructed there and was supplied with water that seeped into it from all directions. It was believed that this locality would furnish all the water that the city needed. A committee of the council had recommended the purchase of a part of this ground, but the proposition did not carry.

In 1883, a Mr. Nathan Shelton came to Galesburg and convinced the council that he could procure a sufficient supply of water by sinking a large well just west of the Burlington track, in the valley of Cedar Fork. A contract to that effect was made with Mr. Shelton who went ahead and sunk the well, laid water mains, constructed a standpipe and engine house and purchased all of the old water mains then owned by the city and, in fact, did everything necessary so far as construction was concerned to make a complete system of water works. In December, 1883, he gave notice to the city that he had assigned his franchises, etc., to the Galesburg Water Co., incorporated under the laws of Illinois, and further that the hydrants as listed in the notice were ready for use.

It soon began to appear that the water works would be without water before very long, and the council began to inquire what could be done to relieve the situation. Various notices were made but it finally came to the point where the city declared the contract forfeited, and instructed the water committee to disconnect the old water mains, formally owned by the city, from the Shelton works, and fall back upon the old water supply, and, at the same time, the council instructed the city attorney together with added counsel to begin at once the necessary legal proceedings to annul the contract with the Galesburg Water Company, on the ground of insufficiency in quality and quantity of water furnished.

On June 1, 1885, Alderman Basler introduced an ordinance repealing the ordinance providing for a supply of water to the city of Galesburg and authorizing Nathan Shelton or assigns to construct and maintain water works. The repealing ordinance was put upon its passage and was passed by the following vote:

Yeas: Basler, Hamblin, Shaw, Anderson, Johnson, Overstreet, Brooks, Crocker, Drury, Moulton, Waste and Huston, 12. Nays: Hammond. Absent: Kennedy.

At the same time the city attorney was authorized to take such legal steps as he may deem necessary. To have declared null and void any and all rights granted under, and by, virtue of an ordinance passed May 12, 1883, in relation to water works and to employ legal assistance if necessary.

This case was fought strenuously, from the Circuit Court through the Supreme court of the state and the Supreme court of the United States, and the decision was uniformly in favor of the city, and by this decision every cent of valuation in $125,000 of water bonds was eliminated.

The city then began to consider the question of a water supply in earnest. The tract of land above referred to, which had been known as Crystal Springs property, lay on the south side of Main street and on each side of Henderson street, was again examined. It was finally voted to purchase a certain part of that property. A test had been made and it was found that the water supply appeared to be ample.

The city had repurchased from the Galesburg Water Co., the old Shelton works for a very reasonable sum. It was decided to erect the necessary buildings, pumps, etc., upon the property purchased for that purpose, and sink a series of wells from which water would be pumped and delivered, not only to reservoirs, but directly to the mains. The works were completed and the supply has been quite fit up to the present time. Additional ground has been purchased, additional wells were sunk and the quality of water has been first class and the quantity not ample but adequate. The wells which were first sunk have been abandoned. Other wells have been sunk and today the supply is better than ever before.

A brief abstract from the engineer's report, for the year 1910, will close this account and give a very clear idea of what there is today.

SOURCE OF SUPPLY

The water for the city of Galesburg and the residents thereof is secured from six 8-inch wells and from one 10-inch well, at an average depth of 80 feet, and three artesian wells at a depth of 1,225 feet.

The manner of pumping the 8 and 10-inch wells is by an Impellor type of pump, and by means of the air-compressor for the artesian wells.

During the past year we have put down four 8-inch wells and, with the one just completed on the reservoir bank, making a total of seven wells.

AMOUNT OF WATER PUMPED

The air compressor has not been running continuously, but when in operation it pumps 215 gallons per minute. Two of the 8-inch wells are pumping an average of 500 gallons a minute each, and the remaining five wells are pumping an average of 200 gallons a minute each.

If all the wells should be operated for twenty-four hours, two and one-half million gallons would be pumped. The average number of wells in operation for the year is four, at an average of eighteen hours a day.

From the above it will be seen that we are pumping at least one and one-half million gallons daily. As a result it has been determined that the whole cost of pumping water by the air compressor is at the rate of 2⅜ cents per 1,000 gallons, and the cost of pumping with two Impellor pumps, in the pasture east of Henderson street, is four mills per thousand gallons. A test on the Impellor pumps near the station would make as favorable a showing, but would show a cost per one thousand gallons for less than shown by the air compressor.

The statement of receipts and expenditures is as follows:

Total receipts	$30,204.70
Total expenditures	27,149.82
Balance	3,054.88

There are today in the city 40¼ miles of water mains, comprising pipes varying in diameter from 4 inches to 24 inches. There are 420 fire hydrants in the city. The total value of this pipe including all hydrants, valves, specials, material and labor is $20,021.75. The average domestic pressure maintained during the past year has been fifty pounds which has been giving satisfaction. The ordinary fire pressure maintained is 120 pounds. The analysis of the water from the director of state water sufficiently shows that the same is safe for drinking purposes.

STREET CAR LINES

In the fall of 1871, a petition had been filed with the city council by a company known as the Galesburg Horse Railway Co., for an ordinance granting the use of the streets of the city of Galesburg for the purpose of said horse railway. Before any definite action had been taken, Geo. W. Brown, who at that time manufactured farm implements, at the corner of Kellogg and Simmons streets, also asked the privilege of constructing a horse railway, for freight purposes, from the Burlington freight depot to his shops at the aforesaid location, and upon reaching Simmons street to go westward as far as West street. This would accommodate the Frost Manufacturing Co., who were located at the latter point.

On November 15, of that year, an ordinance was introduced permitting George W. Brown, and others, to construct the street railway as asked for, going one block further to Academy street, provided it shall be constructed within one year.

There was opposition to this railway, called for by Geo. W. Brown Co., and the road was never constructed.

Under the ordinance granting the horse railway company the right to lay tracks in the streets of Galesburg, about ten rods of track in Broad street just south of the line leading to Burlington, Iowa, was constructed, and an old street car was put upon it which was supposed to be equivalent to take possession of the streets of the city, under their charter and the ordinance.

It was all that was done for several years until the organization of the Street Railway Co., that actually did take possession of the streets and operate a line of cars.

The petition of the Geo. W. Brown Co. in regard to a horse railway was obtained by a track from the Burlington Co., across Chamber street between Main and Mulberry and across Seminary street near the west end of Mulberry, and across Kellogg, opposite the corn planter works.

The company which finally started operations obtained a franchise of January 5, 1885. The incorporators were:

Lake W. Sanborn, J. K. Mitchell, Asa A. Matteson, E. E. Fosdick, W. L. Gansing, William Kellogg, C. D. Lusk, W. L. Garrison, E. O. Flood, and George Clayton.

The corporated name of this company was known as the College City Street Railway Co. This railway company is now controlled by the McKinley Syndicate, and is a part of this system.

RAILROADS

The history of the C., B. & Q. Railroad Co., will show pretty fully how railroads were introduced into the city of Galesburg, but there were some things done by the city council which are worthy of note.

At that time it seemed that the Rock Island road was presenting the most favorable opportunity for an outlook from Galesburg to Chicago, and the Central Military Tract road was organized with that thought in view although they subsequently made connection with another company at Mendota.

A resolution was introduced into the city council on March 25, 1852, which reads very strangely today, and is as follows:

Resolved, That the Central Military Tract Railroad Co., be, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to occupy so much of Broad street as may be necessary for the construction and permanent location of the said railroad, commencing at the south side of the public square and running north to the line of the corporation. The free right of way in that part of said street being hereby granted to the said company, provided that if it shall be found necessary to widen any part of said street, the same shall be done by the company free of expense to the town. And be it further

Resolved, That the said railroad company be and hereby are allowed the free use of so much of the public square as may be necessary upon which to construct a passenger depot, the same being subject to such regulation and restrictions as the president and trustees may hereafter see fit to impose.

Today we can hardly suppose what might have happened if that proposition had been accepted. The beautiful Broad street of today would not be in existence and to make room for the depot, on the public square, which is now being erected would, of course, entirely change the map of the city. We may wonder how little thought was, at that time, given to the future. Instead of a tract of land of the size of the public square being used for depot purposes, we now have Burlington company occupying several hundred acres for depot grounds and switch-yards.

In 1857, a mass meeting of the citizens of Galesburg called upon the city council to subscribe $30,000 to the stock of the Alton & Rock Island road, which when amended with a provision that the railroad actually come to Galesburg, was passed. In the summer of 1857, an election was held in the city of Galesburg, at which it was voted that the city subscribe $35,000 for the stock of the Alton & Rock Island R. R. The number of votes in the affirmative was 500, the number against, 1. Later in May 1870, the council voted to call a special election to vote upon the proposition of the city taking $100,000 stock of the proposed Court Creek Railroad company, which, of course, never materialized.

CITY BUILDINGS

The city of Galesburg never owned a city hall or fire department buildings until recently. They had a building on Prairie street that answered the purpose. It owned a lot on Cherry street that answered for a city prison, but in 1895 action was taken that has resulted in a very fine improvement.

Alderman Griffith on June 19, 1905, moved that it be the order of the council that the finance committee and city attorney draft an ordinance for the balance of $70,000 city bonds, and be used for the purchase of site and erecting city hall, police and patrol stations and fire department building.

On July 3, 1905, Alderman Griffith presented an ordinance in accordance with the foregoing motion. On July 17, the building committee recommended that plans be drawn by J. G. Beadle for the fire station, police and patrol stations, which was adopted, that plans of Architect William Wolfe for the city hall be adopted.

The contract for the fire station was let to Peter T. Olson, for $27,373, including the building and all fixtures, except heating; the construction of the city prison was let to P. T. Olson, for $11,227, including all fixtures, except cages, iron doors, and fixtures belonging thereto, and the patrol station was let to M. E. Sweeney, for $7,900, including all fixtures.

On September 20, it was ordered that the contract for the new city hall be let to Davidson & Rundquist, for $34,000, except marble work, hardware, steam-heating and gas fixtures.

These buildings were all completed and are now in excellent shape.

The first meeting held in the new council chamber was in Aug. 6, 1906.

LIBRARY BUILDING

Soon after the city assumed the care and responsibility for the upkeep of a Young Men's Library Association, and opened it, for the people, as a free public library, the movement for a new library building began.

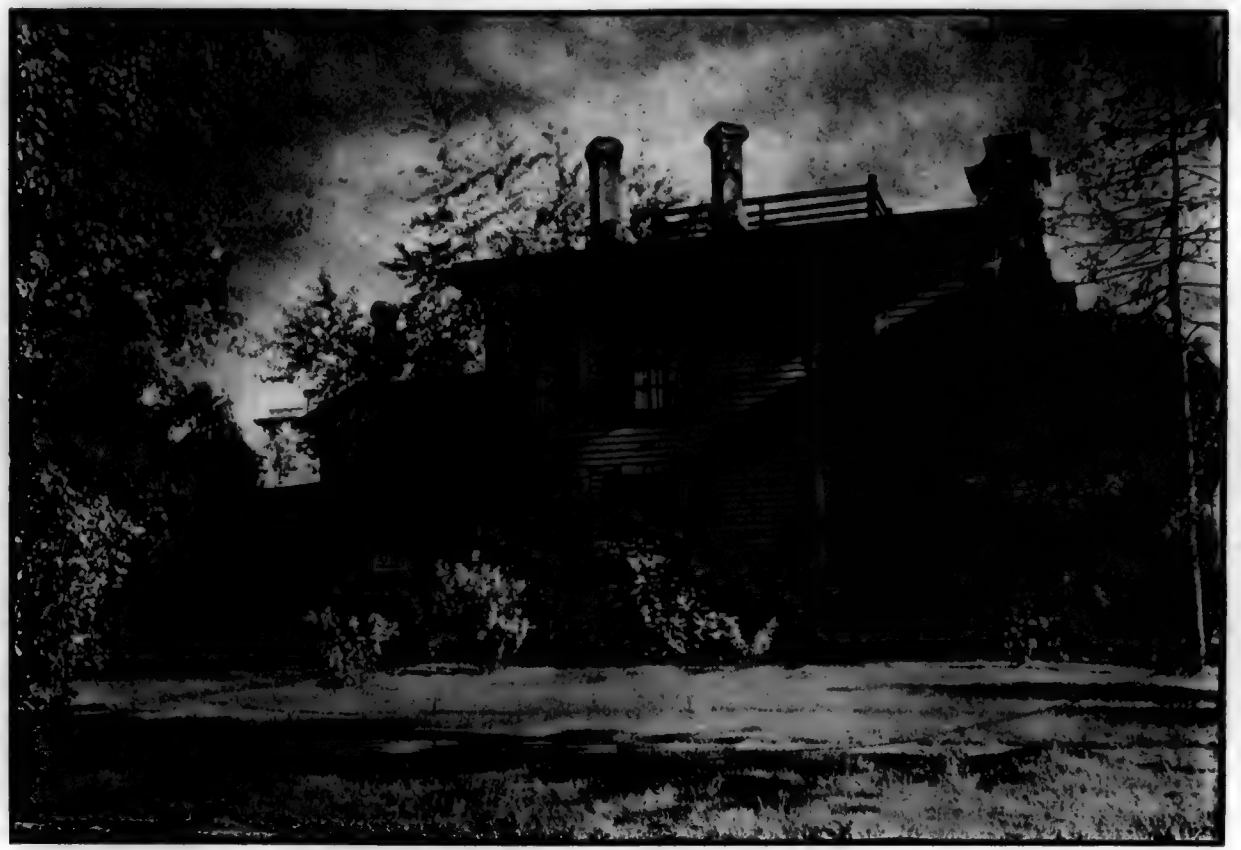
On June 5, 1882, Hon. T. J. Hale appeared before the council and stated that the library board desired to secure the consent of the majority of the voters of the city for an additional appropriation for the construction of a library building.

Three days later, Alderman Boggs offered a resolution that it is the sense of the council that if a majority of the voters petition this council for an appropriation for a library building, this council will appropriate $5,000. Nothing was accomplished at that time.

On February 5, 1894, Alderman Mack introduced preamble and resolution suggesting to the directors of the public library the making of plans and the adoption of such measures as are required by law for the erection of a public library building in the city of Galesburg, and that the same be presented to the city council as soon as possible for consideration, which was adopted.

On July 16, 1894, the finance committee presented to the council a copy of the record of the board of directors, of the public library, for adoption, providing for a public library building in the city of Galesburg, together with the estimate that the cost of grounds and building, including shelving, racks, table, etc., etc., shall be the sum of $50,000, and that the board has determined that the time over which the collections of the costs of said building shall be spread be four years, thus collecting $12,500 per annum. The record was approved and adopted.

On April 22, 1895, the first installment of $12,500, was appropriated for the library. The full amount voted by the council was collected and a building begun in the fall of 1900.



The library board called upon Mr. Andrew Carnegie for a gift of $50,000 for the library building, which in February, 1901, was promised on condition that the city agreed to raise $5,000 annually for the keeping up of the library, and further to furnish a proper building site. This the council promptly responded to in the affirmative.

A location for the library building had been purchased out of the first moneys received for that purpose, situated at the corner of Ferris and Prairie streets. This location was not thought desirable by the board of directors in the year 1899, and a new location was selected and purchased at the corner of Broad and Simmons streets where it now stands. The former location was regarded as too far from the public schools and the ground was not considered large enough. The present building is exactly the same size as the first lot that was purchased, and contrary to expectations, the patronage of the library has been such that a movement for enlargement will probably begin in the near future.

There are today in the public library about 40,000 volumes. The annual expenditure for magazines and newspapers is about $400. The number of people employed at the library is eight. The number of books delivered and used in reference work is about 150,000 annually.

WORK HOUSE

The question of putting petty criminals at work has been before the city council of Galesburg, as well as the board of supervisors of Knox county, for a good many years. The two boards have had several conventions through their respective committees to bring about some arrangement whereby the petty criminals of the two jurisdictions could be put to work. First, to pay their fines, and second it was believed in both boards that it was vastly better for the man to set him to work than to keep him in idleness. The matter seems first to have come before the council on August 3, 1875, when a resolution to make all able-bodied men work out their fines was passed. It will be found from the history of the county that the question was up several times after that, before anything definite was really accomplished.

On September 7, 1909, the mayor appointed a police committee as a special committee to confer with a similar committee appointed by the board of supervisors, to consider the question of maintaining a stone pile for the use of the county and the city.

The next action on the part of the city was June 5, 1911, when Alderman Gretta introduced an ordinance providing for the employment of persons committed to the city prison for non-payment of fines for violation of city ordinances. This ordinance was passed with a vote of 14 yeas.

On June 19, 1911, Alderman McFarland reported that he had secured option on a piece of land at the intersection of Main and Henderson streets for thirty days. He moved that the city purchase the same and that the city clerk and mayor be authorized to execute proper papers. Motion carried.

On June 19, 1911, Alderman Gretta from the special committee on rock pile, moved that the city clerk be authorized to issue a warrant in payment of the city's share of the property (bought for a rock pile jointly between the county and the city), on the direction of the police committee. This vote was carried. From this it is seen that the question so long occupying the minds of the board of supervisors and the city council has been solved.

SALOON LICENSE

Few questions have occupied the minds of the city council of the city of Galesburg more continuously than the saloon question, and a brief account of this matter will probably be interesting.

In 1855, on March 7, the matter was brought before the council and the attorney was requested to draw an ordinance declaring liquor shops, dram shops, etc., of such character, a nuisance. An ordinance was presented and adopted on June 20, 1855, providing "that no person shall within the limits of said town be permitted to sell or offer for sale or give away any spirituous or fermented liquors, any whiskey, rum, gin, brandy, wine, ale, beer, porter or cider, any measures of said liquors or any alcoholic imitation of any of said liquors except for medicinal purposes under the direction of a practicing physician, or for mechanical purposes without having obtained a license to keep a grocery."

The following instance shows how the foregoing provision was lived up to.

On Nov. 13, 1855, it seems that a barrel of liquor had been taken upon an execution to satisfy a fine against certain parties for committing an assault and affray within the corporation of Galesburg. The liquor was to be sold. The president of the corporation was instructed and authorized to purchase the said whiskey and destroy the same.

On May 12, 1856, Mr. Young made application for a license to sell liquor, whereupon it was voted to retain Messrs. Smith and Ford as attorneys for the corporation and that they be instructed to prosecute all persons being complained of for selling liquor in violation of law. The petition was laid upon the table August 5, 1856, but was again considered and granted Aug. 11, 1856.

In August, 1856, an ordinance was passed providing that any person found intoxicated within the city shall be deemed a nuisance.

On May 11, 1857, an ordinance against the sale of liquor and gaming was introduced and unanimously adopted. The presence of both of said misdemeanors was declared a nuisance.

Mr. S. A. Kingsbury who had been elected city attorney was asked by the city council, on Sept. 14, 1857, to resign because he had not used due diligence in prosecuting to conviction persons violating the ordinances of the city.

In 1883, the Burlington railroad people were about to begin the construction of a new passenger depot upon block 61, and they asked that lawful means be taken to prevent the establishment of a saloon within two blocks of the depot.

In February, 1888, in compliance with a request from the president and secretary of the W. C. T. U., the police committee recommended the passage of resolutions giving the people of Galesburg the privilege of voting for or against the license of saloons. The result of the election was a majority of votes in favor of license.

A vote upon the question of local option was taken in the spring of 1908. It carried by between 600 and 700 majority. Another vote was taken in the spring of 1910, and local option again carried by something over 300 majority. The same question was submitted to the voters of the city in the spring election of 1912, and resulted in a majority between 200 and 300 in favor of license.

GENERAL IMPROVEMENTS

There has always been an influence at work in the city of Galesburg that made for better conditions, the same as is felt in all cities, and under this head it is proposed briefly to state a few things that have been attempted by the council to produce conditions that may be properly classed under the head of general improvements.

On August 16, 1851, an ordinance was passed by the village trustees, removing all slaughter houses beyond the limits of the city, provided that if the business be carried on within the city, certain parts of the animals slaughtered must be buried two feet beneath the surface of the ground.

In 1851, a resolution was passed calling for a meeting of the citizens at Palmer A. Conger's tavern to consider the propriety of raising a tax for the improvement of the town. At the same meeting an application was made for a permit to the Robinson family to perform within the city. This was probably in the early days of the great Robinson circus.

The tolling of the church bell was prohibited in 1856, on the occurrence of any death.

In April, 1857, Knox college asked that Tompkins street between Broad and Cherry, be closed. There were remonstrances against this petition and it was denied in consequence of no power in the city council to grant it. Of course it is plain to see why the college made this request to close Tompkins street as it would enlarge the area of ground that could be devoted to park purposes.

In the same year the city surveyor was asked to establish street grades. Also a board of health was formed and their duties prescribed by ordinance.

All these arrangements were in accordance with a certain desire for that form of improvement that would touch each individual and where it was calculated to raise the general standard of thought and feeling on the part of the people of the city.

After the coming of the railroad, it was found that railroad time differed somewhat from local time and adoption of railroad time was recommended by the mayor and clerk and they also recommended an appropriation of $50.00 for ringing the bell of the first church at 12 o'clock M. This, of course, was done to enable people to keep up their time in harmony with the railroad time. The recommendation was not concurred in.

In March, 1859, the city council closed that part of Broad street passing through the park between Tompkins and South streets. This was a very proper act on the part of the city. It permits the maintenance of a very beautiful park and court house grounds, and traffic through that part of the city would not improve appearances.

In 1864, a petition signed by a number of citizens was presented to the city council and embracing quite another thing. It was asked that the city council favor the enterprise for introducing gas into the city of Galesburg. The petition was referred to a committee to report at the next meeting. The committee reported that they could not obtain said information on the subject, such as would warrant them in recommending its introduction, but the committee would be glad to hold a conference with the company proposing its introduction.

On July 18, 1866, the council passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Galesburg Gas Light & Coke Co., be permitted to erect works and buildings on block 9, of this city, for the purpose of manufacturing gas and coke and grant to said company all privileges usually granted by other cities to gas light and coke companies.

The resolution was passed. Here is still another industry of considerable propriety that was favored.

On April 12, 1860, Mr. G. Peterson was granted the privilege of erecting a tannery on Cedar Fork, between Broad and Cedar streets, on condition that he kept it nice and clean and free from reasonable objections of citizens in the neighborhood.

Later in the year 1877, there began an effort to make improvements in our streets, which has resulted in the paving with brick of so much of our city. Alderman Sanderson moved that Main street improvements be proceeded with on a gravel basis and that the city engineer be instructed to report estimates of the cost of improving the street in that manner and that cost of curb stones and good substantial gutters be included. An ordinance was passed on September 1, providing for the improvement of Main street with gravel, from the public square to Kellogg street. Following this improvement came the improvement of Cherry and Prairie streets, with gravel which, in a few years, was succeeded by brick.

The installation of free delivery of mail in the city of Galesburg necessitated the posting of street names and house numbers and a communication from the postmaster general to Postmaster Carr, of Feb. 24, 1883, encouraged the city authorities to complete this work as quickly as possible preparatory to the establishment of free postal delivery, April 1, next.

The question of street lighting was considered in June, 1883, and on the 8th of June an ordinance was passed by unanimous vote providing for the lighting of the streets by electricity.

In February, 1906, it was voted to buy 78 acres of the Blue Farm at $115, as a suburban park for the city of Galesburg, later something like 12 acres more was purchased. It has been thought by many that this was an act of useless extravagance on the part of the city. It it probable, however, that in time not only this act of the council will be heartily endorsed but that other places will yet be selected and purchased for park purposes.

It will be seen from the article in this history, upon the subject of the public parks, that Galesburg is very much behind on that question, and that the cities of the United States are generally poorly provided with places for the recreation of the public. It goes without saying that the taste for matters of that kind is constantly increasing and that in the not distant future the cities of America will be well provided with parks for the recreation and pleasure of their people.

THE GALESBURG HOSPITAL

The Galesburg Hospital was founded in 1891, and each year since then has seen it expand in usefulness. It is situated on high and well drained premises on North Seminary street in a quite part of the city, and yet within a few blocks of the business center, and reached by street cars. Its environments are all that could be desired. It is under the management of a board of fifteen directors, chartered by the state, and with the mayor of the city as a member ex-officio.

It has been admitted to state registration as a well equipped and well managed institution.

Characteristics of the hospital are the abundance of light and air, the excellent ventilation, for every room is an outside room, and the modern type of all the conveniences.

FOR WHOM MAINTAINED

The hospital is maintained for the reception and medical treatment of the sick and injured and disabled of all classes of persons except those having contagious diseases, and to maintain a training school for nurses. Since its erection many hundreds of patients have been successfully treated at this hospital and it was never so well equipped and efficiently administered as at present. It is prepared to care for emergency cases of all descriptions.

GROWTH OF THE INSTITUTION.

During the last two years the capacity of the hospital has been increased by a handsome new wing and a home for the nurses. This new wing is practically fireproof, the floors being of concrete, and the heating plant is in the fireproof basement of this addition contributing much to the safety of the structure. The home for the nurses is built with special reference to their comfort.

The main building was erected in 1891, and later the south wing was built with the hope that this would meet the increasing demand. Within a few years the capacity was found inadequate, which led to the erection of the new addition, along lines that included the latest ideas of hospital construction. The entire building is modern and furnished with all the modern conveniences. It has a capacity for one hundred beds, including fifty private rooms. It is provided with an electric elevator and is lighted with electricity. A sun room is one of the features. For male patients convalescing there is a large, well lighted, comfortable lounging room.

THE TRAINING SCHOOL FOR NURSES

This department of the hospital is governed by a joint committee from the board of trustees and the hospital staff. The directress of nurses has immediate control and direction of the nurses, subject to the general authority of the superintendent of the hospital. Her authority extends over all that pertains to the discipline and duties of the nurses and pupils both in the hospital and the home, and to their conduct at all times, as well as their instruction.

The home for pupil nurses occupies the extreme north wing of the last addition to the hospital building. The rooms are well lighted and heated and comfortably furnished. On the eastern exposure of this wing fronts the nurses' parlor, affording a beautiful furnished room for recreation and the reception of friends. This portion of the building is connected with the hospital by corridors, but otherwise is a separate part of the institution.

The school numbers about thirty pupils divided into preparatory, junior, intermediate, and senior classes.

Candidates for admission must be between twenty and thirty-five years of age, in good general health, free from physical deformities, and must have a high school education or its equivalent. Married women are not accepted in the training school.

The full term is three years, of which three months are devoted to preparatory work. All pupils must complete the full term and must devote their whole time to the work, and must not allow outside interests to interfere in any way. Any time that may be lost, except in vacations, must be made up at the end of the term. In sickness, nurses are cared for by the hospital and attended by the hospital staff so long as they remain at the hospital.

The school year begins the first Monday in October and ends the last Friday in May. The course is comprehensive, and during the term five lectures a week are given by the different members of the hospital staff, as well as the lectures and demonstrations given by the superintendent, directress of nurses, and the surgical nurse. Lectures on special subjects are also given at stated intervals during the year. Practical and bedside instruction is given by the directress and surgical nurse. Practical instruction in diets is given by the superintendent.

Pupil nurses receive no salary during their period of training, but after the probation period of two months is passed an allowance of $5.00 per month is made to each nurse for the purpose of supplying means for the purchase of uniforms, books, etc.

Hours for recreation are provided for at the discretion of the directress of nurses. When practicable, two hours each week day, one afternoon each week, and three weeks' vacation each year will be allowed.

When the full term of three years is completed and the examinations satisfactorily passed, each nurse will receive a diploma. Graduate nurses are eligible, on passing the required examination, to state registration.

THE MANAGEMENT

The internal management of the institution is under the administration of a joint board representing the board of trustees and the physicians who give careful attention to all questions arising from the care of patients. The training school for nurses offers fine facilities for those desiring to master this profession, and such is the standard that the graduates are now admitted on examination to state registration. Being an incorporated institution, the hospital is subject to state inspection, and has been found well equipped and managed. The medical staff of ten physicians renders valuable assistance in the training school and along many other lines.

THE SURGICAL DEPARTMENT

The hospital is well equipped with all the appliances for successful surgical operations. It has two operating rooms, furnished with all needed instruments. Its X-ray machine is one of the best that money could purchase, and of the most modern and effective kind.

There are departments equipped with all the apparatus for thorough sterilizing. In the diet kitchen there are all the conveniences by which the nurses can prepare food suited to the patients.

A competent graduate surgical nurse is director of surgical clinics.

THE MATERNITY DEPARTMENT

One of the special features of the institution is the maternity department. The entire lower floor of the south wing is devoted to this purpose. The wards are conveniently located and admirably adapted to minister to the comforts of patients.

THE CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT

There are two children's rooms at present with eight beds and especially suited to the care of children. A children's room association has been organized for the purpose of furnishing the rooms and keeping them equipped.

The popularity of the children's wards is shown by the fact that twenty-five children were treated in them in a little over two months.

GENERAL WARDS

There are general surgical wards for men and the same for women with four beds in each.

ROOMS ARE NAMED

Many of these rooms bear the names of organizations and societies that take keen interest in the institution, such as the Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregationalist, Universalist, the Elks, the B. R. T., O. R. C. B. of L. E. Lombard, etc.

THE LAUNDRY

The hospital maintains its own laundry which is furnished with all the appliances speedily to turn out satisfactory work.

THE ALUMNAE ASSOCIATION

The training school has a large and loyal alumnae association, containing 55 members, nearly all resident.

THE OFFICERS

The trustees of the institution at the present time are Robert Chappell, of the O. T. Johnson Company; J. C. Simpson, of James C. Simpson & Company; Alvah S. Green, of the law firm of Williams, Lawrence, Welsh and Green; Mrs. G. W. Thompson, wife of Judge Thompson, of the Circuit and Appellate courts; John Lass; C. O. Lewis, formerly of the firm of Terry & Lewis; Mrs. Louise Perrin; E. R. Drake, of the firm of Kellogg Drake & Co.; C. H. Chamberlain, secretary of the Purington Paving Brick Co.; Mrs. W. D. Godfrey, formerly superintendent of the hospital; Miss Mary Scott, assistant treasurer of Knox College; Loren Stevens; Mrs. Helen Backman, Mrs. A. D. Stearns and Fred R. Jelliff, editor of the Republican-Register, with the Mayor of the City ex-officio.

The officers of the board are as follows: President, James C. Simpson; Vice President, E. R. Drake; Treasurer, C. O. Lewis; Secretary, Mrs. Jessie Irons; Superintendent, Miss Lois Eggert.

The medical staff consists of the following, with Dr. Nash as chief of staff: Drs. J. F. Percy, R. C. Matheny, G. S. Bower, E. N. Nash, J. H. Bryant, C. B. Ripley, A. F. Stotts, Clyde A. Finley, J. M. Bohan, F. G. Hall.

There were 904 cases treated at the hospital during the year 1911.

THE CITY OF KNOXVILLE

By O. L. Campbell

"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth." No more beautiful or appropriate site could well be selected than that upon which is built this historic town. Parnach Owen, by order of the County Commissioners Court laid out the town on section 28, in Knox township, in 1831. Capt. John Charles, Parry Morris, John Montgomery, Dr. Charles Hansford, John G. Sanborn, the original founders of this city were certainly men of rare, good judgment, selecting a site which could not well be improved. Located between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers on the east and west and Court Creek and Hawcreek on the north and south, gives perfect drainage, freedom from disastrous wind storms, and an altogether desirable location for a city of homes, healthful and pleasing.

On the second day of April, 1836, the clerk of the County Commissioners Court laid before the court a certificate of the president and clerk of the incorporation of the town of Knoxville in regard to said incorporation which reads as follows:

At an election of incorporation held in Knoxville on the 5th day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, the following is the state of the polls: One vote against incorporation; Twenty-four for corporation.

H. J. RUNKLE, Clerk.
SAMUEL SLOCUMB, President.

Also a certificate of the election of trustees of the said town of Knoxville, as follows, to-wit:

At an election of trustees held in the town of Knoxville on the 11th day of March, 1836, the following named persons received the number of votes opposite their names:

H. W. Higgins has sixteen votes.
J. G. Sanborn has eleven votes.
Sam'l Lyter has thirteen votes.
B. Mothershead has fifteen votes.
Chas. Hansford has sixteen votes.
John Eads has seven votes.
Wm. Taber has one vote.
G. Burkingham has four votes.

Consequently, the five first named persons are elected as Trustees of Knoxville.

H. J. RUNKLE, Clerk.
SAMUEL SLOCUMB, President

The early history of the town is of more than usual interest. Dr. Hansford, who came to Knoxville in 1832, was the county's first physician, and his daughter, Grace, was our first girl baby. Elijah T. Eads was the first boy born in the city, and John Moore Bartlett was the first boy born in the township. Capt. John Charles bought Parnach Owens' farm on the east side of the city and these broad acres, numbering nearly two thousand are still in possession of the Charles family. Harvey Montgomery owns nearly a thousand acres which were originally settled on by his father, John Montgomery. Mr. Montgomery is the oldest living child born in Knox county. This town began at once to make history. John G. Sanborn came in 1832, started a store, and during his whole life, was a live, honorable citizen. He was gathered to his fathers at a ripe old age on the day Abraham Lincoln died. He was Knoxville's first postmaster, was the first clerk of the Circuit Court, the County Court, and the County Commissioners Court. The Messrs. Henry, Eldred and Cornelius Runkle, who came in the early thirties, were a blessing to the land of their adoption, being very closely identified with the history and development of the town, from its organization, the good they did can not be forgotten as long as time lasts. Henry, among other enterprises, site which could not well be improved. Located between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers on the east and west and Court Creek and Hawcreek on the north and south, gives perfect drainage, freedom from disastrous wind storms, and an altogether desirable location for a city of homes, healthful and pleasing.

On the second day of April, 1836, the clerk of the County Commissioners Court laid before the court a certificate of the president and clerk of the incorporation of the town of Knoxville in regard to said incorporation which reads as follows:

At an election of incorporation held in Knoxville on the 5th day of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, the following is the state of the polls: One vote against incorporation; Twenty-four for corporation.

H. J. RUNKLE, Clerk.
SAMUEL SLOCUMB, President.

Also a certificate of the election of trustees of the said town of Knoxville, as follows, to-wit:

At an election of trustees held in the town of Knoxville on the 11th day of March, 1836, the following named persons received the number of votes opposite their names:

H. W. Higgins has sixteen votes.
J. G. Sanborn has eleven votes.
Sam'l Lyter has thirteen votes.
B. Mothershead has fifteen votes.
Chas. Hansford has sixteen votes.
John Eads has seven votes.
Wm. Taber has one vote.
G. Burkingham has four votes.

Consequently, the five first named persons are elected as Trustees of Knoxville.

H. J. RUNKLE, Clerk.
SAMUEL SLOCUMB, President

The early history of the town is of more than usual interest. Dr. Hansford, who came to Knoxville in 1832, was the county's first physician, and his daughter, Grace, was our first girl baby. Elijah T. Eads was the first boy born in the city, and John Moore Bartlett was the first boy born in the township. Capt. John Charles bought Parnach Owens' farm on the east side of the city and these broad acres, numbering nearly two thousand are still in possession of the Charles family. Harvey Montgomery owns nearly a thousand acres which were originally settled on by his father, John Montgomery. Mr. Montgomery is the oldest living child born in Knox county. This town began at once to make history. John G. Sanborn came in 1832, started a store, and during his whole life, was a live, honorable citizen. He was gathered to his fathers at a ripe old age on the day Abraham Lincoln died. He was Knoxville's first postmaster, was the first clerk of the Circuit Court, the County Court, and the County Commissioners Court. The Messrs. Henry, Eldred and Cornelius Runkle, who came in the early thirties, were a blessing to the land of their adoption, being very closely identified with the history and development of the town, from its organization, the good they did can not be forgotten as long as time lasts. Henry, among other enterprises, owned the first grist mill in the county. Eldred, who was identified with Henry in various enterprises for twenty years, continued the business until his death in 1865. Cornelius was for a long series of years a banker, being the first president of the Farmers National Bank. He died in 1908, full of years and honors, and greatly mourned by all.

Rev. Jacob Gum was our first minister, services being held in his own home, a two-roomed log cabin, in 1839. His grandson, Jacob D. Gum, was the first pupil enrolled in the first school taught in the township.

Daniel Fuqua, who came here in 1834 helped greatly in the work of establishing homes in this county. His children and grandchildren numbered 125 when he was gathered to his fathers in 1909. Judge Robert L. Hannaman came to Knoxville in 1836. For half a century he was a blessing to the community. Hon. James Knox, previous to his election as congressman from this district was one of our most enterprising citizens, both as a business man and official. His benefactions to St. Mary's School and St. Alban's Academy have been very large. His contribution of a splendid town clock and bell which are placed in the cupola of the public school has always been greatly appreciated. He also contributed a fund of $1,000 each for the use of the Agricultural Board and for the keeping up of the cemetery grounds.

Hon. George A. Charles, who was for seventeen years a representative of Knox township on the Board of Supervisors of Knox Township, helped largely in making this a desirable locality for those to live who followed.

Hon. John H. Lewis, who began life here as a young man, has always encouraged by liberal contributions and sound advice everything which would add to the welfare of our city and its people.

Rev. Dr. Leffingwell, rector of St. Mary's School, has done probably as much as any other citizen to sustain and promote everything which was for the betterment of this city.

These are only a few of the people who helped to found and promote the interests of Knoxville. Every householder and home-owner takes special pride in making it what it is so often called "Knoxville the Beautiful."

Knoxville is well known as a city of churches and schools. Her churches, five in number—Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Christian, Swedish Lutheran, St. Marys and St. Johns, both interior and exterior, are models of church architecture, and ample for every requirement. There are doubtless few cities of 2,000 inhabitants anywhere which excel Knoxville in the number or value of its churches. Of its schools, an extended notice is given elsewhere. St. Mary's, in its convenience, accessibility, healthful location, and all the accoutrements which make a perfect educational institution, where education ripens into true culture and broad character, is not anywhere excelled.

St. Alban's School for boys is making a name and fame for itself in the splendid education its pupils receive—a school where all the requisites of a first class educational institution are apparent—a healthful location, modern equipment, experienced teachers, and a course of study which eminently fits a boy for a life of business or advanced study.

The Knoxville public schools have ample grounds, splendid buildings, modern conveniences for study and a corps of teachers not excelled anywhere. The cost of buildings and equipment was about $50,000.

Knoxville's latest acquisition is her Old Ladies' Home, founded by Mrs. William Jones. It occupies a block in the east part of the city, and is just being completed at a cost of $100,000. It is built of vitrified brick with cement trimmings, and every modern convenience is being furnished. While the four stories include one hundred rooms, arrangements have been made for the accommodation of forty people. The chapel, dining room, reception parlors, rest and hospital rooms are all models of beauty, taste and convenience. It will be ready for occupancy in the fall of 1912.

This town is known far and wide for having within its borders one of the finest and best conducted alms houses in the country. Additions and improvements have been made from time to time, until the present valuation of the farm and buildings is about $150,000. While always under the care of the board of supervisors and the committee, Knox county has always been fortunate in the selection of its superintendents, none of whom have been more capable than the present appointee, who has managed the institution for the past twelve years with signal success.

KNOX COUNTY OLD SETTLERS' ASSOCIATION.

For a term of years, numbering nearly half a century the old settlers of Knox county have assembled in Knoxville, but it was not until 1886 that a formed constitution was adopted. At a meeting held April 3, 1867, Daniel Robertson was elected as its first president; Major Thomas McKee, vice president, and Judge R. L. Hannaman, secretary. Even at this early date, just after the close of the war of the rebellion, the aged speakers gave eloquent addresses recounting the happenings to the people of the county. Since 1885 a death roll has been kept and read each year. By a resolution of the association thirty years residence entitles one to become an old settler, so that each year the death roll is largely augmented.

BRICK MAKING.

Knox township is known everywhere because of the Purington Paving Brick Industry, located in the northwest part of the township where immense beds of shale have been discovered. This shale is a fine-grained, slaty, soft rock, resembling sandstone in appearance, and is used exclusively in the manufacture of vitrified paving brick. So great is the demand for this brick for use in paving streets and for walks, that all of the four plants in the Court Creek bottom are exclusively engaged in the manufacture of this kind of brick. Nearly half a million of dollars is invested in the four plants, and five hundred men are on the payroll. The capacity of the combined plants is nearly half a million brick per day.

CITY OF ABINGDON

By Hon. Joseph W. Latimer

The City of Abingdon is located on very high rolling ground and covers a portion of section 33 in Cedar township and a portion of section 4 in Indian Point township. The original town, comprising sixteen blocks, was laid out on section 33 in Cedar township in 1836. Frederick Snyder's Addition to Abingdon, located upon section 4, Indian Point township, was laid out in 1849. The city is named after the City of Abingdon, Maryland, the birthplace of A. D. Swartz, the founder. His wife was a Carroll, related to one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

In the early days of the town it did not make a very rapid growth. In 1855 it had acquired about five hundred inhabitants, but between 1855 and 1860 when the colleges, Hedding and Abingdon college, were located there, the population increased very rapidly. At the outbreak of the Civil War it was in a very flourishing condition and it furnished its full quota of men, who entered the service of the United States, and notwithstanding the progress of the civil war, the town continued to grow in numbers and it reached a population of one thousand to twelve hundred people. Its growth has been steady all along. In later years it became more rapid in consequence of the location of certain manufacturing enterprises that came to the city or were originally started there, and the population today is about three thousand, many, however, claiming three thousand five hundred.

The original inhabitants were very largely from Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland and Tennessee and they naturally sympathized with the southern idea in regard to the institution of slavery. As time passed on, however, these sympathies changed, especially with the men, and they gradually became anti-slavery in sentiment and some of them even became agents of the famous underground railway. Jonothan Latimer, father of the writer of this brief history, was among those who saw a better and brighter light upon the side of freedom. The women did not change their minds quite so rapidly, and his wife, who, noticing with regret the gradual change that was coming over her husband, said to him one day, "Jonothan, if you are determined to go to the devil yourself, don't take all the boys with you." This good mother, however, was as large-hearted as any of her southern sisters and it will do the reader good to search further for the generosity of soul within her by reading the article in this history on the subject of the Cumberland Presbyterian church and Cherry Grove seminary. It can be said, however, if to warm the heart with thoughts of freedom is equivalent to going to the devil, Jonothan Latimer's sons all sought the august presence of that somewhat mythical being.

HEDDING COLLEGE

This institution was chartered in 1857 under the name of Hedding Female College. It received its name from Bishop Hedding of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It was suggested by Mr. J. B. F. Chesney and heartily endorsed by other interested parties. The name was afterwards changed to Hedding College, and both boys and girls were admitted to its halls upon equal terms.

The college has, in common with all other colleges of the country, had its successes and reverses, but it has steadily maintained a high purpose and determination to reach a final success. At the present time it has an attendance of about two hundred, and there is a strong movement for a greater endowment and larger attendance. The outlook is brighter than ever before. There is a determination on the part of the denomination which is behind it, and the people of Abingdon, to bring it to the front and place it upon an enduring basis.

President Walter D. Agnew has undertaken this work with a spirit that will surely win. He has accomplished his first point, the raising of $50,000 toward the endowment. This added to $50,000 heretofore raised completes the $100,000 required to be held before the end of the year 1912. Rev. Agnew will raise another $100,000 before the end of the year 1916, which, when accomplished, places Hedding upon the basis of a college authorized to confer degrees and claim all rights belonging to a fully equipped college and without which it would have to work upon the grade of an academy.

Murphy, J. C. Latimer, John Miller, George Price, S. H. Richey, Jesse Purdue and others. This was a private enterprise at first. It was afterwards taken up by the Christian church and carried forward successfully for about twenty-five years. At one time it had three hundred or four hundred students, but owing to some local dissensions, it succumbed and the influences of the church took the educational center to Eureka, Illinois.

THE PROTESTANT METHODIST CHURCH

The various religious denominations have been written up by others under their respective names, but it is probable that the Protestant Methodist denomination has been overlooked. This denomination at one time was very strong in this vicinity. At one time they owned the finest church edifice in the city of Abingdon. They had societies throughout this section of the county and their work was the most militant and progressive of almost any denomination in the county at that period.

It is somewhat difficult to state exactly the cause of the disappearance of this denomination. Their inclination was to erect chapels and other places of worship in the country and this is always at a disadvantage, as the communicants have to go a long distance to attend worship, and it is also true that the members gradually shifted to Congregationalism, and it is quite probable that these two causes finally led to the abandonment of that particular church in Knox county.

INDUSTRIES

We have spoken of the industries of Abingdon which have led to its growth in recent years. A list of those industries with the number of men employed will indicate very clearly how much Abingdon owes to her industries.

First we will speak of the hand industries that existed here years ago and which have been driven out by the invention and use of machinery. In the 40's and 50's J. B. F. Chesney manufactured plows, which were celebrated throughout this section of the country. Also Jonothan Latimer built carriages and buggies in the early days.

As an example of an early pioneer store, we cannot think of anything better than that of Jonothan Latimer, afterwards Latimer and Meeks, that was located in the City of Abingdon, under one roof employing shoemaker, tailor and milliner. This store kept dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, hardware, meats cured by themselves, a small variety of drugs; they bought and sold cattle, hogs, sheep and all the products of the farm. There were two ways in which they disposed of their hogs, of which they often owned several thousand taken in exchange for goods sold during the year. They would either slaughter them on the farm and haul their carcasses to Copperas Landing on the Illinois river, or drive them on foot to the same shipping point. Generally the return wagons would be loaded with goods to be again traded to the farmer for his farm products, and generally it may be stated that everything received by these traders from the farmers was disposed of at Copperas Landing, as aforesaid. From there of course they were shipped by boat to the larger cities, mostly St. Louis. In other instances the meat that was slaughtered would be packed in barrels, salted and shipped in this way. At one time there was packed in a store house, standing on the corner of Main and Martin streets, cured meats waiting for disposition. The store house burned down and the entire contents became a total loss, amounting to about $10,000.

The industries which are in existence today are the following:

Abingdon Paving Brick & Tile Co.	25 men
Abingdon Wagon Co.	165-175
Abingdon Sanitary Mfg. Co.	135-150
American Sanitary Mfg. Co.	135-150
Globe Mfg. Co.	150 men and women
Abingdon Shirt and Overall Co.	50 men and women
Novelty Mfg. Co.	15
Abingdon Trap Co.	20 men and women
Abingdon Cement Tile Works	8 men and women
Abingdon Silo Co.	10 men
Spring Handle Co.	8 men
Spies Mfg. Co.	40 men
Cigar factory	5 men
Perfection Butter Separator Co.	12 men
Blair's Planing Mill	6 men
Abingdon Ice Cream Co.	6
Abingdon Butter Co.	5

These industries are believed to be in a very prosperous condition, and there are indications of their steady growth. There was a factory known as the Animal Trap Factory which removed from Abingdon to the State of Pennsylvania about six years ago. The building which they occupied has been divided and remodeled and today is occupied by the Abingdon Trap Factory and the Spring Handle Co.

SOCIAL AND CIVIC ORGANIZATIONS

Abingdon has a live commercial club which is unceasing in its efforts to advance the interests of Abingdon and all organizations within it designed to make it a greater Abingdon.

The following is a list of organizations that are active in the city: G. A. R., Odd Fellows, Rebekahs, Modern Woodmen, Masons, Eastern Star, Knights of Pythias, Court of Honor, Ladies of Grand Army.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

The Illinois Opera House and the Merchants' Hotel of Abingdon are both fine structures. Probably nothing better in the line can be found in this part of the state in a town of the size of Abingdon.

CEMETERY

Abingdon cemetery contains the bodies of sixteen soldiers who fought in the War of 1812: Jacob West, James Strain, William Crow, Thales Givens, Abraham

Swartz, Cannon, Basey, Israel Marshall and others, and one that saw something of the Revolutionary War, although small at the time. Joseph Latimer saw the burning of New London, Connecticut, by Benedict Arnold after Arnold went over to the British forces.

HENDERSON TOWNSHIP

By S. H. McMURTRY

In writing the early history of this particular locality, one is obliged to ignore much that must naturally come in other parts of this history. We find we have to tell the history of the state or the history of the county, not the history of Henderson township. Take the important figures in the history of this region during its earlier period and you will find that in nearly every instance they do not belong particularly to Henderson, but to the greater areas of which this place is but a small part, to the State of Illinois, and the County of Knox.

The consciousness of the distinct personality of this locality in the early history of our state and county arouses in us a feeling of pride in our past, because our earliest settlers exercised a great influence that has been of great value to humanity. The future of Knox county and Henderson in no small part lay in the hands of those early pioneers and those who were to follow them. A future full of hardships but also full of hope and aspirations.

The question naturally arises, Whence came the first settlers? What conditions drove them to face the hardships and privations to the frontier to make new homes?

When we consider that, Daniel Robertson, the first settler in Henderson township, which was also the first settlement in Knox county, did not come until 1828, when Illinois had been a state ten years, one naturally asks, Why was it that a locality full of possibilities was not settled at an earlier date? The answers are not so difficult when we investigate the conditions that surrounded our earlier population. There were many influences to retard immigration; the actual opening of land offices, the promised land sales, the extinguishing of Indian titles, the limited means of travel, and others no less important.

On the Ohio river and its branches in rafts, or along its banks by covered wagons, on horseback or by foot, came the immigrants who were to settle Henderson. They came from the south and east. Conditions in Kentucky and other southern states slowly drove the small farmer to emigrate.

To us of the third generation who view these fertile fields of grain in every direction and know of the great wealth above and below the ground, it seems strange there was not a rush of settlers into this region in spite of the natural inference that the land that could not produce trees must be worthless as farm land, which has proved in the end to be the richest possession of our "Prairie State."

The early settlers of Henderson invariably located in the timber or along its border—This is not so strange when we consider that these pioneers mostly had been brought up in the shelter of the woods. This nearness to the timber was an advantage in many ways—It furnished material for their log houses, fuel for their fireplaces, meat for their food and shelter from the fierce cold winds in winter, which often caused a great deal of suffering. The first settlers were fond of hunting and many interesting stories are told of them in quest of wild turkey, prairie chicken and deer.

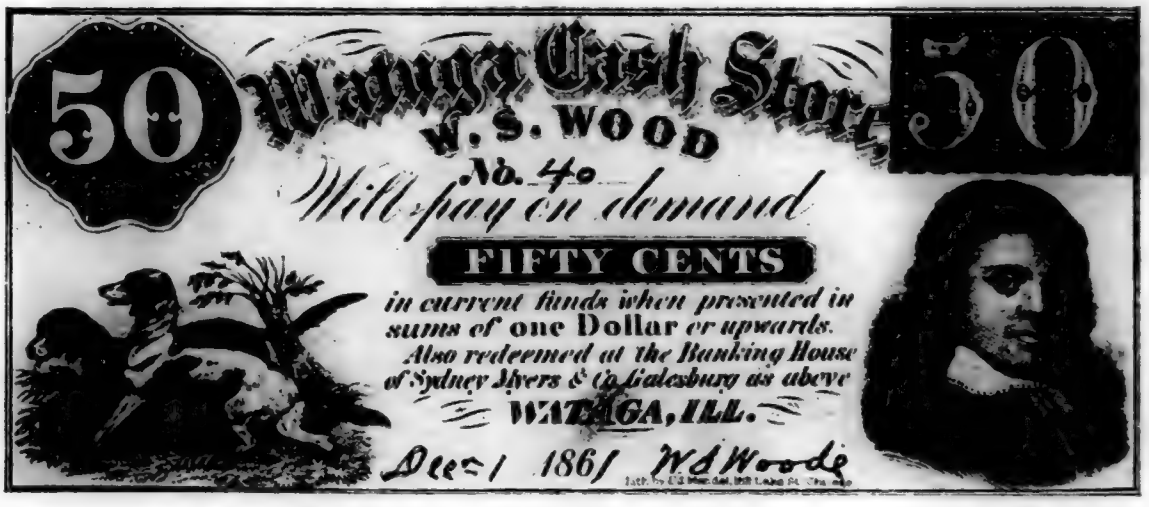
Henderson was the first township in Knox county to be settled by white men. It is well watered by the branches which make up the head waters of Henderson river. Along these branches originally stood one of the finest groves of timber to be found anywhere in Illinois. Here was a favorite place for Indians, who had extensive fields of corn on sections 23 and 26, south of the Village of Henderson. These Indians were friendly and remained till the breaking out of the Black Hawk war, when they left without doing any serious harm. In February, 1828, Daniel Robertson came and settled first on section 15. But this land was claimed by a speculator and Mr. Robertson gave it up and settled on the southwest corner of section 11, where he lived most of his life. His brother, Alexander, came in a short time and settled on section 2, where he died in 1853. During the spring and summer, others came, among them were Jacob Gum, a Baptist minister, who preached the first sermon in 1829, at the residence of his son, John B. Gum, on section 32. This two-room log cabin was the first county court house. Here the first circuit court was held October 1, 1830. The judge presiding was the Hon. Richard M. Young, afterward United States Senator. Here also the first county election was held, Mr. Gum being elected the first county treasurer.

Riggs Pennington came about this time, who became one of the most prominent men of northern Illinois—Philip Hash and Chas. Hansford. These three were the first county commissioners after the actual organization in 1830—Stephen Osborn, the first sheriff—Parnac Owen, the first county surveyor—James Gum, Zephaniah Gum, whose child was the first native citizen of this settlement. Robert and Eaton Nance who settled on section 9.



The first death in Knox county was that of a young man, Philip Nance, which occurred January 9, 1829, in Henderson township, and was buried on section 9. Thomas McKee, who came the fall before, was present at his death and funeral and was instrumental in erecting a suitable stone at the grave. A few years later, the people of the vicinity of Henderson raised money and erected an iron fence around the grave.

The next year came James McMurtry with his sons, William and James, and their families, from Indiana. They came in August and settled on section 3, on a quarter they bought of Riggs Pennington, paying $1.25 per acre; but afterward had to repurchase to secure a clear title. It was on their farm, on the northeast 40 acres of section 10, that the entire neighborhood assisted in building a fort, which would protect them from the Indians, into this the surrounding families before and during the Black Hawk war would often gather. While there were often rumors of Indian uprisings and the settlers were constantly on the watch for them, they were never molested by them. A company of rangers was organized by Wm. McMurtry, who was their captain, to be ready to pursue the Indians in all directions if needed. William McMurtry became quite an active and prominent politician. He was a firm believer in the principles of the Demo-

Thomas McKee, who came the fall before, was present at his death and funeral and was instrumental in erecting a suitable stone at the grave. A few years later, the people of the vicinity of Henderson raised money and erected an iron fence around the grave.

The next year came James McMurtry with his sons, William and James, and their families, from Indiana. They came in August and settled on section 3, on a quarter they bought of Riggs Pennington, paying $1.25 per acre; but afterward had to repurchase to secure a clear title. It was on their farm, on the northeast 40 acres of section 10, that the entire neighborhood assisted in building a fort, which would protect them from the Indians, into this the surrounding families before and during the Black Hawk war would often gather. While there were often rumors of Indian uprisings and the settlers were constantly on the watch for them, they were never molested by them. A company of rangers was organized by Wm. McMurtry, who was their captain, to be ready to pursue the Indians in all directions if needed. William McMurtry became quite an active and prominent politician. He was a firm believer in the principles of the Democratic party and a friend of Stephen A. Douglas. It was largely through him that the history of Henderson is so closely connected with the early history of the county and the state. He was active in the organization of Henderson township, April 5, 1853. In 1832 he was appointed commissioner of schools and proved a most excellent officer. He was state senator for many years and in 1848 was elected lieutenant-governor of Illinois, with Governor French. His full biography occurs in this history.

In 1830 several new families joined the settlement—Furguson, the Roundtrees, the Goffs, Lewis and Davis with their families locating along the south part of the grove. The same year came Harmon Brown, from Kentucky, and settled on section 30 where he lived most of his life. Mr. Brown taught the second school, 1833, on section 31. The first school in the county was at Henderson Grove in 1830, taught in a log house by Franklin B. Barber. This primitive school was without much system gotten up by the local residents simply for the instruction of their own children in the rudiments. Here the first school district was organized in 1836 under the management of Wm. McMurtry, the first school commissioner who always took an active interest in the early schools. He sold the school lands, invested the money and advanced the educational interests of the county very much. During the years 1831-32, quite a number of families came, among these were the Ferrises who put up a steam mill on Henderson Creek. This was quite an event, and the settlers felt they now had all they needed.

The first few years the settlers had to go to Rushville for their mail, about 75 miles. In 1838, a postoffice was established in the township on section 32, and John G. Sanburn was the first postmaster.

In 1836, the first of the Galesburg colony came. They located south of the grove and built up what afterward became distinguished as Log City on section 33. This settlement was only temporary and does not strictly belong to the history of Henderson township, but more to Galesburg, where they finally settled.

Henderson township contains some of the finest farming land in the state, and many substantial dwellings have taken the place of the primitive log cabins. In fact, the whole face of the township has changed till there is scarcely a trace of the wilderness where the foundations for homes were laid by those sturdy and daring pioneers, all of whom have passed away and their places are filled by the second and third generations.

The only village in this township is Henderson on section 14. It was laid out June 11, 1835, and in 1838 was incorporated. In early days it was a flourishing place and there were great expectations for its future; but this future was not in the control of its citizens. Previous to building the railroad in 1854, which missed it a few miles, and subsequently caused its decline, it was an important place in the county and had the largest postoffice in the county, five stores, two shoeshops and four blacksmith shops. It commanded a large trade from the surrounding country. This trade was attracted to the railroad stations, the village steadily declined, until little remained. In 1886, the Rio branch of the C., B. & Q. railroad was constructed through the village and saved it from complete extinction and some improvements have recently been made.

ONTARIO TOWNSHIP

By Hugh Greig

Ontario township is, geographically speaking, a square containing twenty-three thousand acres more or less of remarkably fertile land. With the exception of considerably less than a quarter section of timber locally known as Pilot Knob, almost every acre of the township was awaiting the pioneer with his oxen and breaking plow. There are scarcely any alluvial deposits, but the dark vegetable loam commonly found on the upland prairie is everywhere in evidence, and the natural richness of the soil may be inferred from the fact that there is, in this township, land that has been continuously in crop for not less than fifty years and is still yielding a fair return.

The dark almost sandless loam is in all probability the result of plant growth and plant decay, year by year, century by century, perhaps even millennium by millennium; and the fine, variously colored, porous clays immediately beneath are an interesting study as also is the unstratified drift which is of varying thickness, and the whole deposit clearly shows that in untold ages the forces of nature were rounding and fashioning into their present forms the large, small and smaller pebbles which are countless as the grains of sand by the sea shore. In the historic era only grasses intermingled with many tinted flowers carpeted our prairies. Yet there is abundant evidence to prove that in the carboniferous age gigantic tree ferns and other tropical plants grew here luxuriantly; still our coal deposits are at present not considered valuable, therefore, there is no mining going on.

The red man has left but scant evidence of his sojourn here, though the so-called Galena Trail crossed in a northwesterly direction, the extreme northerly part of the township, and in and near the timber of Pilot Knob numerous arrow points have been found, but no vestiges of even temporary habitation and no burial mounds have been observed. Thus, though they without doubt all over these prairies hunted the wild native predatory animals and also those desired for food, they found the wind-swept plain an undesirable place to pitch their tents; and we can readily believe that the shady, sheltering grove, with a nearby flowing spring, was more their hearts' desire.

EARLY SETTLERS

The first settler of whom we have any knowledge, who evidently meant to stay, was Alexander Williams, he having fenced and plowed twenty acres on the northwest quarter of section 30 in 1833, and three years afterward sold the same to I. M. Wetmore. In 1833, George W. Melton arrived and settled on section 31, which, until his death some sixty years later, was his home, and here were born and grew to manhood and womanhood a family of children; the eldest of whom, Elizabeth (subsequently Mrs. Ralph Voris), was the first white child born in Ontario township. Soon after quite a number of settlers arrived nearly all of whom came from Oneida county, New York, and even today the names sound familiar, Wetmore, Crane, Chapman, Camp, Mosher, Hollister, Savage, Powell, Hammond, Clearwater, Wikoff, Burt, Conger, Allen.

Though there was as yet no township organization, a school was built in 1839, on the northwest quarter of section 32, not of course a district school in the usual meaning, but a community school, and it is unlikely that it was equipped with all the modern conveniences, including individual drinking cups, but they had slates, pencils, some reading and the omnipresent spelling books, also we have reason to believe a liberal supply of fresh air. The curriculum certainly was not extensive but in the words of John Hay "They had a middling tight grip on the handful of things they knew." These early settlers did not wait for orders from those high in authority to constitute themselves a body politic. It may be justly said that they inherited a knowledge of self-government, for were they not the children, or children's children, of those thrifty, hardy, self-reliant New Englanders who had journeyed through the trackless forest from the Massachusetts or Connecticut home and again, near the head waters of the Mohawk with undaunted courage and unremitting toil, made new homes for themselves and their descendants. But though new homes, they held fast the old but unexcelled system of local self-government which is the basis of all that is best in American civil life. And in order that such ideas should become more effectively practical, the scattered settlers came together at the school house on April 5th, 1853, and having chosen I. M. Wetmore moderator, and W. J. Savage, clerk, they organized the township of Ontario and forthwith proceeded to elect a corps of township officials, the list is as follows:

Supervisor, E. Crane.
Assessor, J. Burt.
Town clerk, W. J. Savage.
Collector, E. C. Brott.
Overseer of the poor, T. F. P. Wetmore.
Commissioners of highways, G. W. Melton, J. Hammond, J. Powell.
Constables, E. C. Brott, J. W. Crane.

Justices of the peace, E. Chapman, S. E. Mosher, and the following named persons, in the order given, have served as supervisors from the close of the term of E. Crane, until now: J. Hammond, W. B. LeBaron, J. Hammond, W. B. LeBaron, A. S. Curtis, O. Beadle, A. S. Curtis, O. Beadle, E. Crane, A. S. Curtis, G. L. Stephenson, O. L. Fay, G. E. Fredericks, Hugh Greig.

The school house referred to was also the religious center of the community, and services were maintained with fair regularity by ministers of different denominations. However, the first church organization was effected by the Presbyterians, in 1840, the preaching alternating between Henderson and the Ontario school house. This society long since ceased to be. There are, however, still two rural churches in the township, the Congregational church on section 30, the other, the Christian church is situated on section 1. Both organizations are numerically weak. One chief cause of the lessening attendance at religious services in our rural churches is the immense change that has taken place in the nationality of the population, for whereas, the first settlers came from where they might have spoken English as the mother tongue, while today nearly, if not quite half, of our people use as their vernacular, the Swedish language—and though these people become American in many ways, even, especially in business matters, using our language, yet in their religious affiliations and in their social intercourse, having the advantage of numbers they can and do mingle very largely, though, not exclusively, with those of kindred speech. So that, until the passing of the greater number of those born in the old land, the land of Odin and Thor we cannot expect them to be in thought, in ideas, in speech, wholly truly American.

But, and we rejoice that such is the fact, no people of European descent can be among us for many generations without wholly ceasing to be in any sense European, and the coming historian may be favored to record the fact that the inhabitants of Ontario township foregather in business, in pleasure, socially, politically, religiously animated with one dominating purpose, and that purpose the all around betterment of all the people.

CITY OF ONEIDA

By Hugh Greig

On September 1st, 1854, C. F. Camp, with B. S. West and S. V. R. Holmes, platted the original village of Oneida, and although the C., B. & Q. officials had no intention of having a station at that point, C. F. Camp had quite a different opinion and as an inducement most generously donated the railway company a tract of land 500x1,000 feet, and ere the snow fell the town that was to be had a fully equipped railway station. The hamlet grew but slowly, and it was not until December, 1858, that it was incorporated as a village, and on January 7th, 1859, the following trustees were elected, viz.: C. F. Camp, H. L. Sage, J. M. Brown, J. M. Henning, W. B. LeBaron. The latter was subsequently chosen president of the board. The village gradually increased in size and in population and in 1869, feeling itself seriously cramped in many ways, an influential delegation of its citizens laid siege to the state legislature and succeeded in convincing our Solons that it had outgrown its village garments and what it now needed was a full suit of city garb; and through such and perhaps other arguments persuasion was accomplished, a special charter was granted and the stripling city's limits were so extended that more corn was grown in Oneida than in any other municipality in Illinois. It also grew wheat, oats, fruit, statesmen and numerous other products useful and useless.

It was specified in the charter that for all coming time, nowhere in all its extensive territory could intoxicating liquors be sold; therefore, no license has ever been issued to any one to open a drinking place and thus tempt the weak and unwary. The first mayor was F. G. Jelliff, and the present one is George Burt. The first school was built in 1855 and it is worthy of mention that its first teacher was Mary Allen West, who later became county superintendent of schools and in such position and others subsequently filled, she not only raised the standard of scholarship among the teachers but raised the standard of civic righteousness in every home her influence reached. This school house was used for a variety of purposes, such as itinerant shows, singing classes, political meetings, etc., etc., while on Sundays three denominations of Christian believers at different hours held religious services, and though never dedicated to the worship of God, it was to the pure in heart a Bethel indeed. The Congregational society was organized in 1852, and three years later built the church which is still under the control of the denomination.

The Presbyterian church was organized under authority of the Presbytery of Schuyler at the school house in district No. 3, in 1863, but failing to receive suitable support it was re-organized in Oneida in 1865, a church was shortly erected and was demolished by a windstorm in 1868. However, it was immediately rebuilt, and is still used by the congregation.

The Lutherans formed themselves into a society in 1863, but soon disbanded. The Universalists had a rather handsome church which was burned in 1867, was rebuilt and wrecked by a tornado. Church and society have disappeared. Baptist church and society also.

The First M. E. church was built in 1863, was torn down and a new, handsome brick structure was erected in 1909. The present school house is of brick with stone foundation and stone trimmings, was built in 1870 and is the centre of more general interest to us than any other institution in the city, or out of it, and though the attendance, for reasons well known, is slowly diminishing, there is no wish to curtail its financial support. The consensus of opinion being that by a thorough, all around education lies the main hope of civic and all other brands of righteousness. Six teachers are employed, R. C. Rennick, principal; Miss Katherine Hannon, assistant; grade teachers, Miss McBride, Miss Kline, Miss Hedman and Miss Burt.

There are in the city two grain elevators, both of which do a fair amount of business. One is known as a farmers' elevator, but as slightly more than one-half of the stock is owned by a very few individuals, is leased to themselves and is practically a privately-owned house. The other is in name and in fact a farmers' elevator, owned by more than one hundred and fifty farmers, is managed by a board of nine directors, is, and on the whole has been, a profitable investment.

Banking facilities are ample and satisfactory. The Exchange Bank, which though retaining the name, has been controlled at different times by different individuals since its beginning in the financially troublous year, 1857, is now a strong and conservatively managed institution. It became the property of A. B. Anderson and Frank Murdock in 1877 and is now known as the Oneida Exchange Bank, under the exclusive control of A. B. Anderson and son, in whose hands at this writing its resources and extent of business are greater than at any other period in its history.

The Oneida State Bank, incorporated under the law of Illinois, in 1891, is a strong, well managed concern, capital $25,000.00, surplus $30,000.00. The stock is largely owned by farmers residing in the vicinity, and any share or shares put on the market command a substantial premium, thereby showing the confidence of the community in the integrity and business sagacity of its board of directors. At the first meeting of the stockholders, A. D. Metcalf was elected president and held the same office until his death which occurred January 30th, 1912. The present officers are as follows: G. K. Pittard, president; W. D. Patty, cashier; Anna Anderson, assistant cashier.

In 1876, Arthur W. Ladd began the publication of our first newspaper which he called the Oneida News. It was not of great size and its advertising columns did not greatly remind one of similar pages in the Chicago dailies; but it briefly and accurately recorded the momentous and other happenings of the home town, and while there have been several changes in owners and editors, also changes in the name, yet with slight interruptions we have been favored above our neighbors and our deserts in having our local news spicily furnished us by our own weekly press. The present owner and editor is F. C. Krans. And the better to show our literary proclivities, it is a pleasure to put on record the fact that for many years we have seldom been without a reading club, and for quite a number of years the C. L. S. C. in its weekly meetings raised to a most appreciable degree the scholarly attainments of a class who had at one time an enrollment of twenty-six members—members of all shades of opinion on politics, religion, &c., &c., also of all ages from sixteen to seventy-five; and during the past years a small class weekly met and feasted on choice morsels culled from Browning, Shakespeare, Tennyson and last, but not least, we, in Sartor Resartus, most thoroughly enjoyed the grim sage of Chelsea, Thomas Carlyle.

The secret societies of Oneida have been numerous and on the whole, by the rank and file, well intentioned. The Masonic Order was established in 1860, and is now strong numerically, socially and helpfully. Its benefactions are carried on in such an unobtrusive way that one has to be to the manner born to know how much the right hand and the left hand doeth. The present head of the order is H. J. Sawyer. The order of the Eastern Star, which we suppose was instituted to add a certain amount of refinement to what had hitherto been a purely masculine aggregation, is in a flourishing condition. Worthy Matron, Mrs. C. Wikoff. Worthy Patron, J. H. Anderson.

The I. O. O. F. was at one time in a thriving condition but such cannot now be said. The Oneida Camp of Modern Woodmen was chartered in 1888 and from a very small beginning has outdistanced any local society in numbers, but is now in serious difficulties on account of a recent radical change in rates, and in one respect it much resembles a certain political party of today having the stand-patters and insurgents, with a prospect of a fight to a finish—of the Woodmen organization.

There was a branch of the home Forum but it has gone where such things go. The Fraternal Tribunes survive, but in a disagreeable remembrance. The main cause of the untimely decease of both societies mentioned and all others built on the same plan, is the entire lack of a stable foundation and though the edifice may be pleasing to look upon, yet when the rain of financial stringency even sprinkles the structure collapses—and great is the fall thereof.

There are two women's clubs with a total membership of more than fifty. The various studies and readings cover a wide range, including history, ancient and modern, general literature of all the ages, art, music, science, domestic and otherwise, in short, all that concerns not only women but all that is inspiring and uplifting to the community as a whole. Such clubs in Oneida are the result of a suggestion made to several women friends by Mrs. Willard Nelson, who was the first president of the first club and is now at the head of the New Century Club.

Mrs. W. V. McKie is president of the Twentieth Century Club. There is also an Oneida-Altona branch of the Knox County Free Kindergarten which holds monthly meetings and in furnishing clothing, food and money much is added to the inadequate income of this most worthy and ever-needy institution. There are at present between 60 and 78 active members. Mrs. Hugh Greig and Mrs. John M. McKie have served as president and vice president respectively since its organization.

The K. P. Lodge has had its ups and downs and at this date it is numerically and every other way in a most prosperous condition. F. S. Stephenson is its present head.

The Mystic Workers under the leadership of A. J. Roe are slowly gaining.

The Royal Neighbors is, for this vicinity, a young organization with no great numbers but the lack in that respect is more than counterbalanced by the immense enthusiasm of the members. Oracle, Miss Jessie Burt.

The citizens of Oneida, as the general appearance of the town plainly attests, have a pardonable pride in their homes and home surroundings; and the one notable beauty spot is the little park which is already the admiration of all, and as the years come and go and the treelets of today become mighty as the forest monarchs, and the young and the aged weary rest in the welcome shade, they, and every one, will see and admire not only beauty, but beauty and grandeur intermingled and all will realize that our pagan ancestors were not far amiss, when they, in the shady woodland's "dim religious light" saw a temple, in which they and we might worship God.

SPARTA TOWNSHIP

This township was organized under the township organization law, April 5, 1853. A full line of town officers were nominated and elected. T. H. Taylor was the first supervisor; Asaph DeLong, clerk; Stephen Smith, assessor; L. W. Roads, collector; D. Reed, Stephen Russell and Peter Davis, highway commissioners; Marvin Baker, Hugh Ferguson, justices of the peace; Marshall P. DeLong, constable. Mr. William Robson, whose widow resides just north of the village of Wataga, was supervisor of the township between twenty and thirty years prior to his death.

The watershed, dividing the water courses that flow into the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, extends northeast and southwest through Sparta township. In fact, it will be generally found that the C., B. & Q. R. R. right of way takes the general course of this watershed from its entrance into Knox county to Galesburg, and then south to St. Augustine, varying, of course, in places from that line.

There was formerly as fine a vein of coal found in Sparta township as almost in any locality in this state. These mines still produce coal but not in such quantities as heretofore. This industry was under the former management of J. M. Holyoke, R. M. Campbell and Peter Dolan. The fourth vein was especially sought. It was quite large, and at one time as many as fifty car loads were shipped from Wataga.

The roads of the township have always been kept in good condition.

The schools and churches are flourishing, and reference to these institutions will be found under their respective denominational headings in articles found in this volume.

VILLAGE OF WATAGA

This village was platted in 1854, by J. M. Holyoke, Silas Willard and Clark M. Greer. It was incorporated in 1863, the first election was held in September, 1863. It was re-incorporated under the general law, in 1874, with section 16 as its territory. J. M. Holyoke was the first resident, the first postmaster and the first storekeeper. George F. and David P. Niles, extensive farmers and stock-raisers, had large interests in and around Wataga. George F. Niles died some years ago, at Oak Park, Illinois, while his brother, David P., still resides on a farm two miles and a half to the southwest of the village. They, at one time, owned the flouring mill that is located in Wataga. It has since been owned by William Williamson and M. O. Williamson who introduced fine modern machinery. It is still in operation and does good work.

The churches of the village of Wataga will be spoken of in connection with their denominational headings found elsewhere in this volume.

Wataga has a Masonic lodge in flourishing condition. It also has a lodge of the Order of the Eastern Star and Odd Fellows lodge; a Rebekah lodge and a camp of Modern Woodmen.

W. S. Wood was one of the very early store keepers of the village of Wataga. In 1859 he bought a general merchandise store, which means about everything that is wanted in a country store, dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, hardware, paints and oils, farm implements, etc., etc., and in those days the general store keeper had also to receive general produce of the farm in pay for his goods.

Mr. Wood dealt largely in corn and occasionally sent his corn to Chicago, loaded it into barges or boats and shipped it to eastern markets. Corn was always taken in exchange for goods. Gold and silver soon disappeared after the war of the Rebellion began and paper money was at a fearful discount. In order to facilitate trade and the exchange of commodities, the responsible merchants put out what was called "shin plasters" for fractional currency. This script was issued in denominations of five, ten, twenty-five and fifty cent pieces, the man who issued them agreeing to redeem when presented in sums specified on the face of the script, usually one dollar. It did not constitute lawful money, but it served a very great convenience at that time and was issued in the best of good faith. Mr. Wood issued a large quantity of this money and it is understood that he redeemed every cent that was presented for redemption.

COPLEY TOWNSHIP

Copley township was named after a prominent family who at one time resided within its limits. It consists of a fertile prairie sufficiently rolling to insure good drainage. The southern part is more or less broad, probably one-fourth of its area having been original timber. It is well watered by the branches of Walnut and Court creeks, and other smaller streams.

The first settler of the township was a Mr. Berry, who located near the present village of Victoria. Matthew Herbert and Larkin Robinson came the next year. In 1839, the Scotch began to come into Copley township and settled upon some of the best lands. This movement increased until there was quite a band known as the Scotch colony. The descendants of these men are, today, nearly all men of wealth and high moral standing and elsewhere in this history will be found a very interesting account of the Gordons, Cooks, McCornicks, McKies, Leightons, etc., etc., and of their character as a people.

It has been the writer's privilege and pleasure to know many of these men and it is almost a matter of regret to note that their descendants are losing somewhat of the racial characteristics of their forefathers. They are thrifty, critical, economical, industrious and law-abiding, the same as their ancestors; in fact, they are losing nothing whatever that is valuable to them as citizens, but there is a something which is indescribable, that the "Auld Scots" had, that the Americans have not, that made them a peculiarly interesting people, and it is this something that their descendants are gradually losing. When we say that they are becoming "Americanized," it probably tells as much of the story as can be told.

What is now known as Foreman's Grove, in the north limits of the township, was inhabited by the Indians when the first settlers began to come in.

The first school in the township was taught by Miss Mary J. Smith, afterwards Mrs. John Becker, in a log schoolhouse, in the northeast part of the township.

Jeremiah Collinson owned a saw-mill, that was operated by horsepower, which he put up in 1850.

There are no large towns within Copley township, as there are no important railroads there. In 1894, a railroad was built from Wataga, through nearly the center of the township, to a mining village called Etherly. It was supposed that there were extensive coal fields in Copley and Victoria townships, and these improvements were made in order to develop these mines.

The village was laid out on section 35, in 1894, by Samuel L. Charles.

For some reason the mines above mentioned have never paid, and the town of Etherly has practically disappeared, and the railroad has since been extended to the village of Victoria.

One of the most noted churches of the township was known as the John Knox church, an account of which will be found under the articles on the Presbyterian church.

WALNUT GROVE TOWNSHIP

This township derives its name from the location of extensive groves within its limits and Walnut creek and several tributaries water extensive portions of the township. Surface and soil is therefore fine and undulated. There is but one village within the township, that is Altona.

The first white men that came were Messrs. Jones and Dehart. They built a cabin on section 31, but owing to the hostilities of the Indians, they left at the time of the Black Hawk War. The ruins of their cabin could still be seen in 1838. John Thompson was the first permanent settler, coming in 1836. He built the first frame house. One Elder M. Smith, of the Mormon Church, built a frame house in 1840, on section 15, and in 1842, several hundred of his faith had located here. They intended to build a temple but went to Hancock county upon the advice of Joseph Smith. Since their departure, settlement has been more rapid and there is found a prosperous and intelligent community now living within the township.

The first boy born in the township was John T. Poe; the first girl was Helen Ward, who married A. P. Stevens. The first marriage was between Austin Frederick and Elizabeth Finney. The first death was that of Mrs. Hinsdale, a sister of Amos Ward. She died in August, 1838.

A schoolhouse was built on the southwest quarter of section 16, in 1840, and the first teacher was Robey Tabor. E. L. Gross was another early teacher and he became a distinguished lawyer of Springfield.

The first church that was organized was a Baptist church and they made it a place upon Court creek, for worship. Elder Samuel Shaw was the organizer of this band.

The township was organized in 1853, like all of the townships in the county and Amos Ward was elected supervisor, and we find the names of Sage, Livingstone, Collinson, Allen, etc., etc., among the township officers.

VILLAGE OF ALTONA

Altona is the only village in the township. It is a station on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, sixteen miles northeast of Galesburg. It is the center of quite a fine trade and is among the most prosperous villages in the county. During the construction of a Central Military Tract railway, quite a large number of workmen camped near the woods along the railroad line, and Cyrus Willard and J. S. Chambers built a store, on land then owned by Daniel Allen, and supplied the wants of these railroad employees. This was the first building erected in Altona, and was the first and only store between Galesburg and Kewanee. Other stores were built in succeeding years, and the fact that there were no other villages near by drew the crowd, greatly to the benefit of Altona. A flouring mill was built by Nils Peterson in 1854, and in connection with it a distillery, which being unpopular, was discontinued after a year. The mill, however, was in use for quite a number of years.

Altona was platted in 1834, by John Piatt, for the heirs of John Thompson. E. B. Main and Daniel Allen laid out an addition to Altona, just northeast of the original town. At this time the place was called La Pier, but was changed to Altona at the instructions of the railroad officers. There was some confusion over the fact that the postoffice was known as Walnut Grove. In 1863, the name was changed to Reno in honor of the famous general of that name. About that time, the name Reno became decidedly unpopular, as three men of that name were lynched in Indiana. So the citizens rejected it, and they united upon the name of Altona for their village, station and postoffice.

Altona is blessed with splendid schools. The sentiment of the community favors temperance and it always was a "hot bed of abolitionists." The churches of the county have been written of so thoroughly in other places that little need be said upon the subject in this place.

The fraternal organizations of Altona consist of the Altona Forum, the Odd Fellows and the Rebekahs. There is also a Masonic lodge.

It has a fine public library which is highly prized and in constant use by the intelligent citizens.

RIO TOWNSHIP

This township is situated in the northwest corner of the county. It is well drained by Pope creek and Henderson river. Along these streams was once an abundance of timber. The soil in other parts of the township is very rich, and is claimed, by its owners, to be equal to, or better than that found in almost any other township in the county. It is certain that Rio township has very valuable land. There are, however, two railroads within the township; one running south and west to Monmouth, and the other south and east to Galesburg, which gives it special facilities for shipping all kinds of farm products. I suppose the claim, that the township has richer land than any other, is applicable to any other township in the county which has any real fine prairie land, and it is fortunate and commendable that so many of the farmers of Knox county make similar claims.

Joseph Roe is said to have been the first white man to settle in this township. His arrival was closely followed by Reece Jones and Joseph Halliday.

It was found necessary to erect some defenses during the Black Hawk War, and a stockade was constructed and called Fort Aggie in honor of Miss Cresswell.

Whitmore and Wyckoff came from Ohio, on horseback, in 1836. George W. Wier and Elsie Robertson are said to have seen in one drove more than fifty deer, in this vicinity. The names of Larkin, Robertson, Nelson and Louis Coe, Samuel Milton and P. W. Epperson are old names in the township of Rio. Thomas Marion Goff was the first white child born in the township, April 5, 1835. This part of the township was originally called North Prairie, but the citizens in 1850, when the name Rio Grande was so common, were disposed to appropriate this name for their township, but they finally determined upon the simple word Rio. The village of Rio was planted in 1871, by William Robinson, and was first called Coburg, in honor of Coe Brothers. Mr. Schroeder who now resides in Galesburg, Illinois, kept a store in Rio. The postoffice was originally called North Prairie, and Nelson Coe was the first postmaster. The business interests of the village are in competent hands and everything about it has an air of neatness and prosperity. Many of the older residents, however, are gone, either by death or removal. There is a hotel at Rio, and accommodations are very good.

Fraternally Rio township is well provided. There has always been quite a spirit of free masonry, and they have a lodge that has always stood for the best in the order. They also have a chapter of the Masonic Fraternity known as Horeb Chapter. There is an Odd Fellows fraternity, a camp of Modern Woodmen and a chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star.

VICTORIA TOWNSHIP

Victoria township although having some very fine and fertile prairies is, nevertheless, quite broken. Walnut creek and its tributaries cut the southern portions of the township, and, until recently, it was rough and heavily timbered. Beneath the surface, however, are fine veins of coal. Stock farming, in this region, has been extensively and successfully conducted.

In Victoria township, as elsewhere, the early settlers supposed that it was better to locate near the timber. This, of course, is true, when convenience to fire-wood is considered, but it did not take very many years to find out that the rich soil was prairie soil. Pioneers began to come as early as 1835, and some of them located in the timber. Deacon George H. Reynolds was the first man to build a house upon the prairie. He was postmaster of Victoria, and the first tavern keeper.

Victoria township has given education and church building due consideration, both of which were increased very early in its history, and today the township is well supplied. The first Swedish Methodist Church ever established in any country was established in the village of Victoria. It was organized December 15, 1846, by the Rev. J. J. Hedstrom, the founder of Swedish Methodism. It had but five members to start on, and today with that starting point there are five large conferences in the United States.

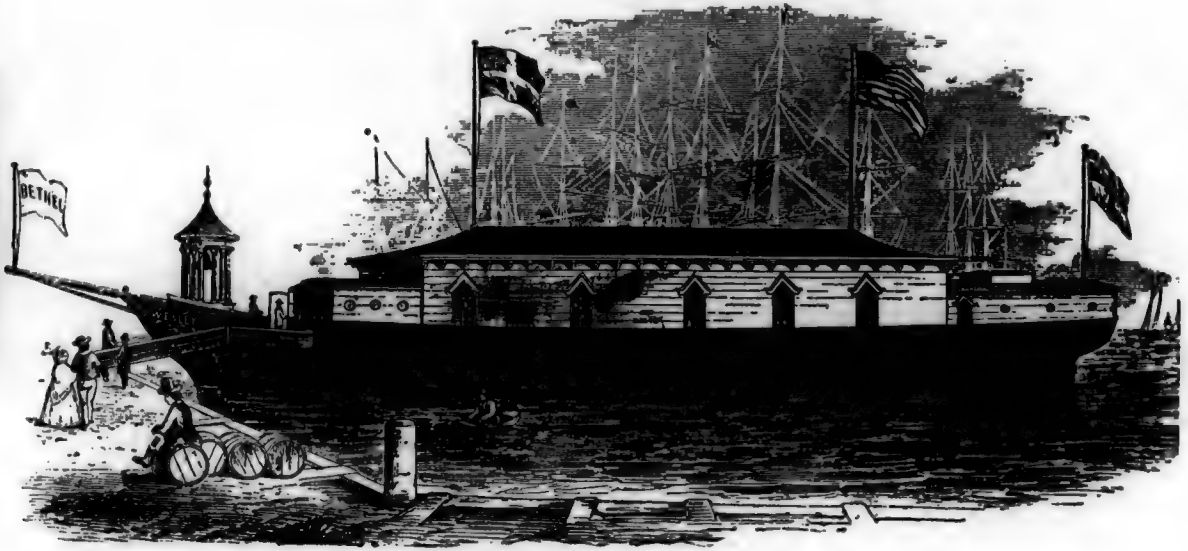
The first township officers were elected in April, 1853, at which election J. L. Jarnagin was elected supervisor; J. F. Hovell, clerk; B. Youngs, assessor; C. A. Shurtleff, collector; Alex Sornberger, overseer of the poor; A. B. Codding, Peter Van Buren and J. W. Mosher, highway commissioners; Peter Van Buren, Moses Robinson, justices of the peace; C. A. Shurtleff and Seneca Mosher, constables.

VILLAGE OF VICTORIA

The village of Victoria is today one of the neatest little villages in the county. It had no railroad for many years. It was located upon high ground, upon a beautiful prairie; and was situated partly in Copley township and partly in Victoria township. It was laid out in May, 1849. It seems that it was started about a mile and a half southeast of the present location, where the pioneers had a store, a tavern and a blacksmith shop, but the Chicago road ran through the present site and George F. Reynolds accommodated transients at his house, and the village gradually moved over to its present site and thereby the village was started before it was ever surveyed. Mr. John Becker, late of Galesburg, formerly conducted a store there and it is claimed that the postoffice distributed more papers, in proportion to the population, than any other town in the county which speaks well for the intelligence of the people.

In 1899, the Galesburg & Great Eastern Railroad was extended into the township and village and added a new impetus to business. Lumber yards, stock yards, elevators, a bank, additional business houses, were soon established. It has a good system of schools and the churches are well supported.

LYNN TOWNSHIP



This township claims a white settler about as early as any township in the county. One Michael Fraker is said to have arrived in the year 1828, and settled upon section 23. He is said to have purchased this land while he was yet in Kentucky, but he found it occupied by the Indians. The men were all absent hunting, but the women and children were upon the place. Mr. Fraker made himself at home upon the property but upon the return of the Indians they disputed his right, but he made himself very friendly and useful to them and, as he was a blacksmith and could fix their guns and, in different ways made himself serviceable, they at once took him in, kindly helped him build a cabin, but finally left him in possession of the property. The Indians made new homes at Indian creek. They returned annually at sugar-making time which they wished him to regard as purely friendly visits. In Mr. Fraker's time, there were quite a number of Indians in his neighborhood, and their trails were visible from Spoon river to the Mississippi.

There was a grove in the neighborhood which was named Fraker's Grove. Upon the east side of this grove, there was a flowing spring and the Indians made free use of it.

Mr. Fraker, being a mechanic, constructed a hand grist mill, the pull stones being made of hard-heads which he found upon the prairie. It was not of the modern kind by any means as the upper stone was turned by means of a pin set in the outer edge of the stone, and was turned by hand.

Mr. Fraker died in 1848, at the age of 79 years.

The population increased rather slowly until the arrival of the railroad. This gave them trading and shipping points that encouraged settlement and then it became more populous.

The first grist sent to a mill, that could do any amount of work, was taken by William Dunbar to Tazewell county. A person often had to wait two weeks for his turn to come to get grain in town.

Among the recreations that were indulged in, in the early times, were wolf hunts and both men and women engaged in this sport. The women went along and prepared meals of chickens, potatoes and other eatables for the tired hunters, at the close of each day.

The township was organized April 5, 1853, the same as all other townships of the county. Lynn township has never had a village that amounted to anything. In the early days, an effort was made to attract people to the south line of the township, called Centerville. This was afterwards platted and named Milroy, but that proved a failure and nothing is left to mark the spot.

PERSIFER TOWNSHIP

Persifer township is better adapted to grazing than to agriculture although quite a large portion of the surface is excellent farm land, but there is considerable bottom land which is covered by timber, and there is good timber along the streams. Its mineral resources include coal and sandstone.

Among the old settlers of the township was, John Persifer Frazer Smith, after whom the first postoffice, which was established about 1847, was named. This, in turn, gave rise to the name of the township.

This township is especially rich in its early pioneers. There were William Norris, who came in 1832; Jessie and Willis Reynolds and Beverley Young came from Kentucky; Chas. Bradford, from Ohio, and these parties settled about the year 1834, in Persifer township. R. C. Benson, E. J. Wyman, Jacob Lorance, John Spear, are also familiar names. A little later came Edmund Russell, Isaac Sherman, G. W. Mauley, James Maxey, T. D. Butt, John Colville and Caleb Reece. Hon. R. W. Miles was also an early settler in Persifer. These men have always given character to the township.

It is said that the first mill built in Knox county was built by Robert Hendrix in 1834, on Court creek, in Persifer township. The Elliott mill was built in 1840, at the north of Court creek, on Spoon river. It was designed for coarse lumber but was afterwards turned into a flouring mill. Another mill was built by Chas. Haptonstall, about 1848, on Court creek about a half mile above Appleton bridge. These mills, of course, are now no more.

Persifer has been well supplied with churches. Bethel chapel, built in 1863; Maxley chapel, Mound and Persifer belonging to the United Brethren denomination, and a Mormon church at Dahinda.

The first schoolhouse was built in 1841. Who taught the first public school, is not definitely known.

The Santa Fe railroad runs into Persifer, east and west. Along Court creek it gave rise to two nice little towns, Appleton and Dahinda.

DAHINDA

The present site of Dahinda was once an Indian village as will be learned from the article, in this history, on the Indians. For some years after the arrival of the white men, remains of their wigwams were found and there were twenty-five or thirty mounds near by which contained human bones, presumably Indian graves. Many arrow-heads and stone axes have been found, and one branch of the Galena trail passed through the township, from north to south, crossing Court creek at the point where the Appleton bridge now stands.

The first iron bridge was built in 1875, where the present Appleton now stands.

This village was laid out in 1888, by the Santa Fe road and the Land Company, and it contains about 47¾ acres. It stands on the northwest quarter of section 24, as a freight and express office and passenger station. There is a fine bridge over the Spoon river near this point.

APPLETON

This village was laid out in the same year on the southwest quarter of section 15, by those interested in the Santa Fe road. Miles Forest was the surveyor. There were freight and express offices, a store, grain elevator, lumber yard, dwellings, etc., etc. There is also a postoffice. Grain and a large quantity of stock are shipped here annually.

TRURO TOWNSHIP

This township is known as one of the two roughest townships in the county. This refers, of course, to the surface. Spoon river enters it on section 12, about two miles from the northeast corner of the township, and flows southwesterly leaving it on section 31, and takes a course of about fifteen or sixteen miles. The river has many tributaries and all of them cut the surface into ridges and valleys, and, in many places, have made a very picturesque line of scenery. The timber has been gradually disappearing and the land converted into pastures which have proved to be a great source of profit. There is a large body of good coal under the surface which furnishes an ample supply of fuel.

The first settlement was made in 1832, by John Dill. In 1833, occurred the first marriage ceremony by which Jacob Ryan and Miss Stemball were united. The first death was occasioned by the drowning in Spoon river of Mahlon Winans, a U. S. mail carrier, who attempted to swim across the river. Quite a number of ferries were started in the eastern and southeastern part of Knox county, because Spoon river flows through that portion of the county. One John Colman, started a Spoon river ferry in 1834, and it was known by his name. Afterwards it was called Trenton.

Truro township has been quite rich in Indian relics, and upon section 31 a number of graves were found. Logs had been split into halves and hollowed out for coffins, and they were placed in the forks of trees, ten to fifteen feet above the ground, where they rested, the remaining skeletons projecting above the tops. They were taken down in 1836 and given a white man's burial.

Notwithstanding the roughness of the surface, there are still level prairies, north and south of Spoon river, that have attracted prosperous farmers. The land has been well tilled, herds of cattle, sheep and horses and of well-bred hogs are common sights upon these farms.

The population is chiefly American-born citizens of English, Irish, Scotch and Swedish ancestors. People of all religious faiths, Protestants and Catholics, joined in advancing education. And there is a perfect assimilation of different nations, come through a spirit of broad charity in the matter of religious faith.

WILLIAMSFIELD

The Santa Fe railroad was built through the township of Truro in 1887, and on April 24, 1888, Williamsfield was laid out by E. P. Percell and has become one of the most prosperous towns in the county. It has graded schools and churches, banks, a printing office, etc., etc. Various lines of mercantile houses are represented which include general stores, hardware stores, meat market, lumber yards, furniture and undertaking establishments, restaurants, livery barns, barber shops, blacksmith shops, dry goods and millinery.

The Odd Fellows and Degree of Rebekah are also represented here.

HAW CREEK TOWNSHIP

The surface of this township is quite pictorial and attractive. About two-thirds of its area is fine prairie, and the remainder has been timber land. The timber was chiefly on the east and the west where the surface is more hilly, the prairie land lying between, and extending north and south across the township. Spoon river enters the township at the northeast corner and winds through the first and second tiers on the section on the east and leaves the township at the middle of section 35. There is a high ridge, constituting a watershed, extending from the middle of the north line southwesterly and south, passing into Maquon township pretty near the west line of section 31. All of the area between Spoon river and this watershed is thoroughly drained by small streams that enter into Spoon river. These streams not only drain the land well, but afford excellent stock water.

There is an underlying vein of coal through the center part and also just west of this watershed. It is from 20 to 28 inches thick and therefore cannot be profitably worked, yet more or less of it is mined for home use. Both agriculture and stock-raising are profitably carried on. The farmers are progressive and the newer knowledge in regard to farming is quickly taken up.

There are no colored people within the township. The population is almost wholly of native-born citizens, who are noted for their sobriety and industry and are universally well informed.

The first family that settled in this township, was that of Mrs. Elizabeth Gillmore Owen, a widow who was accompanied by her son, Parnach, and her daughters, from Ohio, in 1829. The neighbors were quite remote, some being in other townships. Parnach Owen was a land speculator, and his business took him from home quite a great deal. Two years after their arrival, they removed to Knoxville. The son, Parnach, was prominent in the organization of the county, and was its first official surveyor. Other families came about the same time, James Nevitt, Samuel Slocum, David Teel and David Enochs. Then came Woodford Pearce, David Housh, Joshua Burnett, Jacob Harshbarger, Linneus Richmond, William W. Dickerson, and others.

There was a well established settlement in 1834. The first sermon was preached by the noted pioneer, Rev. Peter Cartwright, in 1831. Rev. Richard Haney and Rev. William Clark were also among the early Methodist circuit riders. Susan Dempsey was the first school teacher, and her work began in 1836. A church was erected in 1864, on section 17. Prior to that time, the schoolhouses of the township were used for religious services, and a regular old-fashioned camp ground had been selected in a grove not far east of Gilson. The Methodists of the county gathered there annually for a season of religious worship, until about two years ago, when the improvements were all destroyed by fire. The real estate was then given to Hedding College of Abingdon, and has been sold.

It will be interesting to notice a little more fully the organization of the camp association. Pursuant to a notice, published in the Knox County Republican, the Knox county Methodists met in Orange chapel, September 19, 1868, for the purpose of organizing a camp ground association. Peter Godfrey, J. C. Elwell and Joshua Burnett, Jr., were elected trustees to purchase and hold land for the association. They bought of N. G. Clark, between 11 and 12 acres of ground for $474.00. On September 3, 1869, the number of trustees was increased to nine, and on October 5, 1872, another acre was purchased for $45.00. It is located on the line of the C., B. & Q. R. R., a mile southeast of Gilson, and is well adapted for the purposes for which it was purchased. The improvements have been good in the form of fences, corrals and buildings, wells have been dug, all costing about $1,500.00. The meetings begin on Tuesday, before the fourth Sunday in August, and last one week. In 1882, they began charging a gate fee for all visitors. About $800 was accumulated in the treasury with which substantial improvements were made.

In the beginning, the only available markets, for farm products, were along the Illinois and Mississippi rivers and on Lake Michigan. Grain was hauled to Chicago, the sellers bringing back merchandise for the local markets. The Peoria branch of the Burlington road now runs through the township, and affords a good market at Gilson, in the northwest, and Maquon in the south.

The township was organized in 1853, at the same time with all other townships of the county. William M. Clark was elected supervisor; Woodford Pearce, clerk; Isaac Lotts, assessor; Joseph Harshbarger, collector; Jacob Wolfe, overseer of the poor; John N. Lynn and Enoch Godfrey, justices of the peace; John Pickrel and William Lewis, constables; Milton Lotts, L. N. T. Randall and Benoni Simpkins, commissioners of highways; all good stalwart citizens.

Two villages were established within the township; one called Mechanicsburg and the other Gilson. Mechanicsburg was built first. It had a store, wagon and blacksmith shop and a postoffice which was named Haw Creek. On March 5, 1857, the postoffice was removed to Gilson and the village of Mechanicsburg fell to decay.

A large grist mill was built in an early day on section 34, on Spoon river. For many years the mill did a flourishing business. The flow of the river ceased to be regular and as the mill could be operated only a portion of the year, it has been abandoned.

In 1849, there was a great cholera scare in the township of Maquon. It was occasioned by the arrival of three immigrant families, Stanniford, Richardson and Foster. The scourge appeared shortly after their arrival and the community was considerably disturbed. It resulted in the death of Mr. Stanniford, Mrs. Fred Foster, Mrs. Thomas Richardson, William Richardson and two children. All others escaped.

This is the township in which occurred what is known as the "Rand Tragedy." In 1877, a tramp entered the residence of Woodford Pearce of Gilson, and departed with quite an assortment of personal property, including $75.00 in money. The hue and cry of theft was raised and a posse soon started in pursuit. Rand was discovered in a grove nearby. He was armed, and observing the approach of his pursuers he retreated into a corn field, firing as he fled; his shots were returned and during the conflict William Keller was shot in the ankle. The field was soon surrounded by a large number of men and boys. The tramp again took flight, firing as he ran. A horse, ridden by James Pickrel, was wounded, and the rider's knee bruised. Another horse, carrying Charles Maston and Charles Cramer, was shot and killed, and a bullet through the heart killed Charles Beldon. Shots were also exchanged with Charles McKown, at very short range. The tramp received a slight flesh wound in the arm and side, and McKown was shot through the left lung. Night coming on, the tramp made good his escape. He had cast aside his vest and shirt, and in one pocket an express receipt was found given to Frank Rand. This clew led to his ultimate capture in St. Louis, through the skillful efforts of Frank Hitchcock, the sheriff of Peoria county. Before this, however, Rand had committed another robbery near St. Elmo, Illinois, at the house of John Scholes, killing Mr. Scholes, another man, and dangerously wounding a third. When his arrest in St. Louis was attempted, he resisted and killed one policeman who was assisting in making his arrest. He was tried and convicted at Galesburg, Illinois, and sentenced to life imprisonment in Joliet penitentiary. Seven years later, he broke the warden's skull with an iron bar, and was shot by a prison guard.

GILSON

The village of Gilson was laid out July 10, 1857, on the southeast quarter of section 7, by Linneus Richmond and James Gilson. It is just on the edge of the timber of Haw creek, eleven miles from Galesburg, and is on the Peoria branch of the Burlington road. The engines, at that time, burned wood and a large trade for the sale of wood to the railroad company grew up. The trees have been cut away leaving Gilson now the appearance of a beautiful prairie village.

Gilson has a graded school and two churches. Its business is mostly confined to local trade.

ELBA TOWNSHIP

The surface of this township is beautiful and undulating. There is good natural drainage by French creek and numerous small streams which flow into it. French creek flows from northeast to southwest and there has been quite a growth of timber along its banks. Spoon river crosses the northwest corner. The soil is very fertile and adapted to the growth of grains and a large annual crop of wheat, corn and oats is harvested. Considerable hay, timothy, clover and blue grass is also reaped. Some apples, peaches and a large variety of small fruits is grown here.

There is no railroad in Elba township, but the Santa Fe line at the north, and the Burlington in the south, afford very good shipping points.

The township was organized on April 5, 1853, and a full line of town officers were chosen.

The earliest settlers have their beginning in Thomas King, in the fall of 1836, who settled upon section 2 of Elba township. John and Felix Thurman soon came, also Leonard and Darius Jones, from New York. Not long afterwards, Jacob Kightlinger with his wife arrived. Mr. Kightlinger had a large family of children and employed a private tutor to instruct them, thereby gaining time in not waiting for the establishment of a general school. He is credited also with being the builder of the first schoolhouse of the township. James Harrison Baird came from Pennsylvania in 1838. Among the later settlers came Josiah Nelson, Henry Oberholtzer, William H. Baird, Henry Potts, John Calligan, John Lindsey, Walter Bailey, Benjamin Pittman, James Catterton and others. R. G. Matthews was long a resident of this township, but finally moved to Galesburg where he held the office of sheriff for some time, and died in Galesburg. He was known as a very excellent man.

SALEM TOWNSHIP

Salem township lies in the southeast corner of Knox county. It is well watered by small streams and its natural features are beautiful. There are two ridges crossing the township known as divides, one of them entering from the east at the southeast corner of section 1 passes westward. Just north of Yates City it then curves quickly to the south and southeast passing through section 14, then turning abruptly to the west it curves and crosses the northern part of section 22 and then turns northwest and leaves the township on the north side of the town of Douglas, formerly called Summit. The waters north of that flow into French creek, and there are quite a number of little streams which, with small tributaries, cover nearly all of the county. The other divide starts in section 25 and passes northward for about one and a half miles, then turning a little north and west and leaves the township at the corner between sections 18 and 19. This is known as the French creek and Willow Watershed. It passes nearly parallel with the first divide described, and Pease branch drains the land between the two divides, and Willow creek and its branches take care of that portion of the township south of this last watershed. Parties who are interested in studying the drainage of Knox county, will do well to make frequent references to the geographical map prepared by Mr. Jelliff illustrating his article on geologic and topographical topics.

The township is well provided with railroad facilities. The Peoria division of the Burlington passes through Yates City. A branch runs to the south into Fulton county and so on to Vermont and Rushville. At Vermont it goes to the south and eastward and reaches St. Louis.

It is a delight to drive over this township. Excellent views may be obtained from almost any point upon the ridges described above.

Good belts of timber were found along the streams which have been described, most of which has been cut away.

Salem township was organized under the general law April 5, 1853. The election was held in a log schoolhouse, near Michael Egan's home, on section 29. S. S. Buffum was elected supervisor. John Sloan was one of Salem's most excellent citizens, and at one time served eight succeeding terms of one year each as supervisor of the township, and at other periods he served from one to three years. His advice was found most excellent in constructing the new court house at Galesburg.

The first settlement was made by Alexander Taylor in 1834, then came Felix and John Thurman, Henry and Avery Dalton, Solomon Sherwood, Benoni Hawkins, William Kent, John Darnell, John Haskins and Sala Blakesbee, most of whom brought their families with them. Mr. Avery Dalton is still living at Elmwood, Illinois. These early settlers brought their religious faith with them, and, from time to time, held prayer meetings at different places. In 1835 or 1836, Rev. Henry Somers visited the settlement and preached the first sermon at the home of William Kent, on section 13.

James Mason built the first saw-mill on Kickapoo creek, in section 13, in 1835. Another one was built a little later by Anderson Corbin, on section 14.

The township is well supplied with excellent bridges, mostly constructed of iron with good substantial stone abutments. The roads are in fairly good condition having been graded and dragged, but no macadam has been laid.

There is a large quantity of coal beneath the surface which has been mined for local use, from an early date, along the banks of the stream, upon the north and south sides of the township. The mines on Kickapoo and Littler's creeks are the most productive. Messrs. Pittman and Barlow, blacksmiths and farmers, of Fulton county, are said to have taken out coal from section 25, in the year 1832, which they used in their own forges.

Stock-raising is an important industry of this township. It has added a great deal to its wealth. N. G. Daughmer and son, David Corey and son, H. A. and James Sloan, E. H. Ware, Frank Runyon, A. D. Moore and R. J. McKeighan, were all successful stock-raisers.

The schools of Salem township have the benefit of a very valuable library which was started by Prof. W. L. Steel, now superintendent of the city schools of Galesburg. At that time he was the principal of the graded school in Yates City, and in September, 1878, proposed to the school board, composed of J. D. Hoyt, J. M. Taylor and L. A. Lawrence, the organization of a school and public library, to be under the control of the board, and open at all hours to pupils of the school and to the public, upon payment of a membership fee. The plan was adopted, a constitution and by-laws framed and nearly $100.00 received from a public entertainment given on Thanksgiving Day of that year. The movement was supported by the public from the first and has been regularly and systematically carried on. The library has steadily grown and, at the present time, has about 2,500 volumes of all classes of books which the young men and women of the city and township so thoroughly appreciate and use.

A postoffice was established in 1837, at a place called Middle Grove which was near what is now Uniontown.

The underground railroad had a well defined road through Salem in antebellum times and many a colored man or woman found safe passage over this road on his way to Canadian freedom.

DOUGLAS

Douglas, formerly Summit, is Salem township's second village and was laid out on the northeast corner of the northeast quarter of section 7, by W. G. Ware in October, 1856. It was surveyed by E. T. Byram.

Its existence is due to the building of the Peoria and Oquawka railroad.

The surrounding country has made it a lively trading place in general merchandise.

UNIONTOWN

This is the oldest village in the township of Salem. It was laid out by Moses Shinn in June, 1839, was surveyed and platted by George A. Charles.

It is beautifully situated in the western extremity of a high divide and overlooks a wide expanse of prairie.

It was of considerable importance in the earlier days, and was upon the original survey of the Peoria and Iowa railroads.

In addition to the usual stores and enterprises connected with a growing town in those days, it had a factory for plows and wagons, and the burning of brick was also one of its industries. A primitive shingling machine was owned by Elisha Van Pelt in 1843. Cottonwood and black walnut were the timbers generally used.

It had a school in 1843, in a frame building originally intended for a store, on the corner of the public square.

It is said to have been named from Uniontown, Portage county, in Ohio.

A later survey for the railway, in 1856, located a line about two miles further north from the town, and from that time the village rapidly declined until 1869, when the legislature vacated the plat.

CHESTNUT TOWNSHIP

Chestnut township is very rough in portions. Brush creek enters the township on section 6, flows southeast to the central line of the township then again winding to the northeast somewhat, finally flowing in a southerly direction, empties into Haw creek on section 12 and thence finds its way, through Haw creek, to Spoon river at west line of section 24. There are numerous tributaries that flow into this creek, mostly from the south. Spoon river enters the township on section 24, and winds in southwesterly direction leaving the township at about the middle of section 34. There is a divide that enters the township at the village of Hermon on section 19, and this curves to the north and then quite abruptly to the south in section 27. South of that divide there are also several quite good streams that flow south into Spoon river. This makes the northern part of the township quite rough and a portion of the southern part. The banks of these streams were originally heavy timber, most of which has been cut away. It is in one of the southern rows of townships of the county and is the second township east of the principal meridian. The soil is fertile and more than half is prairie soil. It is crossed by two lines of railroad, one running from Lewistown in Fulton county northward to Galesburg, and the other the Iowa Central. The first railroad was formerly known as the Fulton County Narrow Gauge, but it is now called the Havana branch of the C., B. & Q.

The earliest settler was Anthon Dolph from Kentucky. He came in 1833, and raised a crop, and in 1834 he became a permanent settler. The next year came John Terry from Virginia who was a justice of the peace, and performed the first marriage ceremony in the township, uniting a Mr. Gay and a Miss Cooke, who rode a long distance, to appear before the justice, upon the back of one horse. It is said that Squire Terry once united a couple who stood upon the opposite bank of Spoon river, while he performed the ceremony on the bank, the waters being too high and too tumultuous for either party to cross. The next settlers were Robert Leigh and Archibald Long, in 1836. Mr. Long raised hemp and constructed a rude factory where he manufactured his own and his neighbor's hemp into rope. For a time it was profitable and he got to be well off. Mr. Long settled on section 19, where, in 1842, he platted the village of Hermon.

Being a Methodist preacher, he soon organized a Methodist class which met regularly at his house for many years. Mr. O. P. Barton was also an early settler and was noted for his walking ability. On one occasion he walked to the land office at Quincy, one hundred miles distant, and arrived there ahead of several other parties who started on horseback at the same time. Mr. Herman Way was another pioneer and was noted as a hunter. Mr. Dolph built a house of logs in 1833, and Mr. Robert Leigh erected a brick house in 1845, which was the first brick house of the township. The old state road which ran from the southeast portion of the township in a northwesterly direction crossed Spoon river which was bridged in about 1846. It was a cumbersome affair, and was demolished and carried away by a flood in 1855.

A grave yard was started on section 3, which was used by the earlier settlers, but is no longer used for that purpose. It is, however, kept in good condition by parties living in the neighborhood.

A Mr. Howard built a mill in 1846. It was a combination mill designed for the manufacture of lumber and the grinding of corn. It was used but a few years and then abandoned. There was a saw mill on Littler's creek, on section 25, about the same time, which finally went the same road to destruction.

Wayside stores were established in Chestnut township, one by John Terry on section 16, and one by Mr. Moore on section 15. Mr. Moore's venture was unsuccessful and soon abandoned. The stock carried by Mr. Terry was also very limited.

One of the earliest taverns was kept by Jonathan Potts, on section 22, on the old state road.

Dr. Porter and Dr. Morse and Dr. Wilson, were physicians who, beginning with 1838, succeeded each other in the order named.

Dependence was placed upon a town named Troy, in Fulton county, and on Knoxville, Knox county, for postal facilities. Hermon was made a postoffice in 1848, the mail being brought from Knoxville. Mr. Massey was the first postmaster.

Township organization was not adopted until 1857, at which time Samuel Collins was elected supervisor; John Terry and David Massey, justices of the peace; Mr. Macoy, clerk; and William Graves and Freeman West, constables. A town called Harrisonville was laid out on section 23 in 1852, by Andrew J. Parker. It was upon the right bank of Spoon river, near where the present bridge crosses that stream. It never grew and the place was vacated in 1869, by act of the legislature.

HERMON VILLAGE

The village of Hermon was laid out by Archibald Long in May, 1842. It was originally named Harrisonville but the name was changed to Hermon in 1848, on the establishment of the postoffice. For a number of years it was a stirring business place, but Knoxville and Abingdon grew so rapidly with excellent railroad facilities, that it put a stop to the growth of Hermon. It is now a small village located on the Iowa Central.

INDIAN POINT TOWNSHIP

It is supposed that the first white man coming into Indian Point, for the purpose of making a home, was Azel Dorsey, who came from Cedar, in 1829. He remained but a few years. The first permanent settlement was made five years later by John B. Latimer who immigrated from Tennessee with his family, in 1834. Then came John H. Lomax and Stephen Howard from Kentucky, John Howard, Isaac and Alexander Latimer and John Crawford, in 1835. Mr. Crawford was a minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian church. In 1836 Mr. Daniel Meek purchased the home of Alexander Latimer, and with him came John Killiam. Other people came along and the list of names, including so many sturdy men, is tempting, but we cannot mention them all. Mr. Merriweather Brown and Bartlett Boydstun were among them. Mr. Brown was at one time a county commissioner. Mr. Brown's son, William A., was superintendent of the building and bridge department of the C., B. & Q. company at Galesburg. Mr. Meek was an extensive breeder of fine live stock and took great interest in public affairs. The early settlers of Indian Point encountered no Indians although traces of their occupations were found. The remains of their wigwams together with arrow heads, spear heads, axes and other implements were numerous. This circumstance gave the name to the township of Indian Point. The Mount Hope Farm is the highest point of elevation within the township and from it may be obtained a view extending twelve miles to the east and commanding most of Indian Point and Cedar, also Orange, and a large part of Chestnut township. Most of the farmers have been engaged in raising grain and live stock. To mention the names of W. W. Byram, Robert Byram, J. W. Dawdy, Robert Smith, James Bowton, William Cable, Frederick Hall, T. H. Row, and some others, brings a vision of fine well kept herds of cattle. Mr. J. W. Dawdy and son were especially successful in raising Shorthorn cattle. The Byrams also dealt largely in Norman horses, raised by themselves. Fine Poland China hogs were also produced upon the farms of Indian Point.

The first Protestant religious services held in the township, of which any record has been preserved, were conducted by Rev. John Crawford, a Cumberland Presbyterian. They were held at the house of John Howard in 1848. The first church organization was effected under the Rev. Mr. Williams, a Methodist, at the Valley schoolhouse. They both disbanded in 1858, and subsequently the M. E. church organized a class, but this did not continue long. A Roman Catholic mission was established, at the present site of St. Augustine, and at a comparatively early date. It was conducted by the Rev. Father St. Cyr in 1837. In 1843, a church building was dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Kendrick of St. Louis. Twenty years later a new structure was built. The first school was built and opened in the winter of 1837, and was taught by Dennis Clark, later judge of the county court. The school district embraced Indian Point and part of Warren county, and the schoolhouse was constructed of logs and located on section 16. There was an enrollment of thirty pupils the first winter.

The township is now crossed by two railroads, the C., B. & Q., and the Central Iowa.

ST. AUGUSTINE

The original site of St. Augustine, known as "Old St. Augustine," was in Fulton county. When the Burlington road was built, the company found a side track could not be built nearer the village than the site of the present depot. The business soon drifted away from the old town site. In 1854, the new St. Augustine was laid out by E. T. Byram, one-half mile north of the old village.

CEDAR TOWNSHIP

Within the limits of Cedar township, there is quite an area which was originally covered with timber. Brush creek enters along the west side of the township for quite a distance, and the land along the creek with its tributaries, was covered with a fine quality of timber. There were sugar maple, various kinds of oak, walnut, wild cherry, elm, ash, basswood and hickory. The abundance of the wild cherry gave to the township the name of Cherry Grove, but this name proved a duplication of the name of another town elsewhere within the state, and the people selected the name of Cedar in its place.

There is more or less of coal and building stone found within the township.

The first settlers were Azel Dorsey, on section 18, and Rev. Hiram Palmer, a Methodist minister, on section 7, both of whom came in 1828. In 1829, A. D. Swarts, the founder of Abingdon and Hedding College, settled on section 17. The first sermon heard in the township was preached by Rev. Mr. Palmer. The first members of the Latimer family that reached here, were Joseph, and his son, George. Jonathan Latimer and Jacob West settled upon section 28 in the following year. Then came John C. and Alexander Latimer, their sister, Mrs. Richard Boren and their brothers-in-law, U. D. Coy and Israel Marshall.

The settlers were compelled to go to Ellisville for milling purposes, and at times were compelled to wait for their grist, but were served in turn according to the time of their arrival. In 1833, Joshua Bland built a horsepower corncracker on section 16, which was warmly welcomed by the pioneers.

Robert Bell taught the first school in Cherry Grove settlement, and the second school in Knox county.

Cherry Grove Seminary was founded by Jonathan Latimer and the other members of the Cumberland Presbyterian denomination, and was located on section 29. From the records of the Presbytery, it is established that this school opened prior to 1840, under the charge of Rev. Cyrus Haynes, a minister of that creed. This seminary was abandoned in 1866, the Cumberland Presbyterians having established a college at Lincoln, Ill.

Indian Point and Cedar, prior to 1850, were known as the Cherry Grove voting precincts. On January 14, 1850, by order of the county judge, Cherry Grove was separated from the other township.

The township was organized in 1853, and elected a full line of officers. This election was held at what was then known as Louisville, a small group of houses about three miles north of Abingdon, on section 17. A vote was taken for the place of holding the next election, and this resulted in favor of Louisville. Louisville was laid out by John S. Garrett. It was platted September 30, 1836, and was quite a town for a time. The growth of Abingdon, however, killed it, and all that is left to mark the site is a district schoolhouse. Elections have ever since been held at Abingdon. Churches were established very early in the history of Cedar and will be found treated in other portions of this work.

Farming and stock raising have been the chief industries of the township and some as fine stock has been raised there as could be found anywhere upon the market. Large herds of Shorthorn, Hereford, Galloway, Angus, Holstein and Jersey cattle, have been bred in the township.

Cedar has always maintained a high degree of patriotism. It is said to have furnished 225 volunteers for the Civil War, and of the old settlers there are 17 soldiers of the War of 1812, four of the early Indian wars and two of two Mexican wars, found in its cemeteries. Forty-nine soldiers of the Civil War are also buried within the township limits.

ORANGE TOWNSHIP

The early settlers of Orange township suffered somewhat from fear of Indian depredations, the same as in all other townships, notwithstanding the fact that in 1830 when the first settlers arrived the Indians were already moving to the west, and very few of them remained. Nevertheless, a blockhouse was erected in 1830 or 1831, and the murder of a white man, by a band of hostile savages, during the Black Hawk War, spread great consternation throughout the small community.

The township is crossed by several well defined trails. The Peoria and Galena trails run diagonally from northwest to southeast passing through Knox and a northeastern corner of the present city of Knoxville. A little to the west of this, there is another which crosses Brush creek in section 30, and forms a pathway from Brush creek to the head waters of Haw creek.

Several Indian graves have been found and their traces are plainly discernible just across the Knox township boundary line on section 32. The last appearance of the aborigines was in 1843, when several hundred of the Sacs and Foxes camped on section 5 while moving from the north to their reservation in Indian territory.

Orange township also has a good supply of good timber. The timber land originally covered about one-fourth of the township, and lay along Brush and Haw creeks and their branches, on the west and east sides respectively, where the surface is much broken.

The township is underlaid by three veins of bituminous coal.

Joseph Walsh with his family were the first white people to settle within the limits of Orange township. Asa Haynes came in 1836. Having purchased 300 acres of land on section 30, he erected a one-room log cabin in which he and his wife resided for some time. He was a hardy, daring and venturesome man, without any education other than such as he acquired in an Ohio district school, two months each winter during six or seven years. He brought his two children, a half-brother, Hiram, and a neighbor, Isaac Hill. Their journey occupied nineteen days. Most of the time it was rainy and the rivers were swollen and their horses' harness never dried. Mr. Haynes proved a valuable factor in the development of the new country. He started the first brickyard in 1840; built the first sawmill, operated by water power from Brush creek. In 1841, he built a large barn, and in 1842, a brick house which in those days was regarded as commodious. Ultimately, Mr. Haynes owned nearly 1,000 acres of land in Orange township. In 1849, he became captain of the "Jayhawkers," and led his band of sixty across the continent in search of gold in California. Many of his company dropped out on the way, but Mr. Haynes reached California in safety.

Mr. Peter Godfrey is among the best known settlers of 1832, and he and his wife were among the oldest and most honored couples belonging to the "Old Settlers' Association" of Knox county. Among the other early settlers were Thomas and J. Sumner. Anderson Barnett also came in 1837, settling on section 10. He had the largest family of children ever raised in the township, eighteen in number, and nearly all of them reached the age of maturity.

The first schoolhouse stood on section 14. It was known as the "Wallace School" and served the people well as a house for religious services held within its unplastered walls. The earliest religious services held in the township were conducted by Rev. Edward Gum, a Baptist minister, in the home of James Ferguson. The Methodist Episcopal people were the first denomination to organize, however, and they erected a house of worship, known as the Orange Chapel, in 1855. It was built of brick burned at the yard of Anderson Barnett, and they were laid by Thomas Ranbow. The building was dedicated in the spring of 1856 by Rev. Richard Haney. It was included within the limits of the Gilson circuit. In 1870 revival services were conducted at the schoolhouse in district No. 4. At that time there was no organized church other than Orange Chapel, although within the township there were Congregationalists and Methodists. Both of these denominations were earnest, both organized societies, and Haynes' Chapel was built by the Methodists. The Congregationalists had no place of worship and soon ceased as a local organization. A general religious decline appeared to supervene about this time.

DE LONG

De Long is the only village in Orange township. It is a flourishing little station on what was formerly known as the Narrow Gauge road, but now a branch of the Burlington system. It owes its existence there to H. S. Mallory who at that time was building the Narrow Gauge road and who bought the site, laid it out and called it De Long. It is now a flourishing little village and has its quota of Modern Woodmen, Good Templars, etc., etc.

GALESBURG TOWNSHIP

James Roe was the first settler, coming in 1832 or 1833. Soon after Isaiah Smeltzer arrived, and in 1834, Gadial Scott and Edward Morse came. Edward Morse was one of the Henderson colony, but settled so far from his neighbors as to have been over the Galesburg line.

The land in the township is very fertile. This township now comprises 27 sections. It was made a separate town by legislative enactment in 1867, placing the City of Galesburg in another town known as the town of the City of Galesburg.

Galesburg township from the start adopted a policy of erecting permanent bridges, and there is probably no township in the county that has more and better bridges than Galesburg, and the tax rate is very low.

MAQUON TOWNSHIP

The advent of William Palmer and family at the place where the village of Maquon is situated, seems to be the date from which all matters of importance in relation to the township of Maquon are reckoned. This starting point is fixed at some time in the year 1827. Mr. Palmer seems to have been a typical pioneer. He is known as the "bee man," as that seems to have been one of his favorite pastimes or means of support, or both. Mr. Palmer's cabin was made of black hickory poles, and on all sides are said to have been Indian gardens. Just why the habitations of the redmen, at this point, are called gardens, is not explained for they were occupied only during the winter, and in the summer time the Indians went away to find better hunting-grounds to the west. They returned annually in the fall and remained during the winter until the year 1832, when, as one of the results of the Black Hawk war, they left forever. Mr. Palmer remained there five or six years, planted an orchard and cultivated the ground vacated by the Indians. His cabin, being located on the Galena trails, afforded a stopping place for people passing back and forth. Mr. Palmer sold his cabin to one Nelson Selby and removed to St. Louis. This cabin was constructed very much like other cabins of that day. It was small, consisting of one room, practically without windows, and with but one door. The chimney, of course, was made of sticks laid up, after the same manner in which the cabin itself was built, and then packed and plastered with mud so as to withstand the heat of the fire in the fireplace. Nevertheless there were frequent fires at Mr. Palmer's mansion on account of the "burning out" of the chimney.

Another character of Maquon township is spoken of, that of Simeon Dolph, the pioneer ferryman of Spoon river. He also built a similar cabin which was located where the Rathburn house now stands. He did not remain long. The cause of his leaving is supposed to have been in consequence of a suspicion of foul play being dealt out to an unknown traveler.

In 1829 Mark Thurman with his family took up a residence upon section 25, and soon followed William Darnell, William Palmer, Thomas Thurman and James Milam. These people came from Ohio, and from that time on the settlers came in increasing numbers, and in 1837 the village of Maquon was laid out. A pretty little story of the name of this town and township will be found in the article upon the Indians of Knox county, where also will be described the trails and relics which were found so numerous in and about the village of Maquon. Township organization was completed in 1853, and James N. Foster was elected supervisor; Nathan Barbero, assessor, and James L. Loman, collector.

The first schoolhouse was a log building erected in 1834 on section 33. Benjamin Brock was the first teacher. Another schoolhouse was erected in 1836 or 1837, a little south of Bennington. The first school north of Spoon river was conducted by Miss Mary Fink in a shed adjoining the residence of Peter Jones, father of John Jones. The New Testament was the only reader. It is said by some of Miss Fink's pupils that she could read and write but could not cipher.

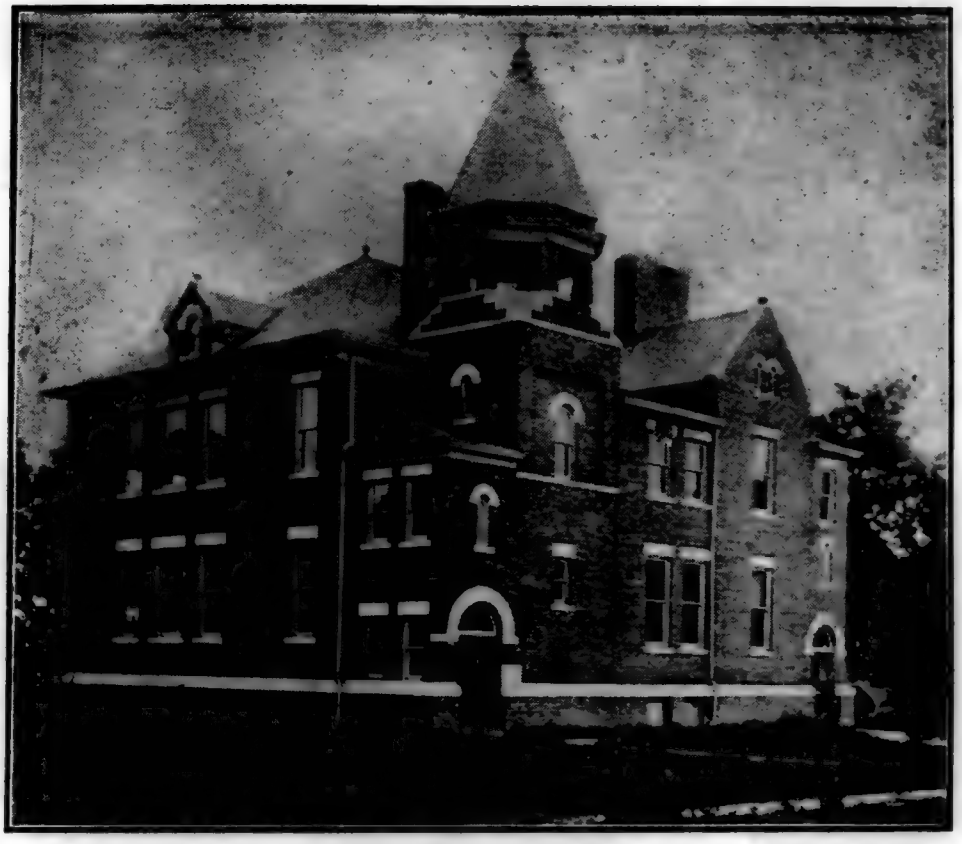
The township originally contained Maquon, Bennington and Rapatee. Bennington was located near the center of the township but it failed to develop although it was the township voting place until 1858.

RAPATEE.

This village has made some progress and is a snug little town upon the Iowa Central railroad. It was laid out by Benjamin Adams on the southeast quarter of section 33, and has churches, stores, blacksmith shops, elevators and other interests common in such a town.

MAQUON



The village of Maquon is situated near the site of an old Indian village on the north line of the township on section 4, with a view of the Spoon river to the south. It was surveyed in 1836 by Parnach Owen, assisted by John G. Sanburn, William McGowan, Judge R. L. Hannaman, Mr. Richmond and Mr. Biers.

Nothing that has ever been said to the knowledge of the writer, indicates that the people of Maquon are different from other people. They have always been a law-abiding people and as honorable in their dealings as other folks so far as is known, but for some reason not stated, the village was slow in establishing religious and educational influences. They had a distillery and a racetrack; both of these institutions have gone and a school and a church have taken their place, and both are well supported. The people today are abreast with those of any other town in the county, and there is no town in the county where the women are more alive to the interests of their own sex than in Maquon. We are indebted to the women of that village for a large part of all that is known and preserved of Indian life throughout this part of the country. The village was incorporated March 19, 1857, and the town has steadily grown and today it has about 700 inhabitants. Notwithstanding the fact that it once supported a distillery, it has not supported a saloon for many years. At present it has ample banking facilities, grocery stores, dry goods, drug stores, newspapers and other industries that supply about all the wants of the inhabitants of the village and the surrounding county.

The Maquon physicians have always been reliable and up-to-date. The private bank of William Swigart has been in operation since 1881. The banking interests of Maquon are fully set out in the article on banks of the county.

Mr. A. M. Maple was for many years a prosperous merchant and left the business in the hands of his son, C. F. Maple, in 1896. These gentlemen have always been highly spoken of for their honesty and fair dealing.

The religious and banking interests of Maquon have been referred to in this article but the reader is respectfully referred to articles on those subjects found on other pages of this history. If any information is wanted in regard to anyone of the churches of Maquon, reference to the matter will be found in the article written upon that church under its respective denomination, in the article written for the whole county. The reader is further referred to the article on banking in Knox county for information in regard to the several banks of Maquon.

Maquon has had its share of experience with the different fraternal organizations. The Odd Fellows have been represented by the Maquon lodge No. 256, I. O. O. F., and the Degree of Rebecca. The Masons have been represented under the Maquon lodge No. 530, A. F. and A. M., and there has been a flourishing order of the Eastern Star for the wives and daughters of the Masons. Maquon lodge No. 171, K. of P., and the Bertie Lenore Temple have also flourished here. These orders are all fraternal orders and there is not much that can be said to the public in regard to them.

It has been stated that the village of Maquon was incorporated on the 19th of March, 1857. At that election there were fifty-five voters, forty-one cast their ballot for, and fourteen against incorporation. Notices of this election were posted on the 9th of March.

It seems from the record that saloons were licensed under the head of groceries, and it was provided "that the applicant should keep an orderly house and that he will not permit any unlawful game or riots in his house, or token of unusual unrest therein, and that he will not in any manner sell any kind of intoxicating drink to any persons who may in any degree be perceivably, already under the influence of intoxicating liquor." It was provided further that "groceries shall be determined to include all houses and places where wine, rum, brandy, gin, whiskey or other similar spirits or mixed liquors are sold."

About the year 1860 the people began to be a little negligent of their duties as citizens of the village. In that year an election was called for the 26th day of March, for the purpose of electing a town-board. The polls were opened but not a voter appeared. The president, A. J. Dunlay, Carl T. Thurman, A. M. Maple, Horace Jones and Alfred Thurman took up the reins of village government and labored another year. Everything seemed to go along all right until 1865, when eighteen votes were cast for village trustees.

No considerable amount of sidewalks were built until 1865, when a walk was built to the depot from the public square.

A calaboose was talked about December 13, 1865, at a meeting called for that purpose. It seems a calaboose had been built by the citizens and organized on the West End, Block 11. This building was made of 3x6 planks spiked together and consisted of but one small room, having one door and a small hole for a window. Iron bars were placed over the hole that served for a window. Two years and one month later it was moved and seconded that the building be sold to the highest and best bidder, for the highest cash, and the proceeds used for building a plank walk. There is nothing to show that it was actually sold. This building had been bought by the citizens of Maquon village and was taken possession of by the village at the time above referred to.

Foregoing facts regarding Maquon township and village have been gathered from various sources and the writer would make special acknowledgments to Mrs. Eva Chapin Maple and to Miss Jennie McKenney.

SOME FACTS IN REGARD TO TAXATION

At the time of the organization of the county in 1830 there were supposed to be 350 inhabitants. The needs of the county were relatively very small and taxation was somewhat primitive in the manner of assessing. There were no roads to keep up, the construction of bridges a thing of the future and the officers of the county were paid by fees for the services rendered. As the population increased and people began to go from township to township and to market at a distance, the necessity for roads and bridges became imperative. The products of the soil had to be moved and sold; this brought in more money and a reasonable tax could be levied and collected with comparative ease. If the roads were worked and the bridges built the produce could be taken to market, so about all the taxing that was done at the start was for roads and bridges. We therefore have the following action by the county commissioners.

On the 18th day of April, 1835, the county commissioners levied the first labor tax. The order therefor reads as follows:

Ordered, That the Labor Tax for each able-bodied man between the age of twenty-one and fifty years shall be fixed at two days, to be done under the direction of the supervisor of each road district in which they may reside, for the ensuing year ending on the 1st Monday in March, 1836.

The following orders were also issued for tax on real estate and the disposition of the same.

Ordered, That a tax of one-half the amount of the state tax as provided in the Revenue Law, be and the same is hereby levied on every tract of land situated within said county (except such lands as are exempt from taxation, by the compact with the general government) for the ensuing year—said tax to be assessed, collected and paid agreeably to the provisions of an act concerning public roads, approved February 3rd, 1835.

Ordered, That the tax levied on lands by the foregoing order shall be applied in the several road districts in which such lands are situated, for the purpose of building bridges and causeways and opening roads, and erecting guide posts, so far as the same may be needed for said purposes, under the direction of the several supervisors in said road districts; the balance of said tax to be paid into the county treasury, to be applied by the county commissioner's court, agreeably to the provisions of the act under which the same is levied.

Since that time the system of taxation has changed very much. Then it seems that a tax on land was made only for road purposes and that a small personal property tax was sufficient to pay the other expenses of the county. Today the practice is to levy taxes upon all species of property and deposit the entire revenue with the county treasurer, and in addition to that to pass an appropriation bill, every item of which shall be paid out of the general sum so raised.

The following statement of the property assessed and the taxes charged in Knox county for the year 1855 with the addition of a corresponding statement for the year 1905 for comparison will be very interesting, and they are given below:

It will appear from the following order in relation to interest on balances due on the purchase of the poor farm that the county had occasionally to pay pretty high rates of interest:

On MOTION it is ordered that interest at the rate of fifteen per cent per annum be allowed on the balances of the purchase money unpaid on the poor farm the 1st day of July next until paid.

The system for the assessment and taxation of railroads in this county when they were first constructed is made to appear in the action taken by the board of supervisors at the September meeting, 1856, which is here given as it appears on the records:

The clerk then laid before the board the schedules returned to his office by the different railroad companies being that portion of the railroads in the said county of Knox for taxation, and after a full examination by the board of the same it is ordered that the lands in the schedules of the Northern Cross Railroad be assessed at ten dollars per acre, and that the other property in said schedule be assessed at the value set forth in said schedule. It is further ordered by the board the property of the Central Military Tract Railroad and also of the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad be assessed at the value reported by said companies. Provided, however, and on motion it is ordered that the supervisors of the different towns through which the Central Military Tract Railroad runs be authorized and requested to ascertain the additional improvement made by said company from the 1st day of May, A. D. 1855 till the 1st day of April, A. D. 1856, and report the amount of the same to the county clerk which additional amount to be assessed and taxed to said company.

The assessing of railroad property today is done by the State Board of Equalization principally. Under the head of right of way is included the road bed and all other permanent improvements. All of this is taken care of by the State Board of Equalization and the county clerk distributes the value among the cities, villages and school districts through which it passes. The local assessor gets only the furniture, machinery, etc.

RAILROAD TAXATION

The Northern Cross Railroad and the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad, not having filed schedules of the taxable property of said roads as required by law, the county clerk presented to the board the schedule filed by the Northern Cross Railroad for the year 1856 and also a schedule of the Peoria and Oquawka Railroad as made by himself, which being examined by the board were approved and on motion it is ordered by the board that the main and side track of both of said roads and the lands be assessed at the same value as the lands, main and side track of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad—and that the rolling stock of both the two first named roads be assessed in the same sums as the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy road in proportion to their rolling stock and other personal property to be estimated and made out by the said county clerk.

One of the unfortunate habits into which some of our treasurers of cities, towns and townships fell before the law forbidding the re-election of such officers, was that of allowing personal property which might be collected to pass uncollected and returning it to the county treasury to be by him collected under the pretense that the municipal or township collector could find no property out of which to make such collection. As long ago as May, 1860, this practice had become so fixed and prevalent that the board saw fit to pass the following resolution.

Supervisor Gale offered the following resolution which was adopted:

Resolved, That the supervisor of each town where the collector has manifestly failed in using reasonable diligence in the collection of the personal property tax, give notice to such collector to procure a copy of the delinquent tax on personal property, and proceed to collect and report amount collected at the next meeting of this board and that a committee be appointed to report to the board at next meeting, what action is expedient to be taken in enforcing the rights of the county against collectors neglecting their duties.

The only necessity of such a resolution is that the officers neglecting a duty to collect imposed upon him by law must be that such officer imagined that in case he asked for a re-election the persons so favored by letting their personal property tax go by and be collected by the county treasurer will be under certain obligations to support him in such re-election.

January Meeting, 1861.—Report of committee on payment of taxes in currency.

Supervisor Gale, from special committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Knox county, asking the board to authorize collectors to receive the bills of Illinois banks in payment of taxes, made the following report:

The committee to whom was referred the petition of citizens praying the board to authorize the collectors to receive currency in payment of taxes, Report, That the revenue law provides that the county revenue shall be collected in gold and silver coin, county orders and jury certificates issued by the county, and in no other currency. The collectors of this state shall collect the revenue for state purposes in gold and silver coin, auditor's warrants and in no other currency whatever.

The committee are of opinion that no authority is possessed by this board to authorize the collector to take any currency prohibited by statute.

The committee are of opinion that all the taxes, whether state, county or special should be collected in the paper of the secured banks of this state.

That the present system required a sacrifice on the part of the tax payers that the advantage to the state, of receiving the revenue in gold does not warrant.

That during the time of collection of taxes, the artificial demand created by the wants of the tax payers, enhances the price of gold, and the same gold is seldom, or never, worth to the parties who receive it from the state, as much as it costs the tax payers.

The committee recommend that a resolution be passed by the board petitioning the legislature for the passage of an act, directing the collector to receive in payment of all taxes the secured notes of the banks of this state, and that the board by resolution, recommend to the citizens of this county, to petition the legislature of this state for the passage of such an act. Which report was accepted, and adopted.

Supervisor Charles, from committee to whom the petition of N. Barbero for relief was referred, made the following report:

Report of committee to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel Barbero asking to be relieved from the liability as bondsman, on collector's bond of the town of Maquon, beg leave to report:

After having duly considered the case, that in our opinion, it is not policy in this board to grant such relief.

GEO. A. CHARLES, Chairman,
WM. B. LEBARON,
CALEB FINCH,
Committee.

On motion said report was accepted and the committee discharged.

On motion of Supervisor Finch it was voted by the board that N. Barbero be and he is hereby released from so much of his liability on such bond as relates to the county tax, and that he is exonerated therefrom.

Supervisor Gale offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this board the taxes of this state should be collected in the secured notes of the banks of this state. That the present system requiring the payment of taxes in a currency different from the currency required in ordinary business, imposes on the tax payers an unnecessary burden, a burden liable to severe aggravation in such times as renders the usual burden of taxation difficult to be borne, and we do therefore petition the general assembly of this state to pass an Act, directing the collectors to receive all taxes in the secured bills of the banks of this state.

That the clerk of the board be directed to forward a copy of this resolution to our representatives in the senate and house of representatives in this state to be by them presented to the bodies of which they are respectively members.

Another resolution in regard to taxes directed to the legislature January meeting, 1861.

Supervisor Gale offered the following:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this board the people of this county desire the extension of the time for the payment of taxes, and that such extension is a desirable alleviation of its burden, and therefore this board do hereby petition the general assembly of this state to pass a law extending the time of collection of taxes, ninety days.

And that the clerk of this board be directed to forward to our representatives in the senate and house of representatives in the state, a copy of this resolution to be by them presented to the bodies of which they are members.

On which resolution the yeas and nays were called, resulting: Yeas—Messrs. Meek, Stevens, Gale, Finch, Mansfield, Robertson, Routh, Newman, Charles, Lebolt, Barber, Tucker, Copley and Gross—14. Nays—Messrs. LeBaron, Maney, McCornack, Jones and Knable—5. Carried.

January Meeting, 1867.—On motion of Mr. Sanderson, it was voted that this board recommend the senator and representative from this district to use their influence for the passage of a law for a State Board of Equalization of Taxes.

The foregoing extracts from the record of the board supervisors are given to show the changes in manner of assessing taxes and also the great increase in the value of property and the amount of tax paid. The assessment of railroad property was very difficult. The assessment was based wholly upon a schedule of property within the county, together with a statement of rolling stock apportioned to the mileage of the county. If the roads neglected to file the schedules, the value of railroad property had to be arrived at by the best judgment of the county clerk and the board of supervisors.

In 1867 Mr. Sanderson, then a member of the board of supervisors, offered a motion which was adopted asking for the passage of a law for a State Board of Equalization of Taxes. Such a board was created by the legislature. This board is in session several months each year and assesses not only the various kinds of railroad property and apportions the same to the several counties, but the property of the various other corporations. It seems that some such agency is necessary and the board of supervisors was moved to pass that resolution because of the necessity for such a body. Today there is a demand for the abolition of this board, the demand being based upon the supposition that the board is tampered with by the railroads and corporations. Even though this be true, it is a pertinent question to ask what other agency can take its place? In some states there is a commission that goes about and personally inspects localities so the members may use their own judgment as to values to better advantage, but it nowhere appears that this commission is not susceptible to the same influences as a board of equalization or that their opportunities are less numerous. Society is rapidly becoming more complex and changes in forms and customs must be made from time to time to facilitate the transaction of business and meet the necessary social demands. Personal honesty is quite a different thing and a matter of much slower growth. Hence the constant effort on the part of some officials to take a dishonest advantage of all conditions that may be made a means of grafting.

PARKS OF KNOX COUNTY

By Prof. John Van Ness Standish

Throughout the civilized world, the higher civilization has found its abode in our cities. It is in the midst of throngs she dwells. It is by the attrition of thought upon thought and mind upon mind that improvements are made. It is by close proximity that original suggestions arise. Many discoveries which have been mighty forces in the progress of civilization have been the result of accident. A chance word spoken by some rude peasant or the careless touch of the nerve of a frog has established empires or given birth to one of the most occult sciences. Great thoughts of great men often have been inspired by inferior minds. It is the city dweller then that has the larger opportunity for the work of life. By offering better advantages, the cities have become lodestones attracting the rural population and in a large measure depopulating our rural districts.

URBAN AND COUNTRY LIFE

Fifty years ago, only about eight or ten per cent of the population lived in cities, while ninety per cent lived contentedly in rural homes. At the present time, rural occupations and rural scenery have lost their charm. The farmer's boy no longer desires to follow the plough or break the stubborn glebe, but seeks rather some easier occupation in the crowded city. Consequently, the cities are growing apace as each census proves. Today, nearly one-half of the population live in cities, and the next decade may find sixty or seventy-five per cent living there. And these thoughts lead to the subject matter to be considered, which is

CITY PARKS AND CITY PLAYGROUNDS

Parks, under various names, are old. They probably antedate the history of man. The first recorded account is the Garden of Eden. Where its exact location was, its size and purpose, no Biblical scholar as yet has been able to tell. The account says that every kind of tree grew there, even the Tree of Life. Every Greek city had its park or square or market place, which was called "Agora." Usually, in the midst of the square or market place there was a fountain and sometimes it was surrounded with a colonnade which the people used as a promenade. Without this colonnade were public buildings and temples of worship. Within were erected statues of heroes and altars to the gods. The Greek "Agora" was the general meeting place of the people. It was here that laws and political policies were discussed. It was here that funeral orations were pronounced. It was here that every kind of merchandise was bought and sold. And it may be said that the parks of today can afford no greater pleasure to the people than the "Agora" afforded to the ancient Greek. The Roman "Forum" was similar to the Greek "Agora." The same general arrangement prevailed, and the business character was the same. It was the civic center of the city and the center for the transaction of all business, judicial and otherwise. Such was the beginning of the system of parks of the present age and generation, though much enlarged in grandeur and magnificence, and such they stand as marks of an advancing civilization. One of the great glories of Europe is to be found in her parks. They are constant scenes of joy and beauty. There is scarcely a city in all that vast domain without its beautiful park, ornamented with the choicest shrubs and trees. The city of Paris probably has more park area under her management than all the United States, if our national parks be excepted. Fontainbleau with her magnificent forests and Versailles with her parterres and her unique fountains have more than 125,000 acres—the joy and pride of her people. And when her other numerous parks are added, Paris can boast a park area of more than 200,000 acres—greater than any other city in the world. And if her hundreds of miles of boulevards shall be considered, her park area is simply immense.

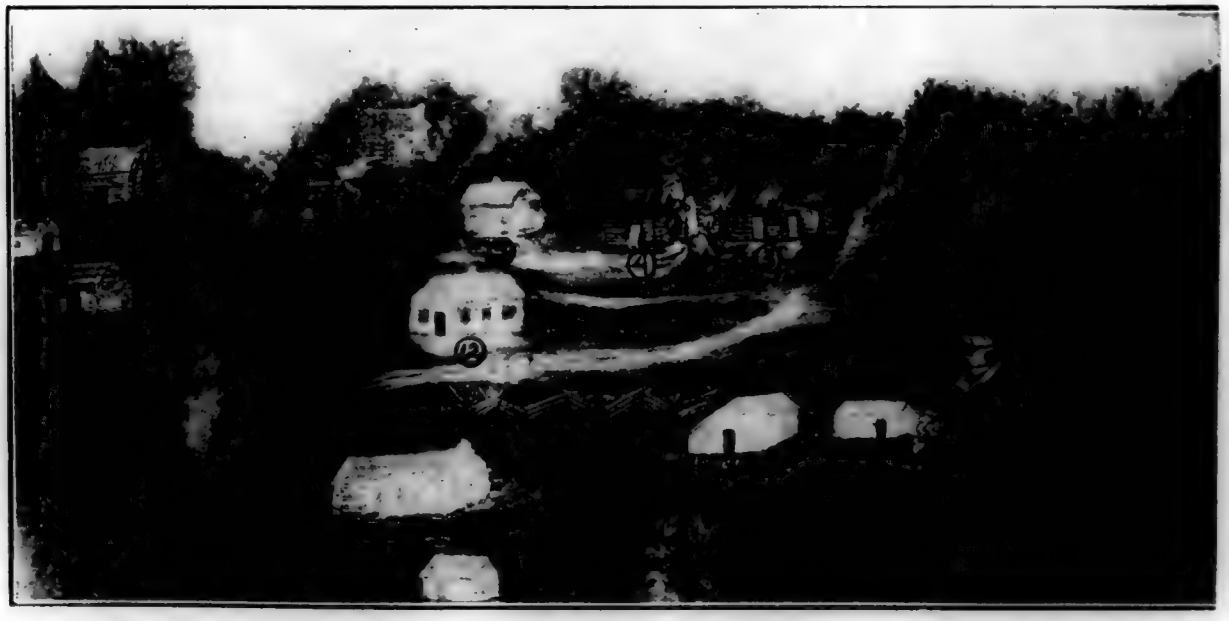
PARKS IN AMERICA

It may be said that the park system or park building in America is of recent origin. The work was begun the last half of the nineteenth century. Before 1850 not a square foot of ground had been purchased for park purposes. Cities we had, without parks or playgrounds. Cemeteries were used as common resorts. In 1858 New York City made the initial move in purchasing a tract of land, which is now Central park. By this example, other cities took the cue, and as a result magnificent systems of parks have arisen in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco. And if our national parks shall be considered, America can boast a system of parks unexcelled by any other nation in the wide world. At present, Europe may display more art in her park system, but in natural beauty and in extent and boldness of scenery, America shall receive the palm and wear the crown.



A GRANDEUR IN NATURE

It was a grand thought when God thought of the tree. It was a grand thought when He thought of the shrub and flower. There is beauty in the landscape, there is sublimity in the lofty mountain, and there is a feeling of awe in the mighty waterfall. The tornado and the rushing waters are more terrible than the thunders of heaven. All these things we have to make up the grandeur and harmonies of the world. But these things are not wholly isolated. They are distributed according to unknown and unchanging laws of nature. All about us, there is much to attract and admire. Knox county is not wholly bereft of those things that please the eye and cultivate the taste. She presents before us a beautiful landscape, though wanting in mountain scenery and rivers of water. Who has not been entranced as he has looked out upon her fields of waving grass and golden grain? Who has not been agitated with thrilling emotions as he has surveyed her stately fields of corn and the noble trees that stretch along the boundary lines? Truly, Knox county is one beautiful park and no man can fail to admire here nature's handiwork.

PARKS OF GALESBURG

Galesburg cannot boast any great system of parks. She has limited herself to a few small ones, which reflect credit on her taste, if not on her munificence. Her park system consists of the following: Standish park, the Court House park, Broad street boulevard, Central park, Knox Campus, and Lombard Campus. All of these, save Lombard Campus, are in the heart of the city and are lying adjacent. They constitute an area of about twenty-five acres. Standish park with its many choice shrubs and trees, is the most attractive and beautiful of all. It embraces about three or four acres and was established May 15th, 1876. Originally the Court House park was a portion of Standish park, making an area of about eight acres. The first Board of Park Commissioners, six in number, was appointed by Honorable George W. Brown, who was then mayor of the city. The following are the names: Honorable T. Judson Hale, Professor George Churchill, Honorable B. F. Arnold, Honorable O. T. Johnson, John McFarland, and Professor J. V. N. Standish. Honorable T. J. Hale was elected the first president, serving in that capacity one or two years. He was succeeded by Professor Standish who is the only original member and has served as president of the park commission for thirty-four years. He has also served as superintendent for the same length of time. The present members of the park commission are the following: J. V. N. Standish, president and superintendent; Loren Stevens, secretary; Hiram Mars, P. M. Stromberg, A. J. Perry, and G. H. Bridge.

LOMBARD CAMPUS

A word must be said in regard to Lombard Campus, as Professor Standish had much to do in making it what it is. It covers a surface of fourteen acres and is a most beautiful spot. It is surrounded with large stately elms (perhaps not so magnificent as the New Haven elms), which in beauty and grandeur can hardly be surpassed. The campus itself is planted with quite a variety of trees and shrubs, every one of which is a specimen. In beauty of symmetry and elegance of grace, no finer sugar maples can be found than those growing on Lombard Campus.

PARKS OF EAST GALESBURG

There are some other parks in Knox county which are worthy of mention. Just east of Galesburg is situated the Lake Rice park. It is beautiful, and with its water, boating, fishing and golf grounds, it is an ideal spot for games and amusement. Here is located the Soangetaha Club—a club composed of our best citizens. This place is much frequented by reason of its attractiveness and beauty.

Just south of Lake Rice is situated Highland park and Highland lake where the people assemble more frequently than at Lake Rice park. Here are held the chautauquas from year to year, and here are the contests for the regatta prizes by the lady students of Knox college.

PARKS OF KNOXVILLE

Knoxville too is not without her park, and on it stands a historic building. Indeed, on account of its place and style, it is the most attractive building in Knox county. It is the "Old Court House." It is fashioned after the manner of an old Greek temple. The metopes and triglyphs are seen in the entablature and the frieze is of the Doric order. The columns too are Doric, without bases and with sixteen flutings—in fitting resemblance to the Greek model. Whoever has seen a Greek temple will readily recognize the "Old Court House" as a correct imitation.

Here in Knoxville is Gilbert's park, which probably is more frequented than any other park in the county. It is small, well wooded, and without ornamentation. Really, it is park in a state of nature, and is much used because it is a pleasant retreat.

In real art and taste, the campus of St. Mary's school stands among the first. What a pleasure it is to walk in upon those grounds and see those masses of flowering shrubbery and the ornamental vines clinging to the barren walls!

A little farther to the northward is the park and garden of the almshouse which in their loveliness and order it is difficult to surpass. The lawn here is immaculate. Here is a pattern for similar institutions to follow. A beautiful landscape or a beautiful flower is a blessing to every beholder.

ONEIDA PARK

Oneida is not without her park, and a beautiful one it is. To the praise of the citizens of this city, it must be said that it is well kept. There is a civic pride here that is commendable. The plat of ground belongs to the C., B. & Q. railroad, but the citizens of Oneida procured it from the company to be used for park purposes. Here is a lesson for other cities of the county. Every one of them should have its beautiful park.

YATES CITY

Yates City is also in the march of improvement. She has her park already planned and is working it out for the pleasure and benefit of her citizens.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion it must be said that parks are not only things of beauty, but a necessity. They are educators. They make for a higher civilization. They are health-giving resorts to millions. They are places of rest to many a weary mother and a source of delight and joy to her children. In a word, they are man's best sanitariums and God's hospitals for the aged, the feeble and the careworn. Plant then parks and playgrounds and commons, and ornament them; for they are man's best gifts to man.

the people assemble more frequently than at Lake Rice park. Here are held the chautauquas from year to year, and here are the contests for the regatta prizes by the lady students of Knox college.

PARKS OF KNOXVILLE

Knoxville too is not without her park, and on it stands a historic building. Indeed, on account of its place and style, it is the most attractive building in Knox county. It is the "Old Court House." It is fashioned after the manner of an old Greek temple. The metopes and triglyphs are seen in the entablature and the frieze is of the Doric order. The columns too are Doric, without bases and with sixteen flutings—in fitting resemblance to the Greek model. Whoever has seen a Greek temple will readily recognize the "Old Court House" as a correct imitation.

Here in Knoxville is Gilbert's park, which probably is more frequented than any other park in the county. It is small, well wooded, and without ornamentation. Really, it is park in a state of nature, and is much used because it is a pleasant retreat.

In real art and taste, the campus of St. Mary's school stands among the first. What a pleasure it is to walk in upon those grounds and see those masses of flowering shrubbery and the ornamental vines clinging to the barren walls!

A little farther to the northward is the park and garden of the almshouse which in their loveliness and order it is difficult to surpass. The lawn here is immaculate. Here is a pattern for similar institutions to follow. A beautiful landscape or a beautiful flower is a blessing to every beholder.

ONEIDA PARK

Oneida is not without her park, and a beautiful one it is. To the praise of the citizens of this city, it must be said that it is well kept. There is a civic pride here that is commendable. The plat of ground belongs to the C., B. & Q. railroad, but the citizens of Oneida procured it from the company to be used for park purposes. Here is a lesson for other cities of the county. Every one of them should have its beautiful park.

YATES CITY

Yates City is also in the march of improvement. She has her park already planned and is working it out for the pleasure and benefit of her citizens.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion it must be said that parks are not only things of beauty, but a necessity. They are educators. They make for a higher civilization. They are health-giving resorts to millions. They are places of rest to many a weary mother and a source of delight and joy to her children. In a word, they are man's best sanitariums and God's hospitals for the aged, the feeble and the careworn. Plant then parks and playgrounds and commons, and ornament them; for they are man's best gifts to man.

THE EARLY DAYS OF BANKING IN KNOX COUNTY

By Lloyd F. Wertman

The banks were the stocking or teapot, under the hearth-stone, and various niches in the logs of the houses.

In the early fifties, James Knox kept a grocery and general store in Knoxville. The building was located north of Main street on the west side of the public square. The dignity of banking was raised by Mr. Knox when he purchased a sheet iron safe, placed it in the back end of his store and received deposits from his patrons, giving a receipt for money left with him. When the depositor wished to draw his money, he produced his receipt and if the depository had not enough money on hand for the required needs, he patiently waited until the supply was increased to meet the demands. There was no run or thought of a run on the bank.

Cornelius Runkle was the first person to start a regular bank in Knox county. This was a private bank in Knoxville north of Main street on the west side of the public square. He was president and his cashier was John Babbington. After some years, he moved his bank and located on the corner where the Presbyterian church now stands, south of his first location. In 1863, the bank was nationalized as the First National Bank of Knoxville, Illinois. After the death of John Babbington, Henry Runkle was elected cashier. He was succeeded by Herbert Bailey and he by Frank G. Sanborn. Mr. Sanborn became president of the Farmers National Bank afterwards. The bank was guarded day and night by a brindled bull dog who was always on the alert for any trouble. After twenty years, the charter expired and the bank was reorganized as the Farmers National Bank.

In February, 1881, Mr. Cornelius Runkle, its president, was attacked at night in the bank building by bank robbers. He roomed at the bank and was alone at the time They tortured him severely by hanging him up, also by placing him on the bed and pouring kerosene oil over his feet and applying the flame, burning his feet severely. As he was bound to his bed they tried to make him reveal the combination of the safe, which he could not do as he did not know. He kept some money in a small safe in the banking room to accommodate customers after banking hours. After the robbers were satisfied he could not open the large safe, they left him and secured nearly $2,500.00 from the small safe. No one was ever arrested for the offense.

The Farmers National Bank of Knoxville was organized and commenced business January 13, 1885, with a capital of $60,000.

The first officers and directors of the bank were as follows:

Officers: F. G. Sanborn, president; O. G. Smith, cashier; J. Z. Carns, assistant cashier. Directors: A. M. Craig, J. W. Carns, C. W. Leffingwell, H. L. Bailey, F. G. Sanborn, R. C. Price, J. S. Brewer.

The Farmers National Bank, taking up the business of the old First National Bank at the expiration of its charter, has experienced a steady and satisfactory growth during the succeeding years and is now operating with a capital and surplus of $95,000.

The present officers and directors are as follows:

Officers: J. Z. Carns, president; W. W. McBride, cashier; H. Huggins, assistant cashier. Directors: J. H. Lewis, C. C. Craig, J. Z. Carns, W. W. McBride, Hubbard Huggins.

KNOX COUNTY STATE BANK, KNOXVILLE

The Knox County Bank of F. E. Wilson & Co., of Knoxville, Illinois, was organized as a private bank, by F. E. Wilson, C. M. and Nellie J. Corbin with a paid up capital of $25,000 and opened for business on January 26, 1903, in their fine new brick building on East Main street, Knoxville, Illinois, and after about three and one-half years of very successful business, seeing the needs of a larger and stronger institution, then organized the Knox County State Bank under a charter from the state dated July 31, 1906, with a capital of $50,000 and over fifty stock holders.

This bank opened for business on August 1, 1906, with the following officers in charge: F. E. Wilson, president; Mark Burnside, vice-president; R. R. Collins, cashier. The first directors being: C. M. Corbin, J. H. Lewis, Jr., Mark Burnside, F. E. Wilson, J. R. Wilder, they purchasing the business of the private bank, Knox County, of F. E. Wilson & Co.

This institution having had a very large and successful business since its organization has, in addition to their $50,000 capital a surplus of $14,000 earned and undivided profits of $5,000, in addition to paying a handsome dividend to their stockholders each year.

The institution still retains its first elected officers to manage its affairs, and its present directors are: C. M. Corbin, Omer N. Custer, Frank Hopkins, J. H. Lewis, Jr., E. R. Lacy, Mark Burnside, F. E. Wilson. Under their management, the bank is steadily increasing their deposits and loans and it now ranks as one of the foremost banks in the county, according to its capital and surplus.

PRIVATE BANK OF J. M. NISLEY

J. M. Nisley commenced business with a capital of $30,000.00, as a private banker, in Knoxville, Illinois, in February, 1890, in a building located on the south side of the public square. The officials were J. M. Nisley, president, and Nathan Anderson, cashier. They were assisted by the old veteran in banking business, Cornelius Runkle, until his death.

This bank has always enjoyed the confidence of its patrons and the surrounding community because of its conservative and courteous treatment.

James F. Dunn located the first bank in Galesburg, Illinois, about the year 1853, in a building south of Main street, on the east side of the public square. He afterwards moved from that building to the one at the southeast corner of Main and Prairie streets and continued business up to 1861 when he failed. D. H. Frisbie was appointed assignee to close up its affairs.

Then followed the Sidney Meyer's Bank, called the Knox County Savings Bank, with Joseph Grant as cashier. This bank was located on north side, Main street, east of Cherry in the Mathews' building, now occupied by McKamy & Doll.

It remained in business only a couple of years when it closed out and removed to Chicago.

The McCoy Bank followed, which was located in a building south of Main on the west side of Prairie street, near the building occupied by the old fire department, which bank was called the Nemaha County Bank, and issued currency under that name. There never was such a place as Nemaha at that date. The Nemaha money was taken by some of the grocers and men who traded here, but was not good on the railroad and it drove out all good money from the city. Not a dollar could be obtained.

Then, about the year 1856, followed the A. D. Reed & Co. Bank, located at the corner of Main and Cherry streets where now stands the Farmers & Mechanics Bank in what is known as the old Second National Bank Building. E. L. Chapman was its cashier. They remained in business to about 1862, when they closed out and Mr. Reed moved to Chicago where he died. This bank issued money and it was distributed quite generally in this section and yet it was worth only thirty-three cents on the dollar and he refused to take his own money at that. A bank in Connecticut furnished us all the good money we used. (Hartford & New Haven.)

FIRST NATIONAL BANK

First National Bank, Galesburg, Illinois, was organized December 15, 1863. Capital stock subscribed and paid in $100,000. The first stockholders' meeting was held on Tuesday, December 22, 1863, at two o'clock. The following directors were elected: C. H. Mathews, J. D. Hand, Charles E. Grant, E. R. Adams, Timothy Moshier, David Sanborn, W. N. Phillips, John Becker and L. E. Conger. Of the original stockholders, there is only one living at this date, J. T. McKnight, of this city, who has passed to the beyond since writing this article. The first directors' meeting was held in the office of C. H. Mathews at 4:30 P. M. The board was organized by electing C. H. Mathews, president, David Sanborn, vice-president, E. L. Chapman, Monmouth, Illinois, cashier. Commenced business in the building located at the southeast corner of Main and Prairie streets. May 11, 1864, David Sanborn resigned as vice-president and Francis Colton was elected in his place. November 1, 1864, the stockholders voted to increase the capital stock $50,000.00, making the total capital stock $150,000. Upon the resignation of C. H. Mathews, Captain Francis Fuller was elected president, September 2, 1865, and served in that capacity for thirty years. In the year of 1866, a new banking building was erected at the northeast corner of Main and Cherry streets. January 4, 1869, E. L. Chapman, cashier, resigned. January 12, 1869, M. S. Smalley succeeded Mr. Chapman as cashier. January 14, 1878, Aza A. Madison was elected vice-president. January 15, 1883, Joseph Hoover was elected cashier, and served thirteen years to April 27, 1896, giving faithful service.

The following was the board of directors January 8, 1883: Timothy Moshier, Francis Fuller, George V. Dietrich, Charles E. Grant, Zephania Lewis, Joseph Thirlwell, James Paden, Fred Seacord, and Asa A. Madison. L. F. Wertman was elected vice-president January 14, 1895, and elected as president, January 18, 1897, continuing in the banking service to this date. Mr. Fred Seacord was elected vice-president, January 18, 1897, and served to January 19, 1903. Mr. G. A. Lawrence succeeded Mr. Seacord, as vice-president, and is serving at this date. Mr. Loren Stevens was appointed cashier May 11, 1896, and served to June 1, 1903. January 26, 1903, F. L. Conger was appointed assistant cashier and January 18, 1904, appointed cashier and is serving in that capacity at the present date.

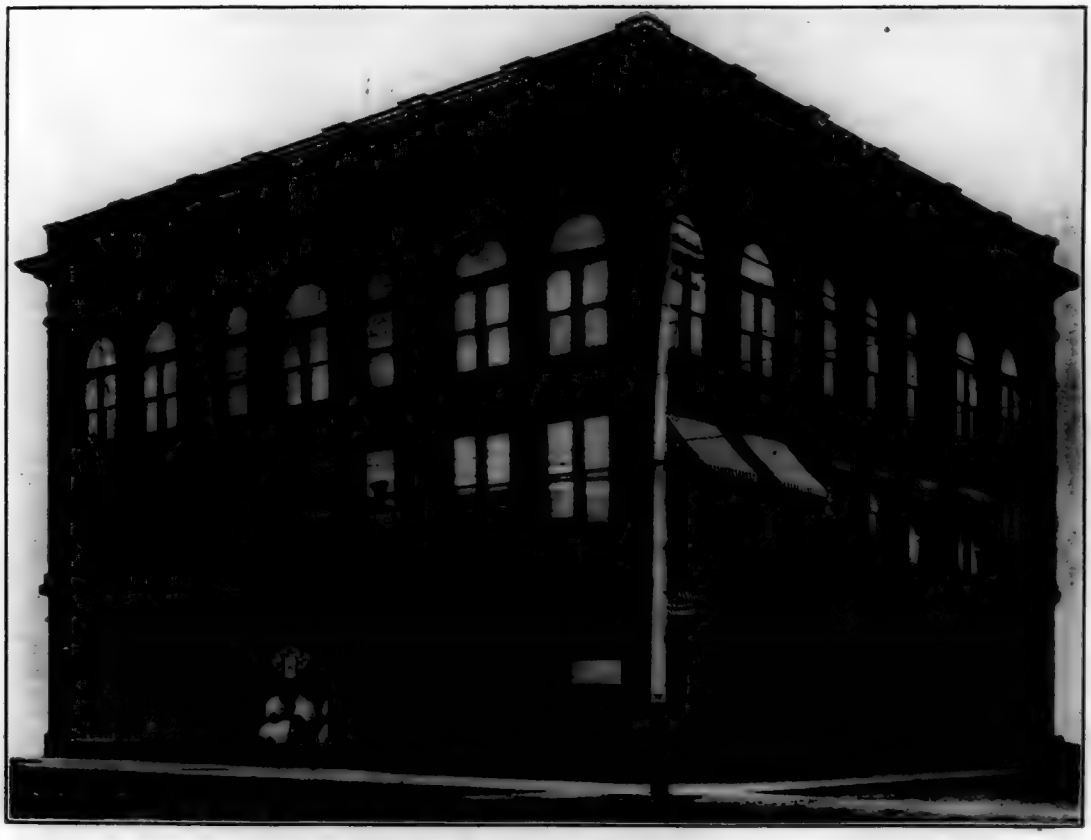
The present bank building was remodeled and rebuilt in the year 1901. The bank's net earnings have been $1,059,250. Its present capital is $150,000.00, surplus and undivided profits, $238,750.00, total, $388,750. The present directors are Howard Knowles, G. A. Lawrence, Robert Chappell, Geo. C. Lescher, A. J. Perry, W. L. Steele, J. G. Burnaugh, G. L. Avery, C. O. Lewis and L. F. Wertman.

During all these forty-nine years, the First National Bank has stood firm as a rock in strength, solid beyond question in good times and bad; conservative under all circumstances; has constantly worked for the interest of its patrons and for the upbuilding of the city.



GALESBURG NATIONAL BANK

GALESBURG, ILLINOIS, February 25, 1884.

Pursuant to a call issued by W. W. Washburn, the stockholders of the Galesburg National Bank assembled in the office of Bancroft & Moulton in the city of Galesburg, Illinois, on Monday afternoon, February 25, 1884, at half past one o'clock for the purpose of completing the organization and electing eleven directors. The meeting was called to order by W. W. Washburn who nominated for chairman, Mr. F. H. Rearick, who was duly elected. Mr. J. L. Hastings was chosen secretary. The object of the meeting being to complete the organization of the Galesburg National Bank, the following named gentlemen were elected directors: William Robson, Albert Webster, O. F. Price, James E. Brown, A. A. Smith, A. W. Berggren, J. D. Besler, C. E. Lanstrum, B. F. Arnold, W. W. Washburn and H. M. Sisson.

The meeting as above was held pursuant to a circular letter issued February 25, 1884, by W. W. Washburn and mailed to those who had, at that time, subscribed for stock in the new bank to be called the Galesburg National Bank. At the next meeting of the board of directors, W. W. Washburn was elected president of the bank and James H. Losey, cashier. The bank opened for business in May, 1884. The gentlemen who were elected as directors at the first meeting continued to serve without change until the January meeting in 1886, when Hon. A. A. Smith, at that time circuit judge, declined a re-election and P. F. Brown was chosen director in his place. Mr. William Robson was chosen vice-president of the bank and continued so until his death in January, 1901. On his death, he was succeeded as director by his son, E. Percy Robson. Mr. W. W. Washburn was made vice-president to succeed Mr. Robson and continued this connection with the bank until his death in 1901. In January, 1889, P. F. Brown was made president and has so continued until the present time. Mr. James H. Losey continued as cashier of the bank until July 1, 1904, when he resigned to engage in business of his own and was succeeded by A. S. Hamilton, who still holds that position.

The present officers and employees are: P. F. Brown, president; A. W.

Berggren, vice-president; A. S. Hamilton, cashier; Curtis H. Brown, teller; Matthew Johnson, bookkeeper; Harry Anderson, assistant bookkeeper; Clarence Gustafson, clerk and messenger; and Stella Carlson, stenographer.

The above constitutes the formation of the bank, its first officers and those at present in command. Of the original directors, there remain at the present time but three, B. F. Arnold, J. D. Besler and A. W. Berggren, sturdy rocks in the foundation of a solid, substantial institution. In the ranks of its board, from the first to the last, it may readily be perceived, conservatism formed a large element in its makeup, standing always for sound banking and financial strength. From the first, it has sought to care for its patrons in such a manner as to merit their confidence and esteem and at the same time, meet the approbation of its stockholders and founders.

BANK OF GALESBURG

In January, 1889, Mr. J. R. Lindgren of the banking firm of Haugan & Lindgren of Chicago, Ill., now State Bank of Chicago, made overtures to Mr. P. N. Granville, then city treasurer of Galesburg, to open a savings bank in Galesburg, giving him authority to select men for different positions in the bank, Mr. Lindgren to finance the new venture. Mr. Granville not having had any previous experience in banking, induced Mr. Axel Gabrielson, a experienced banker, to take charge as cashier and Mr. Henry E. Olson, a man of experience in the insurance business, was selected as bookkeeper, Mr. Granville accepting the position of assistant cashier. The bank was opened up for business at No. 308 East Main street, on the first day of April, 1889, and gained the confidence of the people from the start. The officers did not solicit or work for commercial business accounts, although some came to them unsolicited. The principal object was to induce people, who were not accustomed to banking, to open an account and receive interest on such amounts as they could lay aside from time to time. No interest was being paid by other banks in the city at that time, nor did the other banks pay interest on deposits until 1900.

In the summer of 1891 Hon. Alfred M. Craig, then judge of the Supreme court of the state of Illinois, having disposed of his bank stock holdings in Galesburg, entered into an agreement with Mr. J. R. Lindgren to organize the Bank of Galesburg as a state bank instead of a private bank, and on August 4, 1891, authority was given by the state department to Axel Gabrielson, P. N. Granville, A. W. Berggren and A. M. Craig to incorporate the Bank of Galesburg, at Galesburg, Illinois, whereupon the following persons subscribed for and became stockholders of the new bank, viz.:

J. R. Lindgren, A. M. Craig, P. N. Granville, J. M. Scott, H. E. Olson, L. O. Williamson, A. W. Berggren, J. F. Anderson, N. O. G. Johnson, W. H. Smollinger M. O. Williamson, S. R. Swanson, A. O. Peterson, Mrs. M. S. Peterson, Peter Nelson, F. D. Vittum, G. N. Hamilton, F. T. Peterson, Claus Anderson, D. L. Peterson, J. P. Anderson, E. L. Thorsen, J. H. Williamson, E. Kimpton, D. W. Aldrich, A. W. Truedson, S. W. Swanson, D. B. Swanson, Chas. Burkhardt, Thos. McKee, Nels M. Burgland, Olof Hawkinson, G. W. Thompson, L. J. Olson, G. Hawkinson, F. R. Jelliff, J. Williamson, J. E. Williamson, J. D. Welsh, C. A.

Erickson, A. W. Erickson, Miss E. C. Anderson, Miss Lena Anderson, Miss A. C. Highlander, Miss Emma Highlander, G. W. Prince, S. H. Olson, Mrs. Elise Nirdlinger, J. O. Frost, Murphy Bros. & Anderson, R. W. Colville, T. W. Peterson, R. W. Townsend, L. A. Townsend.

The first meeting of the stockholders was called for the purpose of electing directors, etc., to meet Sept. 17, 1891, at which meeting 765 shares were represented. The number of directors was fixed at nine and the following were then elected to serve the remaining part of the fiscal year, each receiving the full 765 votes, viz.: A. M. Craig, P. N. Granville, W. H. Smollinger, M. O. Williamson, Peter Nelson, S. R. Swanson, A. O. Peterson, N. O. G. Johnson and J. R. Lindgren.

On Sept. 15, 1891, the directors held their first meeting and elected the following officers: Hon. A. M. Craig, president; Peter Nelson, vice-president; Axel Gabrielson, cashier; P. N. Granville, assistant cashier and secretary.

The charter of the bank was dated Oct. 3, 1891, and upon the 5th day of October, 1891, the bank adopted its by-laws and opened up for business under a state charter.

The bank statement published for January 2, 1892, was as follows:

Statement, Jan. 2, 1892.

Resources.		Liabilities.
Loans and discounts	$143,131.46	Capital stock paid in	$100,000.00
Furniture and fixtures	1,425.00	Undivided profits	213.56
Premium account	187.64	Deposits	122,954.14
Profit and loss	312.63
Cash and sight exchange	78,210.97
	$223,167.70		$223,167.70

Owing to director J. R. Lindgren having his home in Chicago he advised having a home man elected in his stead, which wish was complied with by electing Mr. Olof Hawkinson a director at the annual meeting in January, 1892. Our banking room was beginning to be considered as undesirable for such purposes. Hon. A. M. Craig, the president, suggested the buying of a lot and erecting a bank building, and on May 23, 1892, reported having an option on a lot in the next block west of our present location, size 25 ft. by 100 ft. The board authorized the purchase of same, which was accordingly done, but action on building thereon was delayed on account of leases and later developments changed all plans from that location.

September 19, 1892, Mr. Axel Gabrielson presented his resignation as cashier on account of entering into the ministry, whereupon the board accepted his resignation and elected officers to fill vacancies as follows: P. N. Granville, cashier, H. E. Olson, assistant cashier, and O. E. Peterson, bookkeeper. At the regular meeting of the board of directors of July 8, 1895, the bank statement was read showing an undivided profit of $8,000.00, whereupon a motion was made and carried to pay a dividend of three per cent to stockholders and place $5,000.00 into a surplus fund. This was the first dividend of this new bank.

The need of a large working force was being more manifest and on April 1, 1893, Mr. Geo. H. Craig, then cashier of the Bank of Altona, was elected to fill the position of teller.

At the annual stockholders' meeting of Jan. 2, 1905, Major H. H. Clay was elected director in place of A. O. Peterson, who retired from the board.

In the month of April, 1895, Judge Craig informed the board that he had procured a lease of the corner store room of the Fraternity hall building, then occupied as a drug store, for a term of ten years, beginning February, 1897.

On Feb. 5, 1896, occurred the death of Mr. George H. Craig, teller of the bank. His courteous and kindly disposition had endeared him to all concerned and it was a severe blow to his father, Judge Craig, the president of the bank. Mr. O. E. Peterson was elected teller, to fill the vacancy and Mr. Alfred J. Peterson was employed as bookkeeper. On March 28, 1896, occurred the death of Mr. Olof Hawkinson, one of our directors, and the vacancy was not filled until the annual meeting in January, 1897, at which time Mr. Nels M. Burgland was elected a director in his stead.

The bank having leased the corner store room of the Covenant Mutual Association building, corner of Main and Kellogg street, proceeded to erect a vault therein and on Feb. 1, 1897, moved into the more desirable and lighter room.

At this time the following statement of the condition of the bank was shown:

Statement, Feb. 6, 1897.

At the meeting of the board of directors following the annual stockholders' meeting of Jan. 3, 1898, Mr. Peter Nelson, then vice-president, placed in nomination director N. O. G. Johnson for that office and he was elected vice-president for the ensuing year, the other officers all being re-elected to their respective offices. During the year of 1900, directors Peter Nelson and W. H. Smollinger having disposed of their bank stock, left a vacancy in the board, which remained as such until the annual stockholders' meeting of Jan. 7, 1901, at which time Messrs. Thos. W. Peterson and William Burnside were elected to fill said vacancies.

During the year 1901, the work increased so it became necessary to procure more help and in June of 1901, Mr. Arvid P. Zetterberg was added to the force as bookkeeper.

October 3, 1901, being our tenth anniversary as an incorporated bank, we made the following statement:

In August, 1902, Mr. A. P. Zetterberg having resigned as bookkeeper to enter college, Mr. Lawrence D. Johnson was chosen to take position of bookkeeper.

At the directors' meeting of Dec. 22, 1902, occurred an announcement that took the board by surprise. The president, Hon. A. M. Craig, stated he had purchased from Stewart Goodrell, receiver of the Covenant Mutual Life Association, lot six (6), block twenty-eight (28) for the sum of forty-six thousand dollars, for the bank if the directors chose to confirm it, otherwise he would keep it. The directors promptly approved the action and authorized the cashier, P. N. Granville, to pay the purchase money. This lot was 66 ft. by 165 ft. deep, covered by a building, a part being six stories in height, the front part being three stories. This purchase made safe our bank location, as we occupied the corner store room of said building and special gratitude was voiced to Judge Craig in the meeting regarding the purchase.

At the annual stockholders' meeting of January, 1903, Mr. J. R. Lindgren was called upon to act as director in place of director M. O. Williamson, resigned. In April, 1903, Mr. O. E. Peterson resigned his position as teller to accept the position of cashiership of the newly organized State Bank of Victoria. The resignation was accepted and Mr. A. J. Peterson was elected to fill the position of teller vacated by Mr. O. E. Peterson, and Mr. A. M. Johnson was employed as assistant bookkeeper.

At the annual meeting of January, 1904, Mr. William Coffman was elected director to succeed Mr. J. R. Lindgren of Chicago. On March 6, 1904, Mr. Henry E. Olson, assistant cashier, was called away by death and the office of assistant cashier remained vacant until October of the same year, at which time Mr. Chas. E. Johnson, teller of the People's Trust & Savings Bank, was elected assistant cashier to fill vacancy.

August, 1905, H. N. Bloomquist was employed as collector. During the year, 1906, director Nels M. Burgland disposed of his bank holdings and at the next annual stockholders' meeting (Jan. 7, 1907) Mr. Charles C. Craig was elected director to fill vacancy, and in June, 1909, Mr. Leonard Streedain was added to the office force.

The need for more banking room was being felt daily but owing to the fact of long leases held by tenants, the attempt was delayed. The lease of the Galesburg Business Men's Club, who were occupying the whole third floor space of the building, would expire in December, 1910, and as they were putting up a building of their own, the directors decided this to be a good time to remodel the whole building, enlarge the banking room, which was sorely needed, and make such alterations as would make the building a modern one in all respects. With this end in view Hon. A. M. Craig, president of the bank, at a meeting of the board of directors, May 16, 1910, presented the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously:

"Resolved, That Chas. E. Johnson and Directors H. H. Clay, C. C. Craig, P. N. Granville and S. R. Swanson be and hereby are appointed a committee to examine Bank of Galesburg building, report to the board what changes should be made and the cost; and they are further authorized to employ an architect to assist in the investigation, procure plans, etc.," which resolution was carried into effect and preliminary work started.

In 1910, A. M. Johnson and H. N. Bloomquist, bookkeeper and assistant bookkeeper, resigned to accept other positions. R. A. Christenson was employed as collector.

At the directors' meeting held Sept. 19, 1910, Hon. A. M. Craig, president of the board, called attention to the fact that the capital stock should be increased from $100,000.00 to $125,000.00 in view of improvements contemplated, and to better facilitate the enlarged business demands. Directors C. C. Craig, P. N. Granville, and T. W. Peterson were then appointed a committee with authority to prepare necessary papers, fix time of a stockholders' meeting to vote on the question, etc. Oct. 31, 1910, was the time fixed, and 915 votes were cast in favor of the proposed increase at the meeting held Oct. 31, 1910, and at the meeting held Dec. 5, 1910, the total shares of the increased stock was reported as having been subscribed for payment to be made by Jan. 3, 1911. On March 6, 1911, the board of directors authorized the building committee to enter into a contract with the Diebold Safe & Lock Co., of Canton, Ohio, to build a concrete steel re-inforced vault, with steel lining and two steel vault doors, as per specifications and at the next meeting authorized the same committee to contract with the Wollaeger Manufacturing Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., to build and furnish bank fixtures for new banking room, which fixtures were to be of marble and bronze as shown in specifications furnished.

At the directors' meeting April 17, 1911, on motion of Director Granville, it was carried unanimously that two stories be added to the front part of the bank building to correspond with the five story part in the rear and also that an expert opinion be secured from some civil engineer firm in Chicago as to strength of foundations, walls and columns of the present building, and on April 20, 1911, Messrs. E. C. and R. M. Shankland Civil Engineers Company of Chicago made such examination very thoroughly and pronounced it perfectly safe. Architect N. K. Aldrich was then authorized to prepare plans and specifications and place in hands of contractors for bids on July 10, 1911. Bids were received and shortly thereafter were given to lowest bidders as follows: Building contract to Mr. M. E. Sweeney; plumbing, heating, etc., to Mr. Oscar Hvarven; and electric lighting to Mr. F. J. Nelson. In August, 1911, the work increased and Miss Alma Palmquist was employed as stenographer.

August 28, 1911, was the last meeting presided over by the Hon. A. M. Craig of this board of directors. During the week he contracted a heavy cold, and although he visited the bank every day including Saturday, September 2nd, that night at midnight he became partially unconscious and died Wednesday evening, Sept. 6, 1911, beloved and revered by his many associates and acquaintances. He had during his long life of 81 years acquired both a national and state wide reputation as lawyer, judge and jurist. His banking associates felt his loss keenly. His ripe judgment in business affairs, his ability as a lawyer and adviser and his standing as an exponent of honesty and fair dealing was universally known and his financial worth and standing conceded. His finances were left in good condition to his two sons, Messrs. Harvey A. and Charles C. Craig, who were well fitted by education and ability to carry on his affairs. The board of directors at their meeting, Sept. 11, 1911, unanimously made choice of Director Charles C. Craig to become the president of Bank of Galesburg to succeed his father. At the same meeting Mr. Chas. E. Johnson was chosen a director to fill vacancy in the board.

October 5, 1911, was the 20th anniversary of this bank, and at the close of business that day the following statement was shown:

act of the legislature which was permissible before the adoption of the Constitution of 1870. Its charter is perpetual.

The original incorporators were: Charles E. Grant, Marcus Belden, Andrew S. Hoover, E. R. Adams, Timothy Nash, John B. Colton, Alfred Kitchell, A. C. Clay, Chauncey S. Colton, H. S. Hurd, Chas. Brechwald.

The capital stock of the bank was for many years $100,000.00, but in 1891 the capital of same was increased to $200,000.00.

The first board of directors were: C. S. Colton, C. E. Grant, Marcus Belden, H. S. Hurd, J. B. Colton, O. T. Johnson, A. S. Hoover, W. H. Little, E. R. Adams.

The presidents of this bank since its organization have been as follows, and in the order named, to-wit: Chauncey S. Colton, Francis Colton, J. L. Burkhalter, L. A. Townsend.

The cashiers of the bank since its organization have been as follows, and in the order named, to-wit: W. M. Provine, W. H. Little, P. F. Brown, Ion Dieterich, L. F. Wertman, L. A. Townsend, S. V. The home of this bank up to 1903 was in the Union hotel block, but in the spring of 1903 it purchased the old Second National Bank property on the corner of Cherry and Main streets, and in the fall of that year it moved into this building, where it is now located.

It is one of the old "land marks" in the financial history of this county, and has always been a factor and closely identified with the enterprise, growth and improvements of this city and surrounding country.

PEOPLE'S TRUST & SAVINGS BANK, GALESBURG, ILL.

The People's Trust & Savings Bank had its birth in the banking room occupied by the old Second National Bank, at the northwest corner of Main and Cherry streets, in the year 1900. This bank has grown from a small institution doing an exclusive savings business, to one of the largest banks in this part of the state, transacting business in all its branches and having a large trust department.

The history of the People's Trust & Savings Bank would be incomplete without going into the history of the Second National Bank, whose business they eventually succeeded to, and who had occupied the same building for forty years. Before the organization of the Second National Bank in 1864, the bank building had been occupied and had been running as a private bank, known as Reed's Bank, Mr. A. D. Reed being head of the institution. Mr. Reed had been prominent in financial circles in Galesburg's early days, he having built the large home now occupied by Mr. A. Dean on the northwest corner of Main and Maple ave. Mr. Reed, after the organization of the Second National Bank, went to Chicago and there organized the City National Bank of Chicago.

Prominent in the organization of the Second National Bank were the sturdy financiers and pioneers of Galesburg, among whom being J. P. Frost, organizer of the Frost Manufacturing Company; Edwin Post, the leading lumber man; Geo. W. Brown, the inventor of the Brown Corn Planter; Henry Hitchcock, superintendent of the Burlington road; Martin Gay, Josiah Babcock, J. F. Stilson, A. N. Bancroft, father of Edgar Bancroft, Alfred Knowles, Andrew Harrington, A. C. Reed, Albert Watkins, Norman Anthony, J. V. N. Standish, Job Swift, David Sanborn, W. H. Browning.

The Second National Bank had a prosperous career, doing business forty years, never missing a dividend. This bank had much to do with the building up of our industrial and educational institutions. At the expiration of its forty years of existence, the charter having expired in the year 1903, it was thought best by the directors to close the affairs of the Second National Bank, their stock having been scattered throughout the United States, and there being very few local stockholders to help carry on the business. The splendid prosperity of the Second National Bank was due to its strict adherence to rules of conservative banking and its fair dealing.

Among the splendid men who had been prominent in the management of the Second National Bank, and to a great extent responsible for its prosperity, were David Sanborn, a man of broad intellect and splendid financial ability; Mr. J. T. McKnight, now well known as the most prominent figure in Galesburg's financial world; Mr. Albert J. Perry, for fourteen years president of the bank, and Mr. J. G. Vivion, for a number of years cashier and acting manager of the bank.

The People's Trust & Savings Bank had been doing business in the banking room of the Second National Bank since the year 1900. Among those prominent in the organization of the People's Trust & Savings Bank were the following well-known citizens and representatives in the financial world: J. T. McKnight, J. K. Mitchell, Hon. E. A. Bancroft, J. G. Vivion, S. B. and Andrew Harrington, Judge P. S. Post, J. C. Simpson, Lake W. Sanborn, Judge G. W. Thompson, W. B. Throop, G. K. Pittard, W. A. Armstrong.

The first board of directors of the People's Trust & Savings Bank were Messrs. J. K. Mitchell, J. T. McKnight, P. S. Post, Frank H. Johnson, A. D. Schultz, W. B. Throop, J. G. Vivion.

The founders of the bank felt that no institution could be organized that would do more good for the people at large than a large savings institution, their idea being to teach economy, saving and thrift, these being considered kindred to the home, the school, and the church, for the good of the community and the state; it being especially desired to seek the children's accounts, in fact, the idea was to make this a people's bank, where all people, farmers, merchants, professional men, the laborers, in fact all men, women and children could have a banking home, and receive profits on their deposits whether large or small.

The first officers of the bank were as follows: J. K. Mitchell, president; P. S. Post, vice president; J. G. Vivion, cashier.

The affairs of the People's Trust & Savings Bank went on prosperously, there being a steady increase in deposits. The bank did exclusively a savings bank business until the year 1903, when as above stated, the charter of the Second National Bank having expired, the People's Trust & Savings Bank took over their loans, paying for the same in cash. Most of the depositors of the Second National Bank transferred their business to the People's Trust & Savings Bank. The bank at this time opened a commercial department.

In 1903 there had been organized a new bank in Galesburg, known as the Galesburg Trust & Savings Bank. A conference was held between the parties representing the Galesburg Trust & Savings Bank and the officers and directors of the People's Trust & Savings Bank, and a union of the two banks into one large strong bank was decided upon. The capital at this time was increased from $100,000.00 to $250,000.00, thus making it one of the strongest banks in central Illinois. The new officers of the People's Trust & Savings Bank, after this combination, were: Hon. M. O. Williamson, president; J. G. Vivion, vice president, and H. J. Butt, cashier. The directors were: M. O. Williamson, H. J. Butt, Geo. W. Gale, S. L. Charles, H. D. Judson, J. C. Simpson, A. F. Paden, J. T. McKnight, J. G. Vivion, J. K. Mitchell and W. S. Purington.

The bank has had continuous prosperity since the time of its organization, their business growing and expanding and filling a larger and larger share in the financial affairs of the city of Galesburg, until at the present time the bank has the largest deposits of any bank in the city, or in this part of the state.

The bank has in connection with the banking business a trust department, through which they are authorized by the state to act as executors, administrators, guardians, conservators, or handle trusts. This department has grown very popular, some very large estates having been settled, and are now in course of settlement through the bank; this being acknowledged the most economical and safest way of handling an estate.

The officers of the bank at the present time are: M. O. Williamson, president; J. T. McKnight, vice president; W. A. Armstrong, cashier; H. E. Hanlon, assistant cashier.

The directors are: John H. Lewis, Jr., Geo. W. Thompson, Samuel L. Charles, James O'Connor, G. W. Gale, C. F. Hurburgh, A. F. Paden, W. H. Pankey, J. J. Welsh, M. O. Williamson and J. T. McKnight.

MAQUON STATE BANK

The Maquon State Bank was the outgrowth of and successor to the bank of Wm. Swigart. Mr. Swigart began his private bank in 1881. His sterling business qualities, backed by rich holdings of real estate, gained and held the confidence of the community. This bank continued with ever-increasing prosperity until September, 1903, when it was reorganized and chartered as the Maquon State Bank with a capital stock of $30,000. First officers were: Wm. Swigart, president; H. F. Townsend, cashier. Mr. Swigart still continued to fill the office of president and is, at the age of almost ninety years, active, energetic and faithful in the discharge of the duties of the office. The other officers at the present time are: D. S. Hartsook, vice president; J. E. Shearer, cashier.

The present capital, surplus and undivided profits amount to $43,000, with deposits of $160,000.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK, MAQUON

Commenced business December 24, 1906; capital, $35,000.

Officers during the years 1907 and 1908 were: F. C. Bearmore, president; John Wolf, vice president; H. F. Townsend, cashier.

For 1909: F. C. Bearmore, president; John Wolf, vice president; H. F. Hanlon. cashier.

For 1910, 1911 and to this date: F. C. Bearmore, president; John Wolf, vice president; A. S. Potter, cashier.

Its present capital is $35,000; surplus, $8,000. The bank has the confidence of the community and is doing a prosperous business.

YATES CITY.

The history of the banking business of Yates City began in the fall of 1871 when J. M. Taylor and Isaac Lambert opened a bank in the rear room of the brick building, which had been built during the summer of that year by J. H. Nicholson, on the southeast corner of Main and Union streets.

The bank as organized at this time was known as the Farmers Bank, and J. M. Taylor held the position of president; Isaac Lambert, vice president, and John Lambert, cashier. It was a private institution, therefore did not publish any statements of its business, hence we are unable to state what its capital stock was or anything more concerning the details of the business.

Isaac Lambert did not continue long in the firm, but soon withdrew his interest, leaving J. M. Taylor alone, who continued for some years and had at one time associated with him James McKeighan, who assisted him for a while financially. About the year 1878 or 1879, Mr. Taylor, not finding the business as profitable as he had anticipated, concluded to close up the business. This he accomplished in a few months' time. Then he moved to Iowa where he again embarked in the same line.

At this time there seems to have been a lapse of about one year when there was no bank in active business, but on August 1, 1880, J. H. Nicholson, W. P. Parker and L. F. Wertman bought the fixtures formerly used by J. M. Taylor and Isaac Lambert, and opened a bank in the same room previously used for that purpose, also under the same name, Farmers Bank, with J. H. Nicholson, president; W. P. Parker, vice president, and L. F. Wertman, cashier. They had no fixed capital stock at this time, but paid yearly dividends from the earnings of the business and added the balance to the stock.

The business was conducted along these lines for the next nine years when in 1889, W. P. Parker and L. F. Wertman withdrew, as Mr. Parker did not desire to continue longer in the business, and Mr. Wertman had made arrangements to accept the position of cashier of the Farmers & Mechanics Bank of Galesburg, Illinois.

The bank continued in its usual manner from this time and was conducted by J. H. Nicholson & Company as proprietors, J. H. Nicholson being president; C. D. North, vice president, and S. C. Ransom, cashier. Mr. Ransom remained in this position until November, 1890, when he resigned to fill the office of superintendent of schools of Knox county, his place being taken by J. Mason who had been for many years a resident of the community and was therefore well known to the customers of the bank. Mr. Mason continued in this capacity for only about one year when he resigned to enter the banking business for himself in his home town of Farmington, Illinois.

The position of cashier was taken up at this time by F. E. Wilson of Knoxville, Illinois, who continued to fill the office for about twelve years or until 1903, when he also resigned, having decided to open a bank in Knoxville, Illinois. During the time Mr. Wilson served as cashier, the business increased to the extent that more help was required, and E. J. H. North was installed as assistant cashier in which position he remained until August, 1906.

Upon the resignation of Mr. Wilson as cashier, J. Mason, who had previously served in this capacity during 1890 and 1891, was called upon again to take up the work and he remained in that position from 1903 until August, 1906.

In 1893, J. H. Nicholson, the senior member of the firm of J. H. Nicholson & Company, and president of the bank, died and the firm name was changed to C. D. North & Co., although the bank continued to operate as the Farmers Bank.

During this same year, 1893, it became necessary, on account of the growing business, to provide more commodious quarters and the front room of the same building in which the business was being conducted, was remodeled along modern lines; a new plate glass front being put in, with a corner entrance, a fireproof brick vault being built, large enough to accommodate a burglar-proof safe and storage room for valuable papers, also modern furniture and fixtures and all other necessary accoutrements to enable the business to be handled more rapidly and satisfactorily. Previous to this time, the money and valuable papers had been kept in a large safe as they had no vault, and to prevent the possibility of their being destroyed by fire, an open top cistern had been built directly under the safe, in the basement, with the expectation that in case of fire, the safe would fall into the cistern, thus preventing the destruction of its contents.

The business was continued in this room under the name, Farmers Bank, C. D. North & Company, proprietors, as previously stated, until August, 1906, when it united with the Peoples Bank, as will be described later.

During the summer of 1889, Walter Bailey, Henry Hare and Robert Fulton, all men of considerable wealth, and residents of Salem and Elba townships, Knox county, Illinois, decided to organize and operate a second bank in Yates City, and accordingly on September 19, 1889, all necessary arrangements having been made, they opened for business in the northeast corner of the brick building on the east half of lot nine in block twenty-two, which building also joined, on the east, the one already occupied by the Farmers Bank.

The paid-up capital stock of this institution, which was to be known as the Peoples Bank, was $9,900, and Walter Bailey was its first president and Robert Fulton its first cashier. The business was conducted by these three men until Mr. Hare's death in January, 1892, his interest being assumed by his widow who continued as a partner until February, 1893, when she sold her interest to L. A. Lawrence who was then in the lumber and farm implement business in Yates City.

Mr. Fulton's health also failed at this time and he died in February, 1893, and his widow continued in the business until September, 1895, when she sold her share to the other partners, Walter Bailey and L. A. Lawrence.

The next change to occur in this business was in December, 1895, when Mr. Bailey, the senior member of the firm and president of the bank, passed away on the 14th day of the month and his widow assumed his interest which necessitated the change in the title of the firm from Walter Bailey & Company to Harriet L. Bailey & Company.

Mrs. Bailey was connected with the business until December, 1899, when she concluded to withdraw and sold her interest to L. A. Lawrence, thus giving him full control of the business and her name was at this time dropped from the title of the firm which was from that time until August 1, 1906, known as the Peoples Bank, L. A. Lawrence, proprietor.

During the spring of 1906, arrangements were made between the proprietors of the Farmers Bank and Peoples Bank, previously described, to unite and accordingly, on August 1, 1906, this plan was consummated and the business of the two institutions was consolidated into the bank with a capital stock of $20,000, under the name of Bank of Yates City, North, Nicholson & Lawrence, proprietors, in the room previously occupied by the Farmers Bank.

Since this union would necessitate more and better facilities for conducting and handling the business, the rear room in the building, which had served as an office for the original bank in the year 1871, was now again brought into use, and a fireproof vault was constructed in this room, and a nest of deposit boxes was installed to provide storage room for those having papers they might wish to keep in a safe and private place. This room was suitably fitted up with a large table, couch and other necessary furniture and serves as a private consultation room for the bank and its patrons.

The first official board of the Bank of Yates City consisted of L. A. Lawrence, manager; J. Mason, cashier, and A. J. Lawrence, second cashier.

Under the able and efficient management of L. A. Lawrence, the business continued to grow and spread out until it covered not only the community surrounding Yates City, but reached out into more remote territory. In the summer of 1911, Mr. Lawrence's health failing, he was compelled to retire from the active management of the business and it was given over to his son, A. J. Lawrence, whose place as assistant cashier was now taken up by H. E. North.

From a small business as it was first begun in the year 1871, it has grown until its total liabilities and resources amount to $230,000 at the present writing, February, 1912. The Bank of Yates City is fully equipped to transact all business that comes ir. its line and also has facilities for making out all legal documents. It has always believed it was good business to keep abreast of the times in providing the latest improved machines for mechanical writing and calculation and has in daily use the latest styles of adding machine, typewriter, check protector and other such necessary articles for the swift and correct handling of the large business that comes to it daily.

Since writing the above, L. A. Lawrence has sold his one-half interest to A. J. Lawrence and Hugh A. Sloan.

ONEIDA

The Oneida Exchange Bank (private bank), one of the pioneer banks, was first established in 1858, was conducted by W. L. Hubbard for about nine years, then by J. B. Congers for several years, succeeded by J. N. Congers for several years. In 1877, a partnership was formed by A. B. Anderson and Frank Murdoch which was continued until Mr. Murdoch's death in February, 1908. Since then the business has been continued by A. B. Anderson and son (J. H. Anderson). It run without a stated capital. The proprietors are thoroughly respected in the community and nobody questions their solvency or honesty.

THE ONEIDA STATE BANK

This bank was organized in 1891 and commenced business September 17, 1891, in its new brick bank building erected in 1891 on the west side of Railroad street, with a capital stock of $25,000.

The original stockholders were: E. Marsh, L. R. Tayler, H. W. Crane, John F. Wicoff, Geo. K. Pittard, Gust E. Fredericks, J. W. Allen, W. L. Allen, Geo. W. Brainard, Mrs. Geo. W. Brainard, Frederick Becker, W. O. Dayton, Chas. S. Clark, Wm. D. Cook, Miss Jennie Cook, W. V. McKie, E. R. Shaw, Metcalf Bros., Jas. E. Tayler, J. N. Congers, A. F. McCornack, H. M. Mitchell.

Its first officers were: A. D. Metcalf, president, who served until his death in January, 1912; A. F. McCornack, vice president until 1898; James E. Tayler elected cashier and served to January, 1895; W. D. Patty succeeded Mr. Tayler and is cashier at this present date. Miss Anna Anderson has been assistant cashier since 1895, and has been connected with the bank since 1891.

George K. Pittard was elected vice president in 1898 and served to January, 1912. On February 6, 1912, George K. Pittard was elected president, and H. W. Crane, vice president. Its capital stock at this date is $25,000; surplus, $25,000.

Its present directors are: Geo. W. Brainard, H. W. Crane, John R. Mitchell, Gust E. Fredericks, W. D. Cook, W. V. McKie, S. P. Mitchell, Ernest Shaw, Geo. K. Pittard.

The bank was burglarized March 30, 1897, fully insured. The bank building was destroyed by fire July 1, 1900, and a new building erected.

THE PEOPLES BANK OF ABINGDON

The Peoples Bank of Abingdon opened December 1, 1878, with a capital stock of $30,000. The chief promoters in the organization of this institution were M. C. Bates and J. B. Mackay, who were elected president and cashier, respectively. From the first, this bank had a bright outlook and drew the patronage of the surrounding territory so much that three years later, the capital was increased to $50,000. But notwithstanding its bright future, there remained one great hindrance, namely, that it was organized as a co-partnership institution rather than a state or national. Hence the excessive loans, not only to the stockholders, but directors as well, became appalling till it was thought best to organize as a national bank where excessive loans are not permissable and publicity of condition is demanded. Through the efforts of W. A. Latimer, five of the substantial men of the town advanced ten thousand dollars each and a charter was granted them August 5, 1885, as the

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF ABINGDON

These original stockholders were M. C. Bates, Thos. Newell, M. C. Kimball, J. Harts Miller and J. B. Mackay; the last being elected president and W. A. Latimer, cashier, at the first meeting of the board of directors in January, 1886. At the end of one year, Mr. Mackay retired from the presidency and M. C. Kimball was elected to the position, remaining till January, 1893, when Thos. Newell succeeded him. Upon the death of Mr. Newell some years later. W. B. Main became president.

Upon the resignation of W. A. Latimer in 1888, the cashiership was tendered H. B. Scheitlin, and on his resignation in January, 1893, Orion Latimer was elected to that position since which time he has been exceedingly zealous in the management of the affairs connected with the institution. From the very first, he gained the confidence of the people and through his guidance and by the selection of his office force, this bank has made remarkable progress for the last quarter of a century. Upon the resignation of Mr. Main in January, 1907, Mr. Orion Latimer was elected president, which position he now holds. At this time, G. A. Shipplett was elected cashier and H. L. Haynes, assistant cashier.

The First National Bank has always been noted for its courteous treatment to its patrons, by doing small favors which are of vital interest to them and giving them free exchange with all the world.

During the history of this institution, Abingdon has passed through the stages of a small village, country town, and has grown to the dignity of a small city with magnificent residences, an excellent school system, including a high class denominational college and a large number of thriving factories. In all these, the First National Bank takes the lead and keeps closely in touch with all things which are for the betterment of Abingdon and vicinity. To keep abreast with the times, to care for its clients' business requirements and to provide absolute safety for its depositors has been its chief concern. To follow out these ideas, the capital was increased to $75,000, and a surplus of $80,000 set aside in January, 1904.

The First National Bank is conducted on the lines of conservatism, coupled with accommodation, generous treatment with careful investments, ample facilities and absolute security for every one of its customers.

Its present officers are: Orion Latimer, president; J. A. Reynolds, vice president; George A. Shipplett, cashier; H. L. Haynes, assistant cashier.

Its present directors are: H. L. Haynes, B. P. Baird, J. F. Latimer, H. R. Crouch, J. A. Reynolds, G. A. Shipplett, Carl S. Burnside, C. D. Byram, T. E. Burnside, W. B. Dunlap, Orion Latimer.

Perhaps the best illustration of the conservatism, prosperity and general growth of the institution can be given by a comparison of the first and last published statements, as a national bank.

FIRST STATE & SAVINGS BANK, ABINGDON

This bank was organized and began business on April 15, 1902, with a paid-up capital at that time of $30,000.

On September 1, 1902, the capital was increased to $60,000.

The officers of the bank elected at the time of organization were: John Mosser, president; J. W. Hunter, vice president; G. K. Slough, cashier; F. W. Reynolds, assistant cashier, became identified with the bank September 1, 1903, and since its organization there has been no change of any kind in the officers of the institution.

The board of directors are: John Mosser, J. W. Hunter, Jas. W. Cox, A. B. Spies, C. W. Robertson, J. H. Simmons, Robert Byram, J. T. Main, Samuel T. Mosser.

The bank succeeded the private bank of John Mosser & Co. and has been very successful up to this time.

The bank pays regular annual dividends of 6% on its capital stock, and now has a surplus and undivided profit of $40,000. Its deposits run from $200,000 to $250,000.

During the summer of 1905, the bank erected the building it now occupies and owns. It is considered by many to be one of the finest and best equipped bank buildings in this part of Illinois.

Its officers and members of its board have been largely identified with all the progressive movements for the betterment of Abingdon and are all men of high standing and have the entire confidence of the city and community. The bank has recently been appointed U. S. Depository for Postal Savings.

BANK OF ALTONA

Judge A. M. Craig, then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois, believing that there was a good opening for a bank in the village of Altona, acted upon his belief and established the banking house of A. M. Craig & Co. on June 16, 1890, his son, George H. Craig, acting as cashier and John McKie, assistant cashier.

Being anxious to enlarge their scope of business and believing that they would be better able to serve the needs of their patrons by placing same on a more enduring basis by forming a corporation to take over the private banking business of A. M. Craig & Co., it was decided to organize a state bank. A meeting was held during September, 1891, and an application for permission to organize a state bank was made to the auditor of public accounts which was signed by John McKie, George H. Craig, J. C. Collinson and William Main.

The permit was granted September 15, 1891. The law permitting the organization of state banks being of recent enactment and the Bank of Altona being a new venture, many hesitated to invest in bank stock in the proposed new bank, but by the 26th of September all stock was subscribed for and the bank received its charter, taking over the banking house and business of A. M. Craig & Co., and began business as a state bank under the name of the Bank of Altona, October 3, 1891, with a paid-up capital of $30,000, it being one of the first state banks organized.

As the first board of directors of the Bank of Altona, the stockholders elected the following: A. M. Craig, J. M. McKie, C. S. Clark, William Main, J. P. Walgren, J. C. Collinson, Geo. E. Challman, who, with the exception of A. M. Craig, now deceased, are still serving on the board of directors. At their first meeting, the directors elected the following officers: President, A. M. Craig; vice president, C. S. Clark; cashier, Geo. H. Craig; assistant cashier, J. M. McKie.

According to the principles of sound banking, it was the aim of the officers of the bank to aid its patrons financially in every way possible. Owing to the fact that under the state law they were allowed to loan only ten per cent of their capital to one person, the bank was handicapped to a certain extent in handling real estate mortgages from lack of sufficient capital, and at an adjourned meeting of the stockholders called for the purpose of increasing the bank's capital, on July 25, 1896, it was decided that the capital stock be increased from $30,000 to $50,000. The new stock was readily disposed of and with ample capital, the bank has ever since been in a position to care for the financial needs of the community.

On the first day of December, 1903, a savings department was established in connection with the bank. The rate of interest on savings deposits fixed by the directors at that time was three per cent, which rate has been maintained ever since. This department has been well patronized until it now contains practically all savings of the community.

There have been but few changes of officers and directors since its organization. On the 6th day of February, 1896, the bank was called upon to mourn the loss of its cashier, Geo. H. Craig, who was stricken with typhoid fever and died at his home in Galesburg. As his successor, J. M. McKie was elected as cashier, February 28, 1896, and O. E. Peterson was elected as assistant cashier, which position he held until January, 1903, when, on account of his connection with the Bank of Galesburg as teller, he resigned and G. N. Larson was elected to fill the position of assistant cashier. For the second time in its history, the "silent reaper" entered into the ranks of officers and directors when, on the 6th day of September, 1911, its president, Hon. Alfred M. Craig, after a brief illness, answered the "Roll Call." He was succeeded as president of the bank by J. M. McKie who had been with the bank as assistant cashier and cashier ever since its organization, June 16, 1890, and on the board of directors, by his son, C. C. Craig.

The present board of directors are: J. M. McKie, C. C. Craig, C. S. Clark, William Main, J. P. Walgren, J. C. Collinson, Geo. E. Challman, and its present officers are: President, J. M. McKie; vice president, C. S. Clark; cashier, G. N. Larson.

The bank's present capital is $50,000, with a surplus of $81,000.

STATE BANK OF VICTORIA

The State Bank of Victoria was organized on April 6, 1903, with a capital of $35,000. The business of the Bank of Victoria, a private bank owned by O. P. Stoddard, Dyer Ford, B. S. Peck and Geo. D. Palmer of Galva, Illinois, having been purchased, the new organization commenced business on the 29th day of April, 1903, in the building formerly occupied by their predecessors. This, however, was to be only their temporary location as work on a new two-story brick bank building on the corner of Main and Union streets was soon started and the building was completed and occupied by the first of October of the same year.

The bank was organized with the following officers and directors: President, J. M. McKie; vice president, Frederick Becker; cashier, O. E. Peterson. Directors: J. M. McKie, Frederick Becker, C. S. Clark, J. A. Larson, G. L. Hedstrom, P. A. McDowell, A. A. Hedstrom, O. E. Peterson, A. M. Craig.

On January 3, 1910, C. V. Nelson was added to the official staff as assistant cashier, and on July 3, 1911, a change in the officers was made necessary owing to the previous resignation of the cashier, O. E. Peterson. C. V. Nelson was then elected cashier and Harrie S. Whiting, assistant cashier. The vacancy in the board of directors caused by the resignation of O. E. Peterson was filled by the election of William Nelson as director on January 2, 1911. Another vacancy caused by the death of A. M. Craig was filled by the election of C. C. Craig as director on January 8, 1912.

With the above exceptions, the officers and directors of the bank remain the same as those originally elected at its organization.

For the past six years, the bank has paid dividends of six per cent each year to its stockholders and has up to the present time, accumulated a surplus of $17,000. The steady growth of the institution into its present sound condition and its conservative business methods enable it to offer to the public excellent banking facilities, together with absolute security to its patrons, which are acknowledged and appreciated by a large majority of the people of Victoria and vicinity.

FIRST STATE BANK COMPANY, WILLIAMSFIELD

On January 22, 1890, L. J. Baird and David Cation opened a private bank in Williamsfield, Knox county, Illinois, under the title of Bank of Williamsfield, with L. J. Baird, president and David Cation, cashier. The business grew till it became necessary to employ more help, and Miss Emma Parker was appointed assistant cashier, and in 1900 she resigned and was succeeded by J. Mason, who in 1902 resigned. He was succeeded by J. A. Elliott.

In 1905, the same partners opened a bank at Laura, Illinois, and Mr. Elliott was transferred to the cashiership of it, and Earl T. Main became assistant cashier for Bank of Williamsfield.

In 1908 the bank was reorganized with a capital stock of $30,000, with L. J. Baird as president and David Cation, vice president, and Earl T. Main, cashier. In the fall of 1908, Mr. Baird concluded to go to Ames, Iowa, and so resigned the presidency and was succeeded to this office by David Cation, and J. D. Doubet was elected vice president. In March, Mr. Main was unfortunately killed in a railroad accident near Marshalltown, Iowa, and Mrs. Emma Parker Cation was temporarily appointed to the position of cashier which she held till the annual meeting when G. W. Wallick was appointed. About a year after this, Mr. Wallick resigned and Mr. A. L. Harris was appointed to take the place.

The bank has steadily grown and has always enjoyed a fair share of business and at the same time has always endeavored to supply all worthy undertakings with money.

The present board of directors are J. D. Doubet, Jay Welsh, P. A. Sunwall, O. J. Oberholtzer, Robt. E. Farwell, A. L. Harris and David Cation.

THE PRESS OF KNOX COUNTY

By Henry Emrich

The newspaper era of Knox county began in 1849, when the "Knox Intelligence" was started in Galesburg by Rev. C. R. Fisk, the paper being non-partisan in politics. From that date to the present the editor's chair of many of the papers that have come and gone has been filled by men of ability and character, men who advocated what they believed to be right, and did so from conscientious and not mercenary motives. Among these men, as the writer knew them, were J. H. Sherman, C. J. Sellon, Charles Faxon, Thomas Harrison, John S. Winter, W. S. Bush, Gen. M. S. Barnes, Steve R. Smith, E. A. Snively, Gershom Martin, Zaccheus Beatty, Judson Graves, Joe Prior, Clark E. Carr, only three of these, Snively, Carr and Graves being alive at this writing.

The politics of the county during the years from 1854 down to the election of Abraham Lincoln were often bitter in character, caused by the pro and anti-slavery policies of the two leading political parties of that time. But to the credit of Galesburg and Knox county, it can be said that at no time was there a pro-slavery paper in either. The only paper that survived for any length of time was the Free Democrat, started in 1854, its first editor being Southwick Davis, followed by W. H. Holcomb and B. F. Haskins. In 1855 C. J. Sellon became the editor, W. J. Woods being the owner of the office for the two years previous. About this time S. W. Brown, R. H. Whiting and D. H. Frisbie became owners of the plant, and S. D. McDonald managed the paper. In 1856 W. J. Woods again became the owner and C. J. Sellon again became the political manager. Late in 1856 Woods sold the office to J. H. Sherman, who in 1858 leased the office to Charles Faxon, who conducted the paper until about 1862 or 1863, when Sherman again resumed control of the office with Thomas Harrison as editor and David Myers as mechanical manager. In 1865 the plant was sold to J. H. Bailey, of the Princeton Republican, and his brother-in-law, J. S. McClelland, the latter coming to Galesburg from Ohio. Later on Mr. Bailey sold his interest to W. S. Bush, but Messrs. McClelland and Bush could not agree in the management of the office and Mr. Bush retired and assumed editorial control of the Register (now a part of the Republican Register). The name of the paper was then changed to the "Free Press." In 1872 Gen. M. S. Barnes bought the plant and changed it into a democratic paper, the basis of this change in politics of the first and oldest anti-slavery, free soil and republican paper, being laid by Mr. McClelland supporting Horace Greeley for president as against General Grant in 1872. Upon the death of Gen. Barnes, his son, Bennett, took charge of the plant, changed the name of the paper to the Knox County Chronicle, and in 1886 sold the office to Gershom Martin, the latter having unique and original ideas of his own as to the conduct of an independent democratic paper, and upon his death the office that had been in continuous operation for more than forty years, and during that time passing through the hands of many other editors and from a "black" republican to an ultra democratic paper, went into "history," the material being sold in quantities to suit the purchaser.

THE REGISTER—1866. This paper was started by Steve R. Smith, Wm. J. Mourer and H. D. Babcock. About 1868 W. S. Bush, late of the Free Press, took editorial charge of the paper, and a daily paper was issued. In 1872 E. F. Phelps bought the plant and soon after the Register and the Republican were merged into the Republican-Register, with Z. Beatty as editor, who conducted it in an able manner up to the time of his death.

THE REPUBLICAN was started in 1870 by Joe M. Prior and Henry Emrich, who in the fall of the same year transferred the same to Clark E. Carr, who in 1873 or 1874 merged it with the Register into the Republican-Register, whose history will be found elsewhere in this volume.

The history of the press of Galesburg would not be complete without mentioning W. S. Grubb, who came to Galesburg from Atlanta, Georgia, in 1878, and organized the Galesburg Publishing Company, and merged the two papers, the Republican and the Register into the Daily Republican-Register. As a business manager Mr. Grubb had few equals and no superiors, and under his wise management the financial affairs of the new enterprise flourished and the stock of the new company became dividend paying and valuable. He continued at his post of duty until his death.

THE PLAINDEALER. Judson Graves in 1872 removed the Republican newspaper plant from Kirkwood to Galesburg, and in 1875 changed the name Republic to the Plaindealer, as expressing more clearly the political character and editorial columns of the paper, it being independent republican in national and state politics, and liberal in religious and local matters. In 1879 Messrs. Henry Emrich and Iram B. Biggs purchased the office and with Mr. Emrich as editor conducted the paper until October, 1906, when they stopped its publication. During these twenty-seven years the Plaindealer advocated the principles and supported the candidates of the republican party, but at the same time reserving to itself and exercising the right to criticise the policies of that party when it thought they were not conserving the best interests of the people as a whole. In city affairs the Plaindealer always contended for good government and as a local organ of the liberal party had much to do with shaping the policy of that party for good city government and the carrying out of many needed local improvements.

The list of the various publications in Galesburg during the past sixty years is a long one and only a short mention of them is possible here.

HEMLANDET—1855-1866; a secular as well as religious Swedish paper edited by Rev. T. N. Haselquist. At that time the only Swedish paper in the United States, and one that was very influential in increasing the Swedish immigration to the United States, hundreds of copies of each issue being sent by Swedish-Americans to their friends in Sweden. It was finally removed to Chicago for increased facilities and is in existence today.

DET RÄTTA HEMLANDET—1856-1862; an organ of the Swedish Lutheran church.

FRIHETS VÄNNEN—1859-1861; a Swedish republican newspaper; editor not known.

KNOX COUNTY OBSERVER—1865; published by Louis V. Taft; existed for only a short time.

THE TIMES—1867; Ethan A. Snively; democratic; existed for about one year.

THE LIBERAL—1867-1870; a very "liberal" society paper, edited by Steve R. Smith. This gentleman also, in 1873, started THE SIDEWALKINGS, which had only a short career.

THE REVIEW—1877; started by Colville Bros.; republican; in 1878 it was changed to a monthly and soon after passed away.

Knox and Lombard Colleges have also published monthly journals, The Knox Student at Knox College and The Lombard Review at Lombard College. Both of them have been conducted with marked ability and have done much to benefit their alma maters. At one time the students of Knox College published a paper called the Coup d' Etat in addition to the Knox Student. The Coup d' Etat was started as the result of a disagreement over the election of managers of the Student. Both papers continued for some time when The Knox Student gave up the fight. The Coup d' Etat continued to be published for quite a number of years and finally the name "The Knox Student" was adopted as meaning more to the college.

THE HIGH SCHOOL BUDGET, a weekly edited and printed by the students of the Galesburg High School; devoted to the best interests of the high school and usually replete with "happy hits" at the expense of the lads and lasses attending the high school.

THE ENTERPRISE HERALD—The Abingdon Enterprise was established in 1880 by J. C. Cromer and its first issue was in July of that year. He continued its publication for a couple of years when he mysteriously disappeared and has never been heard from. Mrs. Cromer then sold the paper to Reed & Pendarvis, who kept it until 1893, when it was sold to C. A. Murdock, who was its editor something over a year, when it was sold and consolidated with the Herald. During this time its politics were varied, sometimes being republican, again independent, but never particularly vigorous.

The Herald was established in March, 1892, by E. M. Killough, who continued its publication until 1895, when he formed a partnership with M. A. Cleveland, and they together purchased the Enterprise and consolidated the two, making the Enterprise Herald. The Herald was democratic in politics, decidedly so on all questions. A year later Mr. Killough purchased the interest of his partner and continued the publication of the Enterprise Herald until his death in December, 1906. At this time his widow, Lulu Killough, took up the management of the paper and continued its editor and publisher with a son, Merle B., in charge of the mechanical department.

Locally the Enterprise Herald has been a home paper, working for Abingdon and its institutions, giving of its influence and its means for the up-keep of the same and for the establishment of new ones. It has never identified itself with either local party—people's or citizens'—but has thrown its influence where it felt would be for the betterment of the city in general, often taking a decided and active part in the local campaign.

In December, 1911, the circulation of the paper was transferred to The Kodac, and the mechanical department disposed of.

The Press of Knoxville. Knoxville's first newspaper was the Knoxville Journal, first being issued October 5, 1849, by John S. Winter and David Collins. It was neutral in politics, but was ably edited and a splendid exponent of the best principles of early times. In 1852, Mr. Winter transferred his interest to Mr. Collins, who in 1855 sold the plant to Mr. John Regan. Soon after the politics was changed from neutral to democratic. Mr. Winter then in 1856 began the publication of the Knox County Republican, when the Journal was discontinued for want of patronage, and the type and press was moved to Elmwood, where for many years Mr. Regan printed the Messenger. The Republican has not missed an issue since 1856, which will support the claim that it is the oldest newspaper in the county, or, in fact, this part of the state. On April 7, 1858, Zaccheus Beatty and W. T. Robinson succeeded as publishers. After many years Mr. Beatty disposed of his interest to Mr. O. A. Barnhart. On February 24, 1876, the plant and good will of The Republican was purchased by O. L. Campbell, who immediately enlarged the paper from a four-page to an eight and sixteen page paper and for more than thirty-four years this newspaper has labored for the upbuilding of Knoxville and Knox county. At this time the Republican is owned and managed by H. B. Andrews, who is conducting it in harmony with the early history of the office.

The Williamsfield Times was started in January, 1889, by C. D. Benfield. In the fall of 1890 the building and the Times plant was destroyed by fire. Mr. Benfield and Earl Benson restocked a new office and continued the publication. In the fall of 1891 Mr. Benson and J. M. Morneny bought out Mr. Benfield. On April 8, 1893, the Times plant was purchased by Mr. Hugh Irish, who came to Williamsfield from McDonough, and by him conducted in an able manner up to this date, a period of over eighteen years. The Times has always been a non-political paper and devoted to the best interests of its home town and people.

The Oneida News was founded by W. K. Maxwell in 1901 who conducted it as an independent paper until about five years ago, when a stock company was organized and incorporated for the publishing of the paper. Mr. Maxwell was editor and manager of the News until January, 1911, when he disposed of his interests in the paper to Frank C. Krans, who for twelve years published the Altona Record. Mr. Maxwell went to Peoria where he took a position on the Herald Transcript as special and editorial writer. The News is republican in politics and always ready to assist in any movement for the betterment and advancement of Oneida.

THE GALESBURG DAILY MAIL was started on May 14, 1891, by the Daily Mail Publishing Co. The control of the paper was in the hands of George W. and William R. Colville and William Bennett Barnes. Other members of the company were: S. H. Bateman, General Philip S. Post, F. A. Freer and H. L. May. W. O. Lovejoy later succeeded Mr. Bateman. George W. Colville was managing editor and William Bennett Barnes city editor, with William R. Colville as business manager.

There was no particular political motive in the starting of the Mail. The Republican-Register was the warm supporter of Colonel Clark E. Carr and opposed to him for the congressional nomination in the tenth district was Generai Philip Sydney Post. The appearance and tone of the new paper brought much credit to Messrs. Colville and Barnes and leaders of the Post faction obtained a heavier interest and then the Mail was given the task of counteracting the influence of the Republican-Register and fighting the battles of General Post. The subsequent victory of General Post enhanced the Mail's chances of continued success.

In 1895 Messrs. Colville and Barnes transferred their interests to D. H. and Ben B. Hampton, former proprietors of the Macomb Bystander. Early in their administration the publication was removed from the job office on Main street to more commodious quarters in a new building erected for it at 50-52 North Cherry street. In August, 1899, another move was made to the Marquette building on South Cherry street, where it has occupied three floors and from which it proposes to move in the autumn of 1912 still further south on Cherry street to a building especially constructed for its occupancy in the city hall block.

In January, 1900, Frank H. Sisson and Charles H. May assumed control of the Mail, when a transfer of the majority of the stock was made and the Messrs. Hampton retired.

In 1904 Messrs. May and Sisson sold out their interest in the paper to Andrew O. Lindstrum and a number of local associates. It was conducted by them until 1907. The management of this paper and of the Republican-Register, the other daily paper of the city, were closely allied, and there was a demand, growing as the years went on, for a paper which should be more independent. This demand culminated in the organization in October of 1907 of the Galesburg Publishing Company, whose object was to publish the Galesburg Evening Journal.

Before the new company could get its plant in operation, however, overtures came to it from Messrs. Lindstrum and West (Albert W. West had meanwhile associated himself with Mr. Lindstrum in the publication of the paper) to sell the Mail. The overtures were followed by negotiations, and the negotiations were successful. On December 2, 1907, all the assets of the paper were purchased by the new corporation, and from that time it has been issued under the present management.

The name of the corporation was very similar to that of the company publishing the Republican-Register, and to avoid confusion in the delivery of mail, etc., it was changed to Galesburg Mail Company. The circulation and advertising patronage of the paper has steadily grown under the new management, and at the present time the issue is over 7,100 daily.

Plans have been laid for a new building on South Cherry street, opposite the postoffice, and the paper expects to enter its new quarters early in the fall. Robert A. Chandler is general manager of the paper, Walter Whipple is editor, Geo. W. Cowan is the efficient advertising manager, and W. C. Hunter is business and circulation manager.

The paper is independent in policy.

THE REPUBLICAN-REGISTER

Of all the Galesburg newspapers the Republican-Register, daily and weekly, is the oldest and it ranks as one of the widest circulated and most influential papers in the state. Its history dates back nearly half a century and the years have seen it grow steadily in circulation and influence.

The Republican-Register is the outcome of the merging of the Republican and the Register. The former was founded in 1866 by Stephen R. Smith, William J. Mourer and H. D. Babcock, and in 1872 was purchased by Col. E. F. Phelps, afterward prominent in fraternal circles here.

The Register was started in 1870 by Col. Clark E. Carr, and J. M. Prior, and Col. Carr is still living to recall the editorial work that he so well did on his paper. In 1872 S. W. Grubb purchased the Republican. The merger of the two papers was accomplished in December, 1872, when the Galesburg Printing and Publishing Company was organized and incorporated with a capital of fifteen thousand dollars under the laws of Illinois, and the consolidated paper was christened the Republican-Register, by which title it has since been known.

The first officers of the company were George V. Deiterich, president; Zaccheus Beatty, editor and vice president, and S. W. Grubb, secretary-treasurer and business manager. With the newspaper plant was also a job office.

The company has published both a daily and a weekly during all these years. For a long time the paper was issued from the building on the northeast corner of the public square. Then the plant was moved to one of the Mathews buildings on East Main street. In 1893 the equipment was moved to a handsome new two-story building at 154-156 Simmons street erected by the company and built specially with reference to the business. Since that date the business has been carried on in this structure and now takes every inch of the entire building. The company is the only newspaper company in the city that owns its own building containing special conveniences for effective work.

Zaccheus Beatty, the efficient editor of the paper for years, passed away in 1896. S. W. Grubb, who from the business angle, made the plant a paying venture, retired about 1900 and was succeeded by his son, James W. Grubb. In 1901 Omer N. Custer, George A. Perry and Fred R. Jelliff acquired the Beatty stock while the stock of Mr. Grubb was transferred to his son. For several years the last-named was the secretary-treasurer of the company, until he disposed of his holdings to Mr. Custer and Mr. Perry in April, 1909. With the purchase of the Beatty stock, Mr. Perry became the business manager of the company and has served since in this capacity with rare fidelity. Before coming to the Republican-Register he was in the circulation department of the Mail from its incipiency and then for several years had an interest in the business of the Colville Brothers, old and established printers of the city.

When James W. Grubb sold his holdings Mr. Custer was elected secretary-treasurer in his stead and is still holding that position.

Mr. Custer started in twenty years or so ago in the circulation department of the paper and worked his way to the front by persistent application to its interests. Fred R. Jelliff, who began work with the paper as a reporter in 1882, has been its editor since the death of Mr. Beatty and is the oldest newspaper man in the city still in the harness. Through thirty years he has been continuously with the Republican-Register. Fred A. Dean for several years has been the president of the company.

The Republican-Register from a humble beginning has developed into a thoroughly modern newspaper. It has a circulation of over eight thousand, which is a larger circulation than any other paper in its territory possesses. It has the full telegraphic service which comes over a leased wire into its office, and its corps of correspondents covers well all the county and much of the surrounding country. From being set by hand at the case, the paper is now set at five linotype machines, and from being run off by an old-fashioned flatbed press on the square, the paper is now run off by a twenty-four page Potter press. The job office has also been from time to time added to and so is thoroughly equipped.

The Republican-Register is republican in its politics and has been so from its origin, but is not intolerant. It is recognized as fair and reliable in its news, and as maintaining a wholesome tone aiming to be a publication fit for the family circle. It has striven to promote public morals and respect for law. As the dean of the newspapers of the city it deservedly takes a high rank.

KNOX COUNTY COMMON SCHOOLS

By Prof. Walter F. Boyes

SCHOOL LANDS

The enabling act of congress for the state of Illinois, April, 1818, donated the sixteenth section of every township to the inhabitants thereof for school purposes. Under an act of the general assembly of 1831 providing for the sale of these lands, the county commissioners' court appointed A. D. Swartz commissioner and agent for the inhabitants of Knox county for the sale of the sections of land numbered sixteen. Upon the failure of Mr. Swartz to qualify, William McMurtry was appointed to the position. Prior to this action of the court a subscription school had been conducted at Henderson Grove and slightly later another at Cherry Grove. But the appointment of the commissioner of school lands was the first official act looking toward the establishing of public schools in Knox county. The same law commanded the appointment by the court of township trustees of school lands. On the sixth day of September, 1831, Turner A. Rountree and Jesse D. Gum were so appointed for township 12 north, range 1 east, Henderson. Other such appointments were soon made and the list of township trustees was complete in a comparatively short time. The chief duty of the county commissioner was to sell the school lands upon the petition of three-fourths of the voters of the respective townships; that of the trustees was to make a map of the land, dividing it into tracts of not more than eighty acres and to place a value, not less than $1.25 per acre, on each tract for the guidance of the commissioner in making sales.

The first petition for the sale of land was that of James Mansfield, Stephen Mitchell, Harmon G. Brown and forty-nine others, "white male inhabitants over the age of twenty-one years and legal voters of the township of land known and designated on the plats of the surveys of the lands belonging to United States as township number 12 north, range 1 east of the fourth principal meridian." This petition was dated January 4, 1834, and the fifty-two signers included all but ten of the voters of Henderson township. The trustees divided the section into twenty- and forty-acre lots and after due advertisement it was sold to six buyers at $1.25 per acre. In the same year ten of the thirteen voters of Maquon township petitioned for the sale of their land. It likewise brought the minimum legal price, $800. The last full section of school land to be disposed of in the county was that of Lynn township in 1852 for $1,576. Forty acres of the Chestnut section remained unsold until, following a revaluation by Trustees D. B. Routh, H. P. Townsend and Samuel Cashman, it was disposed of in 1868 for $506. The trustees of Ontario township, in 1848, valued their section at $720, the law fixing a minimum value having been repealed. During the next two years it was sold for $767.77, the smallest amount received for any school section in the county. The sixteenth section of Galesburg township, three-fourths of it lying within the city limits, was sold (1839-1848) in ten- and twenty-acre lots for the sum of $5,668. The section on which Altona stands was disposed of in 1841 for $2,024.20.

In view of the present great value of these lands, the thought is forced upon one that something like proper foresight and care would have preserved to our common schools sufficient funds well-nigh to maintain them. What the net income from one of these sections would now do for the schools of a township would be something good to see. But it is to be urged that in those days the railroad had not come and no one could have much idea of the wonderful development soon to be. Besides, it was argued that the earliest settlers were in greater need of assistance in maintaining their schools than would be the case with later inhabitants.

Small as was the fund secured to each of the townships from this land, it hastened the establishment of schools, and the income from it was for a score of years a very considerable part of the public money spent on education. It is interesting to note, too, that this donation had a most important influence in determining the plan of organization of public education in Illinois and Knox county. The fact that the title to the land was vested in the inhabitants of the township accounts for the township school officers, trustees and treasurer. That the county should become the unit of school supervision was likewise determined by the land grant. The county commissioner of school lands had at first nothing to do with schools; but when the interest on school funds became considerable, in 1835, it was made his duty to distribute the money among the teachers. Gradually were added other duties that made him a supervisor of school work.

EARLY SCHOOLS

The beginnings of common school education were made in every township of the county during the period from 1830 to 1841. These schools cannot be said to have had their origin in any fostering care of the state. The laws were almost wholly ineffective so far as the creation or development of schools was concerned. A body of school law had been enacted in 1825, but it proved to be many years ahead of the times and was repealed in 1827. During the time Knox county was establishing practically as many schools as she will ever need, the law specifically protected the property holder against taxation for schools unless his consent in writing had been secured. As before stated, from 1835 the interest on the school fund was distributed to teachers. Each teacher was required to keep a record of daily attendance and received such a proportion of the fund of the township as the attendance in his school was of the total attendance. This was not a large sum in any case; but it was something, and it served effectively to stimulate and encourage the establishment of schools that without it would have seemed impossible.

But for the larger part the schools of the county came not from the land grant fund nor from any outside stimulus or assistance, but from the desire of the people in the different communities to educate their children. The wonder is that so many of them had schools at all. The financial support was always inadequate; the steadying influence of a wise system of laws was lacking; and conflicting notions of the purpose and the management of schools led sometimes to great confusion. It was legally mandatory upon the county commissioners' court to establish a school district whenever petitioned to do so by a majority of the legal voters living within the territory of the proposed new district. The law left no discretion to the court and had no reference to the number of families in the district formed or in any other district or districts that might be affected. This easy method of forming districts often caused the division of territory already too small and weak for the support of a school. The first district formed under this law was that at Log City, in 1837; the second was the Edgar or Hague district, now No. 108, southeast of Galesburg, in the same year. Indian Point district, now No. 172, south of Abingdon, was the third. In 1840 there were eighteen districts.

Upon the formation of a district the citizens gathered and determined whether the school should be maintained one-half by taxation and one-half by contribution of the patrons in proportion to the benefits received or wholly by taxation. Such taxing power as the district had was also lodged in this meeting, no one being subject to taxation except upon his written consent. Everything was done within the district. The officers were three trustees, a clerk, an assessor, a collector and a treasurer. The trustees employed the teacher and superintended the school. During the first ten years of schools in the county, teachers were examined by the trustees of the district only. In 1841 the law made the township trustees of schools the board of examiners in townships, incorporated for school purposes. A certificate of qualification was necessary to the drawing of money from the school fund. Each district might maintain as many schools as were desired. Altogether it was democracy carried to the extreme in school affairs. The effect was to make schools much more numerous than they should have been, to destroy the possibility of system or continuity in school work, and to give to the schools of the period a general character of meagerness, poverty and instability. The brighter side of the situation was the efficiency and devotion of some teachers and the real earnestness in matters of education shown by part of the people.

Among the teachers of this earliest period were the following: Franklin Barber, 1830 or '31, and Harmon G. Brown, 1833, Henderson township; Robert Bell, 1832, Mr. Seymour, 1835, Cedar township; Judge Dennis Clark, 1836, Indian Point; Thomas Ellison, 1836, and Anderson Barnell, 1838, Orange. About this same time and just later schools were taught by Susan Dempsey in Haw Creek, Henry Shurtleff in Victoria and Abiel Drew in Salem.

COMMISSIONERS

As stated previously, William McMurtry, appointed in 1832, was the first county commissioner of school lands. Upon his resignation in 1840 Curtis K. Harvey was appointed, his service continuing at least until 1845. Some of the county records were destroyed and the name of the commissioner does not appear in the books that remain. In one of the oldest ones was found a slip of paper bearing an official statement to the effect that on November 12, 1849, Samuel S. Seward purchased lot No. 11 of the sixteenth section of Truro township. It is signed T. Judson Hale, school commissioner. Mr. Hale's biographer says that he held the office, 1847 to 1849. This is no doubt correct, although he was also circuit clerk of the county during a part of this time; but whether Mr. Harvey or another served from 1845 to 1847 cannot be learned. In 1845 the office was made elective for a term of two years. At that time the commissioner was made ex officio county superintendent and was required to visit schools, to advise in all matters pertaining to them and to examine teachers. William H. Whitton succeeded Mr. Hale in the office and served two terms. He was followed by J. H. Noteware for the term 1853-55. The title of the office had changed; it had become elective and was charged with certain supervisory functions; but its chief work was still with the financial side of school affairs and the duties of the office during this period of nearly a quarter century were quite fully comprehended in the title, commissioner of school lands.

THE PRESENT SYSTEM

In 1855 the general assembly, yielding to the pressure of a public opinion created by the efforts of earnest men throughout the state, enacted a law to establish a system of public schools in Illinois. A complete organization was pro-

COMMISSIONERS

As stated previously, William McMurtry, appointed in 1832, was the first county commissioner of school lands. Upon his resignation in 1840 Curtis K. Harvey was appointed, his service continuing at least until 1845. Some of the county records were destroyed and the name of the commissioner does not appear in the books that remain. In one of the oldest ones was found a slip of paper bearing an official statement to the effect that on November 12, 1849, Samuel S. Seward purchased lot No. 11 of the sixteenth section of Truro township. It is signed T. Judson Hale, school commissioner. Mr. Hale's biographer says that he held the office, 1847 to 1849. This is no doubt correct, although he was also circuit clerk of the county during a part of this time; but whether Mr. Harvey or another served from 1845 to 1847 cannot be learned. In 1845 the office was made elective for a term of two years. At that time the commissioner was made ex officio county superintendent and was required to visit schools, to advise in all matters pertaining to them and to examine teachers. William H. Whitton succeeded Mr. Hale in the office and served two terms. He was followed by J. H. Noteware for the term 1853-55. The title of the office had changed; it had become elective and was charged with certain supervisory functions; but its chief work was still with the financial side of school affairs and the duties of the office during this period of nearly a quarter century were quite fully comprehended in the title, commissioner of school lands.

THE PRESENT SYSTEM

In 1855 the general assembly, yielding to the pressure of a public opinion created by the efforts of earnest men throughout the state, enacted a law to establish a system of public schools in Illinois. A complete organization was provided, from the directors and teacher of the district to a state superintendent of public instruction. Provision was made by this law for the financial support of schools. The power of local taxation was restored in its full effect as it had not been for nearly thirty years. This idea of taxing all property for the purpose of education was of slow growth. The laws that permitted a limited taxation during the preceding twenty years had produced but little money for the schools either in the county or the state at large. In 1847 the total reported for the state was $8,763; in 1852, under a slightly different law, it was $51,000; in 1858, the third year of the new law, it rose to $563,460 for the state and $12,791.74 for Knox county—the sum the people of the county paid in taxes for school purposes being $100 less than was distributed to them by the state for schools.

Congress had provided that 3 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of public lands in Illinois, one-sixth part excepted, should go to establish a permanent school fund. When in 1836 the general government distributed $28,000,000 surplus revenue among the states, Illinois placed the greater part of her share, which was nearly half a million dollars, in the school fund. Interest on this fund at the rate of 6 per cent has been, from the middle thirties, distributed to the counties in proportion to their minor population. The new law added to this a two-mill tax to be collected on all property in the state and distributed to the counties along with the interest on the permanent fund. Then there was the income from a small county fund, the origin of which need not be here explained, and the townships had each the income from the proceeds of the sale of its school section. Thus the support furnished from outside the people themselves was fairly generous. But the development of the public school idea was shown more truly in the provision for local taxation. It was made the duty of the township trustees to certify to the clerk of the county court such a rate of taxation as would supply any deficiency in keeping "in good condition and operation a sufficient number of free schools for the accommodation of all the children in the said township during the ensuing year." Legislation and the good-will of the people were working together in the interest of schools.

Along with this more nearly adequate financial support and more general public interest must come improvement in the methods and work of the schools themselves. Greater emphasis was placed on the supervisory duties of the county school commissioner. Varying requirements of scholarship for teachers had been made since 1845. It was now the duty of the county commissioner to certify their proficiency in and their ability to teach "orthography, reading in English, penmanship, arithmetic, English grammar, modern geography and the history of United States." He was to visit schools for the purpose of giving counsel and direction and was allowed $2 per day for not to exceed fifty days annually to be spent in such work.

First to hold the position under the new law of 1855 was P. H. Sanford. He began the task, decades long, of systematizing and unifying the work of nearly two hundred independent and unrelated schools.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

Very early in his service he called the teachers together for the organization of Knox County Teachers' Institute. The meetings of this organization were held semi-annually for about twenty-five years, then annually and again semi-annually for a time. While the record is not complete, it can be stated without much room for error that, with one exception, there has been at least one meeting each year for fifty-six years. These meetings have occurred in the different towns, Knoxville, Galesburg, Abingdon, Oneida, Altona, Wataga, Maquon and Yates City. They continued from two to four days each and for fifteen years the people of the different communities expressed their interest in education by gratuitous entertainment of the teachers in their homes. The old-time custom of "boarding 'round" made every person in the country-side a neighbor to the school. So this extending of individual and community hospitality to the teachers doubtless had a share in creating a place for the schools in the regard of their patrons and supporters. In 1871 the organization voted to pay for entertainment while attending the meetings.

In Knox county, as has generally been the case, among the earliest and strongest friends of the common schools were those connected with higher institutions of learning. Members of the faculties of Knox College, Lombard University, Hedding Seminary and Abingdon College were active in both the management and the work of this teachers' association. Here is at least a partial list of those who gave it life and character: P. H. Sanford, J. V. N. Standish, George Churchill, A. J. Thompson, M. L. Comstock, Albert Hurd, J. B. Roberts, H. E. Hitchcock, B. G. Hall, J. H. Knapp, R. B. Guild, J. F. Dickinson. The influence of these men through these semi-annual meetings went directly and most helpfully into the schools in their formative period. So far as can be learned there had been no recognized elements of unity or cohesion in the schools of the county prior to the middle fifties. There was no system, no center. Every district organization was a law unto itself, every teacher likewise. Then came this group of strong men with an organization whose programs and discussions were to stand to the teachers as an expression of their common task. Here was the beginning of united effort, of a system of schools. Theodore Parker addressed the institute at Galesburg, October, 1857. The next March at Abingdon, Horace Mann, America's greatest educator, delivered the address, his subject being "Motives and Duties of Teachers." Since that time many others of distinguished service to education have been honored guests of the association.

Reports of the meetings as recorded by the different secretaries give, directly and indirectly, what seems to be more than mere glimpses of the work of the schools. The placing of the emphasis varied from time to time. The earliest programs were given chiefly to the presentation of the subjects of study in the common schools with a view only to the instruction of the teachers present in the subject matter. While it was probably not possible for teachers in talking to teachers to keep method entirely out of their discussions, it is true that for a dozen years or more material was presented almost entirely from the academic side. English grammar was a favorite topic from the first; mental arithmetic and orthography received due care as did reading and a little later geography was emphasized strongly. Almost from the first, object lessons received much attention. They seem to have been presented rather more from the professional side. The subject of physiology appears on the program in 1857, and drawing received attention in 1862. Thirty-five years later physiology and hygiene came to a place on the program of the common school. At the April meeting, 1865, the following was adopted: Resolved, That we consider it the duty of every teacher to inculcate devotion to our country and fidelity to our government; and that these principles may have a firm foundation, the Constitution of United States should be studied in our common schools." This was thirty-five years before civics became a subject of study in the ungraded schools and forty years before the statute of the state made it so. Natural history as suitable material for study in the common schools was up for discussion at the April meeting, 1864. Messrs. Knapp and Comstock, of the association, and Messrs. Lyon and John F. Eberhart, of Chicago, took part. As reported by the secretary, the first two speakers favored the introduction of the subject. Professor Eberhart thought not much could be done except in the way of general exercises, object lessons. The problem of elementary science, nature study, has been a difficult one to teachers ever since. The extent to which the language of the various text books should be memorized by the pupils was an oft-recurring subject of discussion. It seems never to have been settled exactly; but for many years the tendency away from any memorizing of texts was probably too strong.

At Oneida, in 1871, Rev. James Gorton read a paper on the subject, "Compulsory Attendance of Our Public Schools." It was evidently a strong presentation in favor of such attendance and was followed by a spirited discussion. At the close a vote was taken; those present, and voting, stood forty-five to two in favor of the views expressed in the paper.

The organization of the association provided for a standing committee on text books. In 1862, Robinson's arithmetic and Clark's grammar were recommended; and a year later the committee, consisting of Messrs. Thompson, Standish, Hall, Roberts, Churchill, Knapp and Dickinson, reported books to complete the list. The report was adopted as follows: Resolved, That we recommend for general use in the schools of this county

1st. Wilson's Series of Readers.

2d. Parker and Watson's Fifth Reader for Elocution Exercises in High Schools.

3d. Sanders', or Parker and Watson's Speller, to the exclusion of Webster's Elementary.

5th. Sam W. Mason's Manual of Gymnastic Exercises.

6th. Sherwood's Speller.

7th. A slate for every pupil, especially the younger ones.

The idea of a course of study for ungraded schools made its appearance in 1873, in a paper on "Classification and Course of Study for Ungraded Schools" by County Superintendent Christianer. Miss Leanna Hague read a paper at Abingdon, in November, 1877, on grading country schools. She proposed also that there should be a course of study and certificates of advancement issued to pupils. Four things necessary to the accomplishment of this were stated as follows: 1—Uniformity of text books; 2—Interest of parents and directors; 3—Regularity of attendance; 4—Permanency of teachers. The paper was heartily received and the plan approved by resolution. Later in the same meeting a committee on a course of study for schools was appointed by the county superintendent.

About 1875, special effort to interest parents and the general public in the schools seems to have been made. An annual exhibit of school work at the Knox county fair was undertaken with this end in view. A plan proposed in 1878 by Dr. Leffingwell, of Knoxville, to erect a pavilion on the fair ground for the purpose was adopted and the building constructed.

The president, upon motion, at the meeting in November, 1880, appointed a committee of five consisting of President Newton Bateman, Supt. Matthew Andrews, Miss Leanna Hague, Mr. M. C. Bates, and Mr. F. R. Jelliff, to prepare a paper for distribution in the county explaining the duties of the county superintendent of schools. This seems to have been in response to a question more or less general as to whether the office was necessary and worth the cost.

During the years of the rebellion, as the records of the association show, the teachers were responsive to the spirit of the times. At the April meeting, 1863, Dr. Standish in the chair, J. H. Knapp, J. B. Roberts, and B. G. Hall, committee on resolutions, reported in part as follows: "Resolved, That it is the duty of all teachers to inculcate patriotic principles and to encourage love of country, and that every attempt on the part of school boards to repress exhibitions of loyal feeling toward our government, especially in this time of its peril, should meet with the disapprobation of all true hearted educators, also, That we request our County Commissioner not to grant certificates to those known to have disloyal sentiments."

S. E. Field, John F. Dickinson, George Churchill, Miss Emma Dryer, and Miss Mary A. West were the committee on resolutions for the next meeting. Here is part of their report: "4th, That to our country in this hour of strife we swear anew our allegiance, pledging ourselves to assist her, if need be with our lives, praying God to continue to give wisdom to her rulers, courage to her soldiers and victory to her arms. 5th, That, feeling as we do the debt we owe our brothers in the field, we pledge ourselves to sustain them by our sympathies, our labors, and our prayers, assuring them that while our hearts throb at the thought of their sufferings, we rejoice at their victories and glory in their heroism." Similar expressions were given at other times. President Lincoln was commended on different occasions, particularly for the emancipation proclamation: and later Andrew Johnson was condemned as a traitor and Congress was called upon to impeach him. The body was in session in Oneida at the time of Lee's surrender, and the resolutions adopted are beautiful in their expression of the joy of victory, of devotion to country, and of thankfulness to God and the nation's defenders.

The importance of this teachers' organization to the schools of the county will scarcely be over-estimated. For years it furnished almost the only means of professional advancement to the teachers. In its meetings the new ideas were advanced and tested, and the approval of the body was authority for much of the method in teaching and management that found place in the schools.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOLHOUSES

The number of school districts in 1840, as previously stated, was eighteen; the number increased to 159 in 1857, to 175 in 1864, and to 189 in 1871. Very many changes in district boundaries were made in the intervening years, but the number reported in 1911 was the same as in 1864, 175. To this number, however, may be added parts of three districts, union with adjoining counties, and the high school district of Haw Creek township.

Schoolhouses to the number of 139 were reported by the school commissioner in 1857. The report of 1865 showed 184 and that of 1868, 198. No official statement of a larger number has been found. In 1911, the number was 186, and it had been for some years.

At the beginning of this period all the schools were ungraded, housed in one-room buildings, composed of pupils of all degrees of advancement. In 1857, part of one group of schools, Knoxville, had been combined and graded; in 1861, there were five of these graded schools and eight in 1865. There were sixteen districts in 1912, with two or more rooms each, twenty-nine graded schools in all. During the decade 1866 to 1876, a substantial graded school was erected in each of the towns of the county. Those in Abingdon, Oneida, Knoxville and Wataga were built of brick. Knoxville, in 1902, had come to require more room than was provided in the building of 1876. To supply this need a brick building for the accommodation of the high school and the eighth grade was erected. Having become too small, this was enlarged in 1911. The frame buildings of the late sixties in Maquon and Yates City were replaced in 1904, with well constructed modern buildings of brick.

A notable event in the history of schools in the county was the union in 1903 of the districts of North and South Abingdon, and the purchase by the new district for a high school of the large building formerly occupied by Abingdon College. No better example of the wisdom of consolidating schools can be found anywhere. Here were two districts, neither one strong enough to maintain such a school as its people desired, that solved most of their problems by combining them.

HIGH SCHOOLS

The varying meaning of the term high school makes it difficult to learn just the order of the formation of such schools in the different towns of the county. Giving the term the meaning that it has now, a school doing three or four years of work beyond the eighth grade, there was no high school outside of Galesburg until 1872, when the school at Knoxville reached that grade. In 1880 the county superintendent's report shows six, though it is quite possible that some of these did not come up to the present grade of high schools. In 1912 there were three-year high schools at Altona, Gilson, Maquon, Wataga and Williamsfield; and schools with four-year courses at Abingdon, Galesburg, Knoxville, Oneida and Yates City. The Haw Creek township high school (Gilson) was organized in 1902. As compared with other parts of the state this county has always stood well in high school work. It had more high schools in 1880 than any other county except Cook. In 1911 the proportion of high school students to the total enrollment of the schools and to the population of the county was greater than in any other county of Illinois.

SCHOOL EQUIPMENT

County Superintendent Christianer in 1870 wrote: "Of the 192 schoolhouses in the county, about one-half are good and sufficient for practical purposes, and about one-fourth by suitable repairs can be made comfortable, and about one-fourth ought to be razed to the ground and replaced by new ones."

"Still sits the schoolhouse by the road,
A ragged beggar sunning."

Not quite the same thing could be said of our schoolhouses in 1912. But it is true that school architecture in the county generally has not shown the advance it should have made. More especially is this true of the one-room buildings. Except in a few instances these buildings were erected with little reference to proper lighting and ventilation and with only such regard to effective heating as would be provided for by reasonably substantial construction. The more recent influences in favor of greater care in the housing of schools have had considerable effect. At the beginning of 1912 there were twelve country schools heated with basement furnaces, all but two of them having been installed after the erection of the building. Thirty-six heating and ventilating plants, virtually furnaces placed on the floor of the room with adequate provision for ventilation, were in use. Eighteen other districts had improved on the old plan of a bare stove in the center of the room by placing it in the corner and surrounding it with a jacket. In the report of Superintendent Christianer previously referred to, he condemned very severely the seating of school rooms as it was then. At the time of the last report of the condition of the schools, more than forty years later, much still remained to be desired in this important matter, especially in the arrangement of the desks. However, very general improvement in the furnishing and decoration of the school rooms had been made. A few buildings were still ceiled with lumber; but almost all were plastered and either papered or calcimined. Sufficient blackboard space, maps and globes had come to be nearly universal. But few were entirely without suitable pictures; practically all had window shades and nearly as many had sash curtains. At the time of this writing more than half the one-room schools in the county were supplied with musical instruments. Two were without books other than a dictionary, though all but five had enough books to be called a library. Nineteen schools had met the requirements of the state superintendent of public instruction as to grounds, building, equipment and teaching for standard one-room schools of Illinois.

Libraries for schools have for sixty years received attention. The report of 1867 credited the county with 720 books in school libraries, that of 1868, with over 1,800. The great increase for the year was due to the libraries for public schools furnished under certain conditions by the state. The books were ill-suited to children's reading and those remaining in the schools forty years later showed generally little wear except that of time. As reported in 1872, the twenty-six school libraries of the county numbered 1,599 volumes. The Cherry Grove and Thirlwell schools are reported to have had the best country-school libraries in those days. In 1878 some books awarded the Yates City schools as prizes for work exhibited at the Knox county fair, formed the nucleus of a very successful library. Its growth attracted much attention and it was discussed in teachers' meetings. The idea thus spread and a few years later began one of the periods of greatest activity in establishing school libraries. The number of books reported in 1890 was 6,938; and the number of libraries, 120; in 1900 there were 12,359 books and 145 libraries; and in 1911 there were 24,236 books in 171 libraries. The Illinois Pupils' Reading Circle furnished considerable stimulus to children's reading and assisted in making the later years of this period fruitful of good books and of a growing interest on the part of teachers and parents in what the children read.

THE COST OF THE SCHOOLS

The people of the county in 1857 paid for the maintenance of schools taxes to the amount of $12,791.94 and for the erection of seventeen schoolhouses $10,685. The state distributed to the county for school purposes that year $12,903.57. Teachers were paid for the school year of 1856-1857, $22,179.89, at average monthly wages of $14 to women and $28 to men. Five years later, 1862, the total tax was $19,542 and the distributive fund, $10,144. Three new buildings were erected and 343 teachers were paid $22,154, at average wages of $16 for women and $26 for men—the highest wages paid to a man being $55 and the lowest $17; and to women, $28 and $10. The county's share of the state fund was never greater than $15,843.36, and from that decreased to $6,234.75 for the year 1910. Owing to the doubling by the general assembly of the school tax fund of $1,000,000, the amount received from the levy of 1911 was $13,160.36. The amount of money raised by local taxation has varied greatly. At the end of the second five-year period the amount was $94,539; at the end of the next such period it had fallen to just less than $90,000. Another five years, 1877, brought the levy up to $102,209.54; but it dropped to $71,019.61 in 1881 and to $70,282.95 in 1882. In 1887 it was $89,419; in 1890, $86,353.98 and in 1896, $146,972.19. Any decrease in the levy since that time has been because of the varying amount spent for buildings—the amount expended for maintenance of schools has steadily increased. The levy for 1900 was $140,500, and the report for 1905 shows $186,140.52 collected for that year; and for 1910, $259,792. The city of Galesburg collected much of this increase, its tax advancing from $30,000 in 1890 to $144,000 in 1910. The estimated value of school property was $285,255 in 1875; in 1900 it was $442,375; and in 1911, $805,950.

COURSE OF STUDY

Just what branches of study should be pursued in the common schools and what ones excluded has always been a question receiving much consideration. When the system was organized nearly sixty years ago, the full course provided was reading, spelling, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography and history. Very little emphasis, however, was placed upon the two last named. The text-book in geography recommended in 1862 by the teachers' association was a very elementary presentation and nothing at all was said of a text in history. Music, physiology, civics and the elements of biology and physics were discussed from time to time and claims made for them as suitable and necessary common school subjects. A course of study suggested by Miss West, county superintendent, in 1877 provided for all of them. This course was not generally adopted, however. The probability is that geography became generally and firmly established in the schools during the sixties, and United States history somewhat later. Physiology and hygiene was also added by statute to the common school course; civics and the history of Illinois in 1905.

In 1884, County Superintendent Steele prepared and introduced an outline of study for the ungraded schools of Knox county. This course provided for the study of civil government in addition to those subjects that had come to be considered a part of the course. Very briefly stated the aim of the outline was to make practical the work of the school room, to advance the pupils step by step and give them credit for the work done, to unify the work of the common schools of the county, to keep before the minds of the pupils facts and principles instead of paragraphs and pages, and to lessen the difficulties arising from lack of uniformity of text books. The plan provided for a system of monthly and, for advanced grades, township examinations, the latter having been continued as central examinations to the present time. The outline was immediately successful and served well for some years in the accomplishment of the author's purpose. It was one of the earliest and most valuable of such outlines made anywhere for country schools. The state course of study, an outline prepared by a committee of county superintendents acting with the State Teacher's association, came later to take its place.

The law of the state has always made it the duty of school directors to adopt text books for the district and there has never been any compulsory uniformity among districts in the matter of school books. In 1895, County Superintendent Matthew Andrews, acting with teachers and principals of the county to foil the plans of a firm of publishers with a list of poor books, secured the very general adoption by the districts of a list proposed by himself. These books were used by the larger number of the schools until 1904. The directors of the county at their annual meeting in March of that year upon request by resolution directed the county superintendent of schools to confer with teachers and others and recommend a list of text books for uniform use in the schools of the county. The recommendation was made in August of the same year and, without the work of agents or others than the teachers, the books came into immediate and very general use. So responsive to the plan were the directors and the people and so interested the teachers that 94 per cent of the books used

The state course of study, an outline prepared by a committee of county superintendents acting with the State Teacher's association, came later to take its place.

The law of the state has always made it the duty of school directors to adopt text books for the district and there has never been any compulsory uniformity among districts in the matter of school books. In 1895, County Superintendent Matthew Andrews, acting with teachers and principals of the county to foil the plans of a firm of publishers with a list of poor books, secured the very general adoption by the districts of a list proposed by himself. These books were used by the larger number of the schools until 1904. The directors of the county at their annual meeting in March of that year upon request by resolution directed the county superintendent of schools to confer with teachers and others and recommend a list of text books for uniform use in the schools of the county. The recommendation was made in August of the same year and, without the work of agents or others than the teachers, the books came into immediate and very general use. So responsive to the plan were the directors and the people and so interested the teachers that 94 per cent of the books used in the ungraded schools that year were of the recommended list. Since that time the county has had the advantages of text book uniformity.

In order to conserve these advantages, a course of study outlining the work of the text books by years and months was published in 1905. In addition to the subjects regularly taught at that time, elementary agriculture was made a part of the course for the seventh and eighth grades. It is not possible under present conditions that this work be done in a manner entirely satisfactory; but its introduction was a start toward the time when the material of the course in the country school will be drawn very largely from that which relates to life in the country. The county course of study is closely followed in all the country and village schools and, with the accompanying examinations, records, reports and promotions, it has done much to systematize and unify the schools.

PUPILS

The number of minors in 1857 was 15,247; there were 10,142 persons of school age (five to twenty-one) and 9,835 reported in school. If these numbers are correct, they show a very large proportion of the persons of school age to have been in school. In 1870 there were reported 20,240 minors, 13,218 persons of school age (six to twenty-one) and 9,794 pupils in school. The numbers in 1881 were 18,057, 12,457 and 8,669. In 1890 the decreasing numbers showed 17,191 minors, 12,065 persons of school age and 8,006 pupils in school. The three different classes of persons were represented in 1900 and 1910, by the numbers 16,715, 11,775 and 9,558 for the former and 16,608, 11,941 and 9,299 for the latter year. The decrease in the number of children reported appears in the records before the decrease in population in any of the divisions of the county began. The proportion of minors to the total population is not so great as formerly.

The average number of months of school, considering both graded and ungraded schools, increased from 65 in 1861 to 7.36 in 1866, and 7.6 in 1875. In 1880 the average number was 7.1 months; in 1890, 7.8 months; in 1900, 8.05 months, and in 1910, 8.6 months. The average number of months in ungraded schools was as follows: For year ending June, 1875, 6.9; 1890, 7.3; 1900, 7.5; 1916, 7.8.

During the more recent years the compulsory attendance law has had considerable effect in increasing regularity of attendance in the city; but in the country districts its influence has been almost negligible as very few boards of directors have seen their way to enforce the law among their neighbors. Pupils in the graded schools were in school an average of 119.3 days each in 1881. This average rose to 136.3 days in 1900. It was 143.6 days in 1905, and 143.2 in 1910. In the country schools each pupil was in school an average of 80.5 days in 1881; 90.2 days in 1900; 92.2 in 1902; 99.5 in 1905, and 111.7 in 1910. These figures show two things—that interest in the school work of children has increased and that children in towns have greatly the advantage of children in the country in the matter of school attendance.

TEACHERS

One knowing something of Knox county schools can but regret the lack of space to write fully of the character and work of the teachers. Among them have appeared the failures that must always be found in any large group of persons; some have been unable to rise above the limitations under which all have worked; very infrequently one has shown himself entirely unworthy. But generally, they have understood something of the responsibility resting upon them and have striven to meet it. Very many have not waited for their tasks to be pointed out, but have endeavored to learn what might wisely be added to the work of the schools and how their efficiency might be increased. A simple record of the faithfulness and devotion of the teachers would make a splendid chapter in our history and the county, during its more than eighty years, has acquired nothing of greater value than the cumulative influence of those who have taught in its schools.

During many years the teachers were employed for but a term at a time, there being at first two and later three terms a year. The service of a teacher in a district was called a school and it sometimes happened that the annual report of a township showed three times as many schools as districts—that is, that each district had changed teachers every term. Gradually it came to be the custom to employ teachers for the year and during the last few years not to exceed a dozen schools annually have suffered from a change of teachers during the year.

The colleges and high schools have tended to keep the standard relatively high as to scholarship and the same influence has helped in the maintenance of a professional spirit. Salaries have ranged from an average of $14.00 for women and $28.00 for men as shown in the report for 1857, to an average, in 1911, of $53.00 for women and $89.07 for men.

SCHOOL OFFICERS

More than six hundred persons other than teachers are required to fill the official school positions of the county. It is unnecessary to say that there never have been so many people at one time intelligently exerting themselves in the interest of public education; the officers have not always been the persons of their communities best fitted for the positions they held. However, it can be said that to the care of school directors may be traced much of the progress made. The position has always been called a thankless one, but it is probable that no teacher has ever accomplished much without the sympathy and support of his board of directors and few indeed are the successful teachers who do not gladly acknowledge their obligation for such assistance. The school directors of the county have held annual meetings in Galesburg since 1903 and much has thus been accomplished for the schools.

The board of supervisors, though not charged with the exercise of school functions, has always touched the schools through its relation to the county superintendent. During a considerable part of the time after 1855 the board had control of the number of days, at a per diem fixed by statute, to be spent annually in the discharge of the duties of the office, and the amount of office expense has always been within its control. There is in the earlier records much evidence that members of the board did not always favor the advancement of popular education through the agency of the county superintendent. But the opposition seems to have relaxed about 1875. In 1883, under a law merely permitting such action, the board voted the superintendent full time for the discharge of official duties. In 1890 by resolution the county superintendent was authorized to purchase examination paper, schedules and other stationery for the schools at the expense of the county. In 1904 it was made a rule of the board to pay the expense of the visiting of schools by the county superintendent and in 1907 an office assistant was provided.

Since 1855 the chief educational office of the county has been held by eleven different persons. At the beginning of this period the title of the office was county school commissioner and the term of election was two years. In 1865 the duties of the office were increased, the term made four years and the title changed to county superintendent of schools. The direct powers conferred upon the office are not extensive; but the statute creates opportunity for leadership. Accordingly success in its administration consists in large part of securing the co-operation of teachers and all others in the interest of school work. The active and intelligent support of the schools by the largest possible number of their patrons and supporters would be the ideal on one side; and the highest degree of effectiveness of the schools themselves through the course of study and the teachers would be the ideal on the other.

Mr. P. H. Sanford began the work in 1855 and from the first put the stress of his administration upon the improvement of teachers. His service, ending in 1861, seems to have been characterized by an active teachers' organization which he called into being and with which he worked a number of years after leaving the office. J. H. Knapp succeeded to the position and continued, it seems, the same general plan as Mr. Sanford. The office was a comparatively new one and the superintendent was establishing and defining it during these years. It was the period of the civil war and the duty of the school to the state was emphasized. Superintendent Knapp resigned in March, 1869, and the board of supervisors elected to the place Mr. John S. Foster, who served until the following December, when Frederick Christianer succeeded him. Mr. Christianer served one term. Superintendent and teachers during this time seem to have been striving for some more definite plan of school organization, for a course of study and the grading of one-room schools which was to come in a dozen years later.

Miss Mary Allen West came to the office in 1873 and was re-elected in 1877. Through a change in the school law a year was added to this second term and Miss West served, in all, nine years. She was a very active official and did much to popularize the office she held. She visited schools, attended meetings, and delivered addresses to the end that the people might know what was doing. For the first time, it may be said, the chief work of the county superintendent was in the direction of interesting other people than teachers in the work of the schools. William L. Steele succeeded Miss West in 1882 and resigned the office in 1885. The characteristics of this administration were a much more definite organization of the schools of the county than had existed before and the development of great activity in establishing school libraries. Both of these have been mentioned elsewhere. Upon the resignation of Superintendent Steele, the board of supervisors appointed George W. Oldfather to succeed him. At the next election Mr. Oldfather was chosen for a full term extending his service to 1890. His effective work was along the same general lines as that of his predecessor. Shirley C. Ransom was elected in 1890 and resigned at the end of 1892 to be succeeded, through the action of the board, by Matthew Andrews at the beginning of 1903. The work of Superintendent Andrews was characterized by great activity in visiting schools and untiring energy in the effort to improve the work of the individual teacher. Local teachers' meetings were a prominent part of his plan. He was succeeded at the close of his six years of service by Ernest S. Wilkinson who continued the teachers' meetings and added to them an extension course of a year for the improvement of the scholarship of teachers. Walter F. Boyes was elected to the office in 1902. Uniform textbooks, the county course of study, agriculture in the schools, and directors' meetings have been spoken of elsewhere. If the writer might be permitted to characterize this period of service, he would say that it was marked chiefly by the hearty support given the present county superintendent in his work by teachers and school officers.

WOMAN'S WORK IN KNOX COUNTY—CLUBS, SOCIETIES, CORPS, ETC.

By Martha Farnham Webster

Tennyson says, "Woman is the lesser of man." We frankly admit this to be true in some respects. We believe, however, that woman is as necessary to the well being of civic, social, commercial and national life, as is man himself. In order to make her influence felt she need not be identified with these different forms of human activity in the same way as is man. Indeed it were better not to be so. But woman has her own tactful methods, her own absorbing interests, her own enthusiasms, her own appropriate sphere of action. By these means, and through these avenues of approach, she may reach out and touch the world's activities at almost every point of contact with which man has to do, and may wield an influence as great and far-reaching as his own.

Woman's forms of activity, and her practical methods are distinctively her own, as befits her womanly nature. They are characterized by greater enthusiasm of interest, more painstaking effort in the working out of details, and greater devotion to her sense of duty to the cause which she has espoused as the work in which she is engaged.

We find these characteristics exemplified as she pursues her chosen work as teacher, philanthropist, temperance worker, church worker, business woman, professional woman, journalist, author, reformer, and club woman, for she brings to these different spheres of activity, devotion, self-sacrifice, loyalty and enthusiasm of a type rarely seen in man.

In times of peace she finds ample scope for all her varied forms of activity and service. And in the stress and agony of war she has proved herself to be a very angel of mercy in her ministries to her country's heroes and protectors, who have paid in suffering and death the price of the patriotism which she helped to arouse and stimulate in them.

Were we to gather together, tabulate and sum up the aggregate of woman's part and woman's influence as they have been wrought into the very warp and woof of our national life and history, we should find an overwhelming balance to woman's credit.

In order to reach this grand total we should go back to those crucial days of 1620, when, on that stormy, "stern and rock-bound coast," the women of the "Mayflower" gave proof of the stuff of which woman is made. And when the "real" Daughters of the American Revolution, inspired by the example of their mothers, proved themselves to be of no less strong heart and heroic blood than were their sons and brothers.

And later still to 1861-65, the period of the civil war, when through the prolonged agony, five years of unspeakable horror and anguish, the spirit of the women of 1620 and 1776 was reincarnated in the women of fifty years ago.

Through this period of two centuries and a half, the recital of woman's work and influence must be written, for the most part, with the pen of history dipped in tears and blood.

But at the close of the civil war, the question of re-construction became the serious problem of the hour, involving not only our national affairs to which they especially pertained, but its effects were also made manifest in many and varied movements touching social and civic life. To woman the problem presented itself in the form of a call to organized effort, to the re-adjustment of her position, to the determining of what her real status should henceforth be.

Up to this time there were no associated movements among women, outside the church, the suffrage and the anti-slavery cause, and these associations were made up of both men and women, and were, for the most part, even if not entirely controlled by men.

And so we come to that period in our country's history when woman began to appear as a factor to be considered in public as well as private movements and events.

The movement for the organization of clubs exclusively for women was started in New York city in March, 1868. At this time a good deal of excitement had been aroused among the literary women of the city, because of their exclusion from equal privileges with men at a "Dickens dinner" to be given by the Press club. As a result of this incident the women determined to organize a club of their own by way of experiment. Twelve women, among whom was Mrs. J. C. Croley, the founder, and who therefore should be recognized as the founder of women's clubs in this country, met and organized a club called the Sorosis. This name is taken from a botanical term of Greek derivation which signifies a heap or collection.

The women announced themselves as organized "for the promotion of agreeable and useful relations among women of literary, artistic and scientific tastes, and for the discussions and dissemination of principles and facts which promise to exert a salutary influence on women and on society." This somewhat formidable preamble to their constitution has the merit, at least, of being all-embracing and suggestive. The first president of the Sorosis was Sarah (Willis) Parton, popularly known by her pen name, "Fanny Fern."

From this small but significant beginning the movement started. The little craft, the Sorosis, freighted with the future intellectual possibilities and destinies of the women of the United States, was launched upon the highway of an ever broadening and out-stretching sea. It was destined to sail on to ports then undiscovered and unknown, and to discharge its cargo of intellectual treasures among women not only in city and village and countryside all up and down our own broad land, but upon foreign shores as well, withersoever the influence of American womanhood has followed the march of American progress.

This movement was not in the nature of a revolt, prompted by a belligerent or defiant spirit, as the so-called strong-minded and aggressive women would do well to note. It was more like an awakening to new life and activity. There was nothing in the nature of a demand or of unwomanly self-assertion.

The foundation principles of the new movement were, "Unity, fellowship of one woman with another and a platform of confessed ignorance and sincere desire to learn." No wonder that with such a spirit in its founders, and such principles to nourish and sustain it, the influence of the movement spread with amazing rapidity, until now, from that parent society, with its twelve members, there have sprung many hundreds of women's clubs, numbering scores of thousands of members scattered throughout our own land and among American women resident abroad.

As another has forcibly expressed it, "The movement has brought together women of all creeds and no creed, women of diverse social position and environment, women of widely differing opportunities and degrees of culture, and has made of them an harmonious body enriched by the contributions of each to the other."

This democracy of principle and sentiment is especially manifest in those clubs which are affiliated with the general system of federated clubs and which therefore have adopted as their own the principles of the federation system of organization, and by means of which the rapid growth of this system has been accelerated. The motto of the general federation is, "Unity in diversity," than which none more expressive or appropriate could have been chosen.

The patriotic organizations among the women are also examples of this great diversity of gifts and personalities combining to form a more or less harmonious whole, for in these organizations no resort to black-balling or intrigue can honorably be permitted to exclude any in whose veins flows the blood of the founders and patriots unless they be personally unworthy to be admitted as members.

A noteworthy feature of women's clubs in the fact that although necessarily differing in their make-up and purpose, and in the details of their management, they are alike in basis and essential principle. They possess great flexibility and the ability to lend themselves to the needs of the community or the locality in which they exist, and for whose improvement or moral uplift they have been founded.

Through the medium of her club life, woman has found her place and taken her part in one way or another in almost every one of the different phases of the world's activities, and we may point with pride to her success in these undertakings and the high quality of her work.

In the more important centers these clubs have increased and prospered to the extent of being able to erect beautiful buildings as club houses for their own use and for the accommodation of other similar organizations in their locality.

But the best result of the work of woman's clubs has been seen in the new life of the small town, the awakening of dormant neighborhoods, the stimulus to higher thoughts and an uplift to their realm of expression, while at the same time the spirit of democracy has been fostered. The atmosphere and tone of whole communities has been changed, and in particular it has taught women how to think, how to speak, how to act for the best good of the community in which they live. It has broadened their outlook upon life and brought them into acquaintance with the world's best thinkers. It has taught them to estimate values and proportions and the basis of their historic significance and the connection of events, thus relieving their minds of the restrictions of local or personal prejudice and enabling them to take a higher level in their estimate of life and duty.

Most especially have these far-reaching and uplifting influences become an invaluable asset in the resources of the mother and the teacher, for they have opened a rich mine of information and culture from which they may draw as they face the problem of the training and instruction of children.

The fear that club life for women would have a tendency to divorce men and women in their interests and pursuits has been proven to be but a shadow fleeing before the light of the oncoming day of woman's triumphs over her petty restrictions, placing her upon the level of intellectual comradship and attainment with her brother, and leaving her untrammeled to climb to heights above him if she will.

From this brief review it may be seen that the growth in the United States of clubs for women, is, as one author has said, "one of the marvels of a century prolific in new movements."

Such was the origin and development of of the "club idea" among the women of the United States. What has been the effect of the movement among the women of Knox county? We shall see. Let us consider for a moment the natural advantages and privileges to which they have fallen heir.

That brilliant Frenchman, Max O'Rell, after extensive travels in this country, during which he made a careful study of American institutions and American home life, said, that if he were to be born again and could have his choice of the conditions into which he was to be born, he would choose to be born an American woman.

Our own gifted fellow citizen and author, Clark E. Carr, in the closing sentence of his masterly address on "Illinois," says, "New York is justly called the Empire state and Pennsylvania the Keystone state, while Illinois must be recognized as the stately dome of the American Republic."

One of the foremost of the journalists in our county, whose position first as teacher and scientist, and later as editor and writer, has eminently fitted him to be a judge of relative and comparative values throughout the state, heartily concurs in the suggestion made by another regarding our own county of Knox, viz., that intellectually, morally, socially, religiously, educationally, commercially and agriculturally considered Knox county may be said to rank among the foremost counties of the state.

Thus are the doors of opportunity and privilege opened wide to the favored women of Knox county.

They are first American women, either by birthright or by adoption. Secondly, they are daughters of the great state of Illinois, "Whose splendors and glories," as Colonel Carr eloquently says, "illumine every part of the mighty edifice which she majestically canopies." And lastly, their immediate environment is one of the fairest and most favored centers of our commonwealth.

It remains for us to see what use they have made of the rich heritage to which they have succeeded.

The pioneer settlers of Knox county brought with them from the east and the south the spirit and the purpose which have made intellectual development and culture the natural outgrowth of the seed implanted in the breasts of their children. Since the significance of the root from which the word "Club" is derived is that which is collected and clings or cleaves together, it may be said that club life in Knox county began with the women of the Galesburg colony soon after their arrival at their new home in 1837, then the trackless, treeless prairie, now the fair city of homes and schools and churches, of shaded streets and well trimmed lawns, and parks and gardens. That little band of noble women, some of them only recently married, some of them still unmarried, others in the prime of mature womenhood, and all of them earnest, thoughtful, prayerful women, formed themselves into a society called the "Maternal Association." We smile at the name from the standpoint of present day ideas and ideals, but was not theirs the true ideal working itself out through the instincts of motherhood, impelled by the thought of the mother love and the mother influence which must pervade and control the life and the destinies of the homes which had recently been, or were to be established?

The purpose of this organization was to discuss the interests of the community of which its members formed so important a part, and the more intimate and vital questions relating to their home life and the training of the children and the youths so far removed from any other educational or cultivating influences. There was no occasion for jealousy or pique because of a fancied or intentional slight in the omission of an invitation to join that club, for all who would might become members and share in its duties and privileges. And while they had no printed programs as have their daughters of to-day, they kept a record of their meetings and a list of the members.

The membership list of that first woman's club of Galesburg included old colony family names familiar as household words in the homes of our city—Gale, Waters, Blanchard, Kellogg, Losey, Farnham, Ferris, Colton, Conger, Buckingham, Sanderson, Prentice, Swift, West, Wilcox, Avery, Phelps, Holyoke, McMullen and all the rest sacred to memory in the history of those early days.

This association continued its life and activities for a number of years, at least until at sometime after 1850, and therefore its history ante-dates that of the Sorosis founded in 1868 in New York city.

In their earnest and prayerful efforts for the betterment of community and family life, the women of Galesburg were but laying the foundations for that altar of sacrifice upon which were to be offered their husbands and sons, and the added gift of their own hearts' best treasures of love and devotion when the fiery days of the civil war burst upon them and kindled the flame upon their altar, a flame which continued to burn consuming one by one the offerings laid thereon until the sacrifice was complete.

The natural sequence of the moral influences and the home training which preceded these events, followed, when husbands, sons and brothers marched to the front, while wives, mothers and sisters remained at home to work and weep as they strove to give them relief and succor. To be efficient their help must be given through the medium of organized effort, and here again becomes apparent the idea of the club, the "cleaving together" of the women in a common sympathy and interest which found its expression in the Soldiers' Aid Society of Galesburg, one of many found in almost every hamlet and city in the land, and in which the women of the surrounding towns also, as in Knoxville and Abingdon, and doubtless in other neighborhoods, bore a noble and devoted part.

This work as an organization was supplemented to some extent by the work of the women in their homes, some of them taking home garments to finish, or to make entirely, in order to make it more of a personal service to their loved ones and to the cause. At the beginning of the war the material for the uniforms of the volunteer soldiers was furnished by the government, and this material with pattern for cutting and shaping them was sent to the different localities where military companies were organized. These were distributed among the different organizations in the neighborhood of the military camps. The women of Galesburg gathered practically in a body to sew for the soldiers who were in camp in Knoxville, Peoria and Quincy. When the uniform was finished a testament and a handkerchief, and often a keepsake of some kind were slipped into the breast pocket of each coat. One devoted and truly patriotic mother, a widow, Mrs. Adaline Clendenin Ewing, the mother of Mrs. Martha Cobb and Mrs. Miron Rhodes, took home the garments which were to be the out-fit of her first born son, her offering to her country's service, and made them all by hand. Into every stitch was wrought a mother's love and anguish. Then she tucked into the pocket the testament, the handkerchief and a letter, a sacred message from mother to son in that crucial hour, and sent him forth with a mother's love and blessing. Only three short months thereafter, stricken with mortal illness, he was brought home to receive that mother's tender ministries in his few remaining hours of earthly need.

And this was only a forerunner of the many experiences that thrilled the hearts of the community with sympathy and with sorrow. Again and yet again were the homes of Galesburg and Knox county opened to receive their dying and their dead.

But still undaunted, the women toiled on making garments, scraping lint, filling comfort bags, preparing delicacies, packing boxes, forwarding literature and writing letters to the soldiers in hospital and camp.

The following are the names of all the members of the Soldiers' Aid Society that are still living—Mrs. Lucy Chase, widow of Dr. M. J. Chase; Mrs. Betsy Cook, widow of M. D. Cook and Mrs. Ann Sanderson, widow of Hon. H. R.

Sanderson. Mrs. J. V. N. Standish, recently deceased, was also an active member.

The reports of the Soldiers' Aid Society of Galesburg, which have been preserved, speak eloquently, and with a touching pathos of the work of the mothers and sisters, even of the little children, for the relief and comfort of the brave boys in blue who had gone out from among them. The story of what was accomplished for their aid, both in the hospitals and upon the field, reads like a romance. The climax of one supreme effort is worthy of note. In the spring of 1864 special appeals were made in behalf of the soldiers through the agency of the Christian Commission. In response a "Sanitary Fair" was held in Galesburg which netted over three thousand dollars. This was followed in a few days by a great mass-meeting held in the Old First church, which stood on the site now occupied by the Central Congregational church. On this occasion, the afterward world-famous Chaplain McCabe, then just out of Libby Prison, made an appeal so powerful in its effect that in one short half hour, notwithstanding the effort of a few days previous, one thousand six hundred dollars were pledged to the Christian Commission, thus making five thousand dollars raised within a week in response to that special appeal, while at the same time the regular work of the society was not permitted to lapse.

It is in the light of such facts as these that we are made to realize the intensity of the devotion and the patriotic fervor which sustained those women through the unremitting toil and the long agony of that bitter experience.

Mary Allen West, who enjoyed the distinction of having been born in 1837 in "Log City," the first home of the Galesburg colonists, and whose influence as an educator, a writer and a philanthropist afterward encircled the globe, was prominent in the work of the Soldiers' Aid Society. During the greater period of its existence she served as its efficient secretary, and she brought to bear upon the work intrusted to her the unusual qualities of leadership and of executive ability with which she was endowed. She possessed a heart of fire and wielded a pen of flame, and her burning words, whether written or spoken, must have kindled anew the fires of patriotism in sinking, sorrowing hearts, while they made even the dry statistics of her annual reports eloquent with hope and encouragement.

And should we of the present imagine for a moment that impassioned thought, eloquence of sentiment and elegance of diction belong more especially to this period of culture and intellectual attainment, let us but read the address prepared by order of the Soldiers' Aid Society of Galesburg and sent to their brothers in the field. It was undoubtedly written by Mary Allen West, a graduate of Knox college of the class of 1855, although her name does not appear. It is a most eloquent, soul-inspiring message which must have thrilled the hearts and strengthened the purpose of the weary and discouraged soldiers to whom it was addressed.

In the arduous work and the consuming anxiety and sorrow of those eventful years, as in all the undertakings which have come to their hands, the heroic spirit of the women of Knox county triumphed. The word failure did not occur in their vocabulary, and to shrink in the presence of hardships, obstacles and grief was to them an unknown principle of action. Their heroic creed might well have been expressed in these words:

"For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

And so lovingly and reverently do we pay our tribute of remembrance and appreciation to the heroic example and worthy deeds of the women of Knox county of 1861-65.

After the close of the war, indeed for some time preceding its close, when there was no longer necessity for work for the soldiers in camp, field or hospital, it became apparent that work must be done for the aid of the widows and orphans left destitute when their natural protectors and supporters had been stricken down by the cruel hand of war. And therefore organized relief work was continued under the name of the Dorcas Society.

This organization was actively supported by many of those ladies who had worked in the Soldiers' Aid Society. Its beneficent work in caring for the needy and suffering of the city was continued through the many intervening years, until a few years ago when it became affiliated with the Free Kindergarten Association, now a county institution, maintained by the efforts not only of the women of Galesburg, but also of auxiliary branches in adjacent towns.

During the decade which immediately succeeded the close of the civil war, and when all the evils which follow the trail of such a tremendous upheaval in civic and national life ran riot in the land, the movement for temperance reform swept over the country like a mighty tidal wave, bearing upon its crest the thoroughly aroused public sentiment of city and village and country-side alike. Knox county did not escape the effects of the on-rushing current. She too was aroused and awakened to effort. And again, here as elsewhere, the women took the initiative and organized for battle. This time it was the women who were to do the fighting as well as the praying and the weeping.

The fight which was then begun so many years ago is still on. The heroic creed which had been the impulse to action in the past has ever been their inspiration and incentive, for again and again, many times repeated, have they flung defiance to the foe with the war cry,

"For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win."

And so that great organization known throughout the civilized world as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union sprang into being.

The following account of the work in this county was written by Mrs. B. F. Arnold of Galesburg and we insert it without change. Mrs. Arnold has been associated with the movement from the beginning, and acted as president of the Galesburg union for fourteen years, and is therefore better fitted than anyone else to write of its history and work.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Galesburg was the outgrowth of a society organized by the women under the name of The Women's Union Temperance Society. The first meeting was held on the 20th of February, 1874, and the organization of the society was completed March 16th. On the first board of officers were the following: President, Mrs. M. Waite; Vice-president, Mrs. J. H. Sherman; Rec. Secretary, Mrs. H. S. Hurd; Cor. Secretary, Mrs. J. H. Little; Treasurer, Mrs. Job. Swift.

The great temperance crusade in Ohio had recently sprung into being and the success of the active campaign against intemperance and the saloon inspired the women to follow in their footsteps.

The record book shows the names of 112 of the most prominent women of the city as charter members. In 1875 the society voted to become auxiliary to the state W. C. T. U. In this year the use of a store room on South Prairie street was given by Mr. Sheldon Allen for twenty-five years, the society paying all taxes and assessments. For twenty-three years this was headquarters for the society and the rooms were the rallying point for all kinds of reform work.

The rooms were also used by the Woman's Christian Association and for several years a morning prayer meeting was held every morning at nine o'clock. The prayers which ascended from these rooms surely were heard and answered in later years when the licensed saloons were voted out of the city. These coffee rooms were the scene of much good work along temperance lines. Lunches and dinners could be had at all times, and all regular meetings were held here. A lady in charge was always ready to give help and advice to those who sought her counsel.

It is of interest to know the names of some of the good women who have passed on to their reward, but whose good works live after them. In addition to the first officers already recorded, the name of Mary Allen West stands pre-eminent, ably sustained by Mrs. J. V. N. Standish, Mrs. Warren Willard, Mrs. Clement Leach, Mrs. S. H. Ferris, Mrs. O. T. Johnson, Mrs. Geo. Dieterich, Mrs. A. Hyde, Mrs. Geo. Holyoke, Mrs. Hamblin and others.

In 1875 the Second Annual meeting of the State W. C. T. U. was held in Galesburg presided over by Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing.

Some of the departments in which the union has done especially good work are the following:

A band of Hope of several hundred members was organized among the children of the city, and many of the men of today give credit by their staunch temperance principles to the instructions received from Mary Allen West, Mrs. Geo. T. Holyoke and Miss Jenney.

A Girls' Temperance union ably assisted by young men was the center of many instructive and enjoyable occasions where the leadership of Miss Mary Hazzard stood pre-eminent. In later years Miss Hazzard was president of the County W. C. T. U.

An Employment Bureau furnished help for many homes and homes for many workers, ably managed by Mrs. E. N. Lovejoy.

Mothers' meetings have always been a feature of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and have been carried on with great success in later years by courtesy being held in the Free Kindergarten building. Those who attend are working women who have small time for enjoyment, and many cares. An instructive program is given and suitable refreshments served by committees from different churches.

The department of work among the soldiers and sailors has been exceptionally well conducted by Miss Catherine Long. Clippings and short interesting articles in envelopes are sent to hospitals and army camps and are circulated by nurses and chaplains. Hundreds of envelopes and comfort bags are prepared and sent every year.

In the year 1901 the 28th Annual Meeting of the state was held in Galesburg. At this meeting Mrs. Louise S. Rounds presided and laid down the gavel after nineteen years of service as state president. Miss Marie C. Brehm was her successor.

In December, 1892, the world was called to mourn the passing on of Miss Mary Allen West and her body was brought from far Japan to be laid by the side of loved ones in Hope cemetery. The union conducted the services which were attended by representatives from Chicago, Peoria, Monmouth and other cities. It was said of her that "The state has produced no other woman who has rendered it such signal service."

By courtesy of the city editors the press department has supplied our daily papers with a part column of notices, communications and short items of interest along temperance lines, which has been appreciated by all interested in the cause.

The temperance rooms were given up in 1901 on account of changed conditions, and many other good reasons, and a room in Central church was occupied for seven years. Since 1907 the union has met in the Baptist church. Sixteen departments of work are being carried on by different committees.

In 1911 the Galesburg union was the largest in the state, having 268 members.

Other unions in the county are Abingdon, Knoxville, Wataga, Rio, Delong and East Galesburg, and the enrolled membership is nearly five hundred.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has demonstrated its right to live by the work which it has done, and as the handmaid of the church will continue to do "For God and Home and Every Land."

Following close upon the footsteps of the great temperance reform movement there came to the front that still greater organization of women, "the largest charitable organization in the world", the Woman's Relief Corps. And here again we leave it to the pen of one who, by close personal connection with it, is better fitted than ourselves to tell of its work.

Mrs. R. E. McCullough, who was one of the founders of the Woman's Relief Corps of Galesburg in 1888, and who was its president for the first three years, has kindly given us the following sketch of its history which we quote as a whole.

THE WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS

The first organization of the Woman's Relief Corps, Auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, was formed in Fitchburg, Massachusetts in 1879, since which time it has grown to be the largest charitable organization in the world. Its special objects are to render to the veterans of the civil war and their dependent ones, aid and comfort in sickness and distress, and perpetuate the memory of their heroic dead in the sacred observance of Memorial day.

The order reaches almost every state in the union. Illinois stands third in membership and influence, and last year she expended $8,872 in relief alone.

Knox county has but two corps, G. W. Trafton Corps of Knoxville, organized in 1907, now has seventy-five members with $40 expended for relief last year. Jas. T. Shields Woman's Relief Corps No. 121, Auxiliary to Post 45, G. A. R. of Galesburg, was organized in August, 1888, and at present has one hundred and seventy-seven members.

Corps committees visit the poor and sick, carrying them fruit and flowers and in case of need supply them with food and clothing. For 1911 Corps No. 121 expended for relief $43.20, in fruit, and flowers $73.56. Outside of regular relief work the corps has given $50 to the Visiting Nurse Association, $20 to the Galesburg hospital, besides smaller contributions to other charities of the city.

Along patriotic lines the corps has been active. In 1909 with appropriate exercises, we placed two large flags in our public schools, and the following year sent a large flag to float over the old home of Illinois' beloved son, Abraham Lincoln. In 1911 we presented a life size portrait of Lincoln to the Lincoln Debating club of the Galesburg high school. Several years ago the members of Corps No. 121 conceived the idea of erecting a soldiers' monument to the memory of deceased soldiers of this community. Finally after months of persistent hard work, faithfully assisted by the members of Post 45, their efforts were crowned with success. In 1896 the monument standing at the northeast corner of Hope cemetery was dedicated.

Mary A. Bickerdyke, the much loved army nurse, died in Kansas in November, 1901, her remains were brought to Galesburg, her former home for interment in the family burial lot in Linwood cemetery. At once Corps 121 became active and with the generous assistance of posts and corps throughout the state were enable to erect the substantial monument that marks her last resting place. Not content with this, the following spring after Mother Bickerdyke's death, a number of ladies from the Woman's Relief Corps formed and incorporated an association to be known as the "Mother Bickerdyke Memorial Association", its purpose and aim to erect a suitable testimonial to this beloved woman. After much time and thought had been expended, the association with the valuable assistance of Honorables Leon A. Townsend and Wilfred Arnold secured an appropriation of $5,000 from the state, and today the beautiful statue of Mother Bickerdyke, holding the cup of cold water to the dying soldier's lips, graces the Court House park of this city. The dedication took place during Encampment week, May 22nd, 1906, and was attended by eight thousand veterans, visitors and citizens. Governor Yates honored the association with his presence and delivered the address of the day.

The motto of the Woman's Relief Corps is Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty, and its religion, "To do unto others as ye would that others do unto you."

Two years after the organization of the Woman's Relief Corps, the movement was inaugurated which resulted in the establishment of "The Galesburg Free Kindergarten Association", which has since developed into "The Knox County Free Kindergarten Association," one of the most notable philanthropic organizations in our county.

Once more we give space to another to speak of this great institution, the one best qualified of all the women of the county, because of her intimate relation to its work, she having served as its president during the entire period of its existence, or since 1890, Mrs. Mary Claycomb Grubb.

We have the more gladly yielded the space to Mrs. Arnold, Mrs. McCullough and Mrs. Grubb because of our desire that the three great philanthropic organizations which they represent should receive the full measure of justice which could only be given them by these noble women whose very existence and most earnest endeavor have been wrought into their history.

In the fall of 1890, Miss M. Evelyn Strong, who founded and was for many years principal of the Galesburg Kindergarten Normal, inaugurated a movement to establish a free kindergarten for the children of the poor of Galesburg.

As an initiative to this undertaking Miss Strong called upon the pastors of the different churches of the city to preach, each one on the same Sabbath morning, a sermon on "Free Kindergartens and Their Advantages." At the same time she asked each of the pastors to give her the names of three ladies of his congregation whom she might invite to a conference with her in regard to her project. The sermons were preached and in August or September of that year, 1890, a large number of ladies met in the parlors of the Kindergarten Normal for the proposed conference.

Miss Strong was the leading spirit of the meeting and associated with her and ably abetting her efforts was Miss Alice Chapin, Miss Strong's great friend and at one time instructor.

The records of the first two or three years were unfortunately lost and many of the details of that period are largely a matter of memory. We do not forget, however, that this was distinctively a woman's movement and has always remained so. Gentlemen have given generously both of money and helpful advice. In fact, their support has contributed largely to the success of this charity, but while they may become honorary members of the association, they do not have a vote in its proceedings. The leading ladies of Galesburg took an active interest in establishing this, up to that time, new sort of charitable work in this city and it has always commanded the loyal support of all classes.

At the second meeting a constitution and by-laws were adopted and permanent officers were elected as follows: Mrs. Mary Claycomb Grubb, president; Mrs. O. F. Price, vice-president; Mrs. Helena Crummett Lee, secretary; Mrs. Grace Fahnestock, treasurer.

The organization was named "The Galesburg Free Kindergarten Association," the purpose for which it was created being, as stated in the preamble of its constitution, "to maintain one or more free kindergartens in the city of Galesburg."

Three permanent committees were established, one on finances, one on lunches, and one on visiting, each of these committees being composed of one lady from each of the churches represented in the association, this charity being undertaken and directed by the churches.

Other standing committees have been created from time to time, such as the house committee, the children's committee, the employment committee, purchasing committee, and committee on menus.

It was on the lower floor of the south side of the building, formerly used for city offices, known as the fire proof building (this building has since given place to a very ornate city hall), on October 6, 1890, that the doors of this new institution were opened with twenty-five children in attendance, and two teachers, Miss Mary Hazzard and Miss Mary Owen in charge, both graduates of Miss Strong's Kindergarten Normal. It was a very modest beginning, and attracted so little public attention at that time that the city papers of that date contain no mention of the event.

Miss Owen was a young woman of the negro race and did efficient work as assistant kindergartner until 1896, when she resigned and Miss Emma Chase of Binghampton, New York, was chosen to fill the vacancy.

Miss Hazzard held the position as principal of the school until her death, May 31st, 1904, and up to that date the success of the undertaking was largely due to her efficiency.

In 1893, increased city business caused a demand for the rooms the school was then occupying and the association bought from G. N. Hamilton the Cottage Hotel situated on Cherry street, which the city council moved to the southeast corner of the land then used as the city market, giving us a lease of the land, and the work was continued at this place.

In the meantime it was discovered that these children needed more than one lunch a week. They needed a home, clothing, mothering and one after another came for this kind of care until the home became one of the important features of this charity. The demands became so great that in 1903, it became evident that it would be necessary to provide a new building to admit of further growth or even to continue the home and kindergarten.

Many friends rallied to this rather daring project. Mr. and Mrs. George A. Lawrence headed the list of the subscription with a gift of one thousand dollars for themselves and four hundred dollars in the names of their three children, Parke, Louise and Rebecca. Mr. Grant Beadle generously offered his services as an architect, and also as supervisor of the erection of the structure and one morning in June a large number of ladies started out from the old building on Simmons street to canvass for pledges to pay for the new building. At the close of that sweet June day there was enough money in sight to make success assured.

The new building, erected at a cost of $10,000, stands at the corner of Simmons and Cedar streets and bears upon its corner stone the inscription "The M. Evelyn Strong Free Kindergarten, founded 1890." Before breaking ground for the erection of this building, the city council placed in the hands of the members of the association a ninety-nine year lease of the south half of the old market place and later included in this lease the north half also.

Few realized when the free kindergarten was opened, the growth which this charity was destined to make nor could any one foresee the good will and the consequent outpouring of money and supplies which it would win from the people of Galesburg and Knox county. It has been the recipient of favors and gifts from all classes of our people. Rich and poor, church members and non-church members send here money, food, clothing, or give other service. In 1903 the city council voted an appropriation of $75 a month, but this has since been reduced to $500 a year. In 1907, the board of supervisors made an appropriation of $50 a month to this work, the same being afterwards increased to $75. Since this recognition by the board of supervisors, the association has been known as "The Knox County Free Kindergarten Association."

Our endowment fund was started in 1897, when Mr. and Mrs. George A. Lawrence gave a generous sum for this fund to be known as "The Parke and Louise Lawrence Fund." This has been increased from year to year by other gifts by these friends and by several legacies and now amounts to $4,500.

The expenses incurred in maintaining this charity are two kinds. The one, which consists of the salaries paid our house staff, is almost a fixed amount. The other item of expense is the cost of maintaining the home and varies from time to time according to the size of the family and other conditions. The average cost, including salaries and every other sort of expense for the year ending May 1st, 1911, was sixty-three cents per day for each child. The money to meet these expenses has come to us from voluntary contributions of friends, personal appeals made to our churches and entertainments of different kinds. In August, 1904, an open air performance of "As You Like It" under the direction of Mrs. E. S. Gunnell and Mr. Lou Maddox put $1,621.25 into our treasury. In October, 1905, "The Baby Carnival" netted $1,587.87, and the entertainments of "Home Coming Week" brought $1,000 and three tag days were very profitable. The association has been able to pay for the new building and to meet all other indebtedness, a fact which is highly complimentary to the citizens of Galesburg and Knox county.

Since 1903, the county children who have needed a home have been sent to the free kindergarten home instead of the almshouse. In this way has one county of our state solved the question of caring for such children, and it certainly is better than the old way of doing that work, if not the best.

Since February, 1894, the building under the management of the W. C. T. U. has been opened one evening of each month for a mother's meeting of the poor.

The Dorcas Society, a charitable organization of long standing, was merged into the association in 1897, and the home became a sort of center for all charities.

It has already been stated that this is now a Knox county as well as in a very special sense a Galesburg charity. It has friends and supporters in all parts of the county. The ladies of Altona and Oneida have organized a branch association which has a strong membership and which is a source of inestimable help to the home.

We cannot give the number of children who have received care and training at the kindergarten home since its opening, now more than twenty-one years ago. For a number of years an average of a hundred children have lived here for some part of the year and many of them for the entire twelve months. During the year ending May 1st, 1911, 104 children were in the home, the average time for each child being about two and one-half months. Since September, 1911, the average per month has been above thirty and the number of different children who have come under the influence of the home since 1896 is over five hundred. No one can say how strong an element this has been in the lives of these otherwise neglected children, to make them useful men and women. No one can estimate, on the other hand, the uplift towards the higher and nobler life it has given this community to do this work. We can almost say that there has been no step backward in the now twenty-one years of the existence of this charity and we are ready to announce that the "Knox County Children's Home and Free Kindergarten" is now a permanent institution, here to stay.

And now we have come to the period of intellectual unrest, the aspiration and out-reach for higher ideals and a broader culture, which resulted in the organization one by one of the literary clubs and other culture clubs which are justly and pardonably the pride of the women of this county. By reason of these organizations our county may, without question, be rated as one of the leading literary centers of the state. In Galesburg alone there are eighteen exclusively literary clubs with a membership of upwards of nine hundred, while in Oneida, Maquon and Abingdon the proportion in relation to the population is scarcely less.

In the three philanthropic and patriotic societies of Galesburg the membership is between five hundred and six hundred, making nearly fifteen hundred in all.

With a desire to give full credit to all the clubs throughout the county, the writer sent out letters of inquiry to women whose names she knew, or could secure, in every township in the county, followed in some cases by a second letter, asking for information regarding the organized work of women in that particular locality, whether of a literary, philanthropic, patriotic or beneficent character. Only Oneida, Maquon, Abingdon, Wataga and Ontario replied to the letter, and only Maquon and Wataga replied with information.

The information regarding the Oneida clubs is gathered from printed matter at hand. There is known to be a club in Abingdon but we have no information regarding it. Possibly there are others in the county. It is a matter of regret to omit any of them in this summary of woman's work in the county, but the writer must be pardoned for so doing after making all due effort to secure the desired information.

The clubs of Oneida, Maquon and Abingdon are thoroughly organized and active.

Wataga combines the club idea to some extent with the earnest, united work of the women of the Congregational church. And it may be said once for all, and in regard to all, that the splendid efforts of the women's societies in all the churches throughout the county in their many lines of work deserve to be considered as one of the most important factors in the all around development of these women.

It was in 1890 that the club idea began to be developed in earnest in this county. In the twenty-two years which have elapsed since then the movement has grown, until at the present writing there are known to be thirty-five women's organizations with an approximate membership of two thousand. This includes the patriotic and philanthropic as well as the literary organizations. We give below, as nearly as could be ascertained, a list of the clubs of the county with date of organization and lines of study.

THE WOMEN'S CLUBS OF GALESBURG.

The Hawthorne Club, organized in the autumn of 1890, membership limited to twenty-five. Object of the club, the study of history and literature, not neglecting, however, social and philanthropic lines of work. The topics studied during the twenty-two years of the club's existence cover a broad range of research in the fields of history, literature, art, miscellany, sociology, civic improvement, the old testament and the drama.

The Galesburg Fortnightly Club was formally organized about one year later than the Hawthorne Club, and yet there are reasons for considering it the antecedent of all the literary clubs of the city. It was the direct outgrowth and development of a reading circle which had met regularly for a number of years previously with Mrs. J. V. N. Standish, who invited a select circle of ladies to come to her home to read and discuss literature and art, giving especial attention to the latter subject. In the study of art Mrs. Standish was exceptionally well fitted to guide them because of her rich stores of information, and the many pictures illustrative of the study which she had brought home from her frequent visits abroad.

After enjoying these entirely informal gatherings for a number of years, the ladies decided to organize themselves into a club and chose the name, "The Galesburg Fortnightly Club," Mrs. Standish and many of those who had at some time belonged to her reading circle being among the charter members. The membership is limited to twenty and in its list college circles, from both of our colleges, are largely represented, while all of the members are women of high aims and earnest purpose.

The club was organized for purely literary purposes and it has held steadily to its original intention.

Its program is usually a heavy one and its members take pride in the fact that never since its organization has a duty been assigned to any of them that has not been performed, either by herself, or by a substitute whom she has herself secured. Its range of topics for study has almost encircled the globe, and includes the history and the intellectual and moral development, in all their varied forms of expression, of the different countries considered. Two years were spent in the study of Hebrew history and literature as found in the old testament.

A strong bond of sympathy exists among its members and they are thoroughly loyal to each other and to the interests of the club. In common with other clubs, they contribute to the special objects which appeal to the sympathies of the women of the city, such as the Visiting Nurse Association and the like.

Rotation in office is the principle on which the club's officers are chosen, and by virtue of this arrangement, each member at some time holds every office in the gift of the club.

The Mosaic Club was organized in 1893 and was in a sense the child of the Hawthorne Club. It was started for the purpose of giving the daughters and younger sisters of the members of that club the same opportunity for study and culture which they themselves enjoyed. The Mosaic Club was organized with a membership of sixteen. Its course of study is much the same as that of the Hawthorne Club. It now has a membership of twenty-four, with five associate members.

The Oliver Wendell Holmes Club had its origin in 1893 and was named in honor of the genial "autocrat of the breakfast table," who was at that time living, the last one of the famous "Cambridge group."

Beginning as an informal afternoon reading circle, the club has steadily increased in members and interest, and improved in methods of study until now it is a thoroughly organized and up-to-date literary club, its purposes and objects being much the same as those of the clubs previously sketched.

The charter members of this club enjoy the distinction of having each received a card bearing the autograph signature of the poet whose name they adopted. They wrote him at the beginning stating that they had organized a club and had named it for him, and in reply he sent them his autographs.

This club has been a member of the Illinois State Federation of Women's Clubs for fifteen years and has sent two delegates to every state convention during that time. It is one of the two federated clubs which united in inviting the State Federation to meet in Galesburg in 1911.

The Clio Club owes its existence to the suggestion of the daughter of one of the charter members, followed by the prompt and enthusiastic action of the mother, Mrs. J. H. Edgerton. She invited a number of ladies to her home for the purpose of forming themselves into a club for sociability, reading and general improvement. Mrs. Edgerton therefore has the honor of having been the founder of the Clio Club. As one of the members expressed it, Mrs. Edgerton "soon had a list interested women who were glad to embrace an opportunity, the road to which had been made so enticing and yet so easy. Everything must be as simple as possible. No printed programs were to be used as that would be too formal. We were to meet, bring our work, have a few words with our neighbors and depart, having spent a delightful afternoon."

Mrs. A. J. Perry, the wife of the editor of this Knox County History, who was its first vice-president, is the only charter member who has kept her active membership continuously from the beginning.

Mrs. Edgar L. Larkin was the first president. Upon her removal from the city Mrs. A. J. Perry succeeded her as president, and she is the only member of the club to hold that office for a number of terms successively, her period of service extending for so long a time that she finally insisted upon sharing the honor with other members.

The club was organized in October, 1894, with a charter membership of fourteen, which has since been increased to eighteen, as the limit. The first regular meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Perry. The study of the history of Egypt was the course adopted for the beginning of their work.

A description of the lines of study which followed this is so pleasing that I quote it as given by the pen of one of the members of the club.

"Our course of study after leaving Egypt was first to England, the mother country, thence to Spain, the home of the toreador, through Germany and France with their masters in music, art and literature. Then with our forefathers we came to our own beloved America and tried to 'see ourselves as others see us.' Mexico in her long struggle for freedom stirred our sympathies. Norway, Sweden and plucky little Holland each claimed her turn and each was full of interest.

"The interest of the Clio Club has not been confined to history or club work alone, a number of charities having felt our interest in a quiet, but substantial way. This year we turn our attention to the study of China."

The Tourist Club was organized in 1895. As its name indicates, its primary aim was to study cities and countries which would lure the traveler to visit them, as also their various points of interest. But the course of study has since developed into a general study of history, literature and art. The topic for this year is "A Literary Pilgrimage."

"Mrs. J. V. N. Standish was from the first an honorary member, which position she held until her recent journey to the unknown country. When it was possible for her to attend the meetings her presence was an inspiration as she could from her own rich experience impart much."

The present membership is twenty.

The Home Culture Club is a monument to the memory of Mrs. Mary Arnold Williams, the wife of the late Edwin N. Williams. Its membership is confined to those living north of Mary street between Seminary and Cedar streets. Mrs. Williams' own pretty new home was in this "neighborhood of scattered homes and little acquaintance." The motives which prompted her to the establishment of the club were the following, as expressed by another: "She conceived the idea of bringing the women of the neighborhood together by mutual helpfulness in the betterment of their homes, and also to promote acquaintance. Their present needs were thought of while a far insight of the future entered into her plans.

"After having spent much of her time previously for six months working out plans for it, early in the autumn of 1899 Mrs. Williams called upon, or sent a note to, all the women of this north end district telling them of her plan to organize a neighborhood club. The first meeting was held upon the invitation of Mrs. Williams at her own home far out on North Cherry street. It proved to be a most interesting and impressive occasion. Probably each one who attended has never forgotten it. The founder and leader lent to this and to several succeeding meetings her own inimitable inspiration—a spirit which was caught by the charter members and passed on, and then taken up and understood most surprisingly by the new members who came in from time to time."

An incidental remark by one of the ladies referring to the gathering as "this home culture club" fixed the permanent name for the club, for thereupon Mrs. Williams said: "That is the name for the club. We could find no better." And so the club was named.

Very soon, because of rapidly failing health, Mrs. Williams was unable to attend the meetings but it was her great desire that they should go on regularly, and she constantly sent messages to the meetings. Only a few days before her death, which occurred in May, she said to a member, "You will always have the Home Culture Club."

As its name indicates, it has always kept in touch with everything that affects the well-being of the home, and which may be included under the general subject of home economics. It is also interested in domestic science in the public schools and contributed to the establishment of that department in our high school. It keeps in touch with the teachers of the city, especially with those of the Hitchcock school, where the children of the club members attend. It lends a hand in the line of civic improvement, and, in short, it is interested in all lines of work which directly or indirectly affect the home.

Of the twenty-six active members, eight are of the original charter members.

The Sorosis Club, which was organized in February, 1900, owes its foundation largely to a desire for more aggressive work than the other clubs were doing along philanthropic lines, and for a more democratic spirit in connection with the usual literary culture incident to club work.

Mrs. Dr. D. C. Coulson, now of Denver, was the moving spirit in the founding of the Galesburg Sorosis. She felt that the literary clubs in general were too exclusive in their policy, and that greater democracy of spirit should prevail in women's organizations. She made this one of the foundation principles of the new club with whose policy she had so much to do. Its aims are philanthropic, economic, benevolent and public spirited, as well as literary. It contributes to the various local causes included under these heads for which an appeal to the public is made, such as the department of domestic science in the public schools, the Visiting Nurse Association and the like.

The Sorosis and the Oliver Wendell Holmes clubs are the two federated clubs of the city which united in extending an invitation to the State Federation to meet in Galesburg in the autumn of 1911, thus giving our city the honor and the pleasure of being hostess to the women's clubs of the state.

The Sorosis has forty-six active members, five associate and eighteen honorary members.

The Round Table Club. As has been the case with a number of the other clubs of the city, the Round Table Club was inaugurated as an informal reading circle, but after a time with increase of membership and growing interest it felt the need of a more formal organization. Its first meetings were held in 1900 and some months afterward a constitution was adopted in which the objects of the club were stated to be "social, literary and civic improvement and a systematic course of study as planned for each year." Mrs. Ellen Felt Wood was the organizer and first president of the club. It has a present membership of twenty-two.

St. Joseph's Alumnae Literary Association. Some twenty years ago at the suggestion and advice of Sister Mary Matthew, the beloved and late lamented foundress of St. Joseph's Academy, the Alumnae were first organized as an informal reading circle to strengthen and preserve the bond of friendship and to promote the religious, social and intellectual culture of its members; and to foster a philanthropic spirit. Mrs. Margaret Mullen Latterner was elected president. "Ben Hur" was the first study, meeting at the homes of the members. In April, 1895, "Mikado" was successfully given by the charter members and some musical friends; with the proceeds, the Academy parlors were decorated and refurnished and the first Alumnae gold medal presented for the senior department.

This association was active also in other directions. A surprise reunion of the alumnae was quietly planned by Mrs. Madge Maley Burns and Miss Mary E. Maley for the purpose of properly celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of Sister Mary Matthew, the foundress of the association. An offering was made to Sister Matthew as being her silver jubilee. She graciously turned the offering into the St. Joseph's improvement fund.

Later in 1903 the society took on a somewhat broader sphere of action, the outgrowth of the thought and effort of Rev. Father Joseph Costa. Having founded St. Joseph's academy in the early years of his connections with the work of the Catholics in this city, his great desire was to enlist the interest of the graduates of that institution in the maintenance of it, and in providing a building and equipment suited not only to the present but also to future needs, as its growth and the more exacting demands of modern life might require.

Accordingly, in 1903 he called a meeting of the St. Joseph's alumnae resident in Galesburg and stated to them his plan and his desire for their hearty co-operation. They became greatly interested and at once organized under the above name. Father Doubleday of St. Patrick's church was also present and aided in their plans for work, and they started out in their undertaking with great enthusiasm. At first the word "literary" did not appear in their name, for they had not as yet planned for other work than that for the purpose of raising funds for the erection of the St. Joseph's alumnae hall of the future when Father Costa's plan should be realized. Their enthusiasm for the up-building of this fund was stimulated by a feeling of deep loyalty to the institution which had, as they believed, exerted an ennobling and transforming influence upon their own lives, and by the desire that those who come after them should enjoy the same influences and receive the same uplift as themselves.

They organized with thirty-three members and chose for their president Mrs. Lizzie Slattery Minehan (Mrs. T. C.). They were so fortunate as to remain under her wise and energetic command for three consecutive terms of the presidential office.

At the close of the first year they held a bazaar which netted the society about $800. With this fund, by the advice of Father Doubleday, they made much needed repairs on their academy building and provided some of the more modern conveniences.

In pursuance of a like policy, each year has seen not only the increase of the fund for the building of the new hall, but also some substantial contribution to the needs of the old building, beloved by them as the home of their alma mater, such as reference books and apparatus for the department of science and the like.

Four years after its organization, the society, under the administration of Mrs. Mary Norton Scott (Mrs. John), decided to become a literary, as well as a business club, and they have found the combination very delightful and helpful. This new feature of their work did not diminish their enthusiasm and energy in the pursuit of their objective, the hoped for alumnae hall. This fact was made very apparent when, not long ago, the Republican Register offered a one thousand dollar cash prize to the person or organization securing the largest number of new subscribers to that paper within a stated time. The president of the society, Mrs. Mary O'Conner Mackin (Mrs. James), ably assisted by Mrs. Louise Slattery Lalor (Mrs. Wm.), took the matter up and by their skillful management and personal efforts the prize was won and the handsome sum of one thousand dollars was added to the alumnae hall fund.

For the past two years their literary work has been the study of Ireland and the Irish people. The coming year Illinois will claim their attention.

Their membership is now upwards of one hundred and fifty.

The Author Club is a society for Swedish ladies exclusively. It was organized in 1902 "for the purpose of making a systematic study of American and foreign writers and other subjects of common interest." It had for its first president Miss Johannah C. Lind, a graduate of Knox college and a valued teacher in our public schools. She was retained in the office of president until her removal from the city.

This club has studied American and English writers, devoting one year to the study of Shakespeare alone. For three consecutive years Germany, Sweden and the United States were studied and papers prepared on the geographical, industrial and political conditions of these countries. Contemporary fiction has been read. The south and its problems, and also a few of the southern writers have been considered. The roll call at each meeting is also a means of becoming acquainted with authors, for the members respond to the call of their names with a quotation from some author selected for the occasion. The club, in common with other clubs in the city, contributes to worthy causes which appeal for aid. For the past three years it has contributed to the Visiting Nurse Association and other benevolences have been remembered.

At present the club has sixteen members.

The Swedish Ladies' Benevolent Society, or as it is familiarly known, the "S. L. B.," is just what its name indicates, purely a benevolent organization. But in order to enlist and retain the interest of the members, the work is combined with social features which make the meetings very enjoyable. The ladies spend a social afternoon together with their needle work, music or readings, after which light refreshments are served and each lady drops into the treasury an offering, not less than a dime and on special occasions a larger sum, the amount thus contributed being used as it accumulates, in the relief of some person or object whose need appeals to them, as in case of illness or some special emergency. They have met together in this way for twenty years. There are thirty-five members with two officers, a president and a secretary-treasurer.

The Galesburg Equal Suffrage Association was organized May 29th, 1907, at the home of Congressman and Mrs. Geo. W. Prince, under the leadership of Dr. Frances Wood of Chicago. The original officers were Mrs. Lewis B. Fisher, president; Mrs. H. V. Neal, vice-president; Mrs. Fred R. Jelliff, secretary; Mrs. Geo. C. Lescher, treasurer.

The purpose of the organization is "to work for the complete political equality of men and women." It is affiliated with the state association by paying annual dues to that treasury. It has sent delegates to the state conventions, thus keeping in touch with the national and state work.

A number of noted speakers have addressed the citizens of Galesburg under the auspices of this society, perhaps the most illustrious of whom is Miss Jane Addams, of national, or we might truly say, of world-wide fame because of her wonderful influence and success in the "settlement work" in Chicago.

The Tuscarora club dates its beginning to February, 1908, when it came into being with eleven charter members and announced its object to be "to stimulate active interest in the development of individual and home life, to promote mutual helpfulness and to maintain a program of regular and prescribed study."

The greater number of the discussions have been on literary topics although arts and crafts have claimed the attention of the club to some extent. A very important and commendable feature of all their meetings and one which clubs in general would do well to adopt, is a parliamentary law drill at the close of each meeting. This is very helpful to those who have not been so fortunate as to have had that sort of training as one of the factors of their earlier education.

The membership now numbers twenty-one and the meetings are held every two weeks from October to May.

The P. E. O. is a national organization which has the distinction of being the largest woman's secret organization in the world. It had its beginning in the thought and effort of seven girls in Wesleyan University, Mount Pleasant, Iowa, in 1869. For some years its chapters were found only in the middle west, but now its organizations are scattered here and there, from New York and Washington in the east to Los Angeles and San Francisco in the west, and from Vancouver, B. C., to Texas.

The P. E. O. has for its object three lofty ideals and aims toward which it is striving: A high standard of womanhood; loyal friendship among its members; a helping hand in the education of young women who strive for self-support.

Chapter W of Galesburg was organized in March, 1909. Its membership is restricted to twenty-four active resident members. The regular meetings are held on the second and fourth Thursday of each month from October to May. Some of the subjects taken up by Chapter W will suggest the lines of work in which our local ladies are engaged, viz.: "Hospital Day." On this day the women consider the needs of the Galesburg hospital, they sew for it, contribute delicacies such as jellies, etc., and plan for the maintenance of the room which they have furnished. "Children's Day", including a program given to the children and a donation to the Free Kindergarten. "Mother's Day." A social afternoon with needle work, music and readings. Other lines of study include the following: "What Women Can do to Improve Galesburg;" "The Founding of Galesburg;" "Our College;" "Our Public Schools;" "Our Industries;" "The Passion Play of 1910;" "Illinois, its Early History, Constitution, Public Officers, Statesmen, Educators, Reformers and Philanthropists, Newspaper Men and Women, Authors and Poets, Sculptors, Painters and Musicians."

The Wednesday club is composed of a select circle of ladies devoted to the study of music and the drama. Every alternate Wednesday they meet at the home of one of their number to engage in the study of some musical classic either of the ancient or modern school. Being ladies of a high degree of musical and dramatic talent and culture themselves, they are exceptionally well fitted to enjoy these afternoons with the great composers.

Dramatic art is given a place on their programs, for often their rendition of a musical masterpiece is made more vivid and real by "suiting the action to the word." In this particular they are especially fortunate in having of their number one who is acknowledged to be a most talented and delightful exponent and teacher of this form of expression.

They occasionally invite some one well versed in the subject which they are about to study to come in and give them a lecture, or a lecture-recital, as for example, when Prof. W. F. Bentley of the Knox Conservatory of Music gave them a lecture on "Salome" illustrated by a recital of musical passages from that opera; and when Rev. David Fales addressed them at the beginning of the present year's study on "The Making of an Opera."

The following list of subjects for the year 1911-12 will give an idea of the admirable work which these ladies are doing:

"The Music of Shakespeare and His Time." A lecture by Mr. Dyke Williams.

"Tristan and Isolde," Mrs. J. Grant Beadle.

"Madam Butterfly," Mrs. Wilfred Arnold.

"Faust," Mrs. Robert G. Chappell.

"The Jugglers of Notre Dame," Mrs. George L. Price.

"Mefistofele," Mrs. George H. Harrison.

"Cendrillon," Mrs. Wm. G. D. Orr.

"Natoma," Mrs. Charles C. Craig.

"Every Woman," Mrs. Emory S. Gunnell.

"The Faun," Mrs. Judd Seacord.

"Selections from Operas," Mrs. William E. Phillips, Mrs. Dyke Williams.

"Faust" was given before an open meeting of the Galesburg Woman's Club on March 16, 1912. Selections from the text of the opera were read by Mrs. Anna Chappell Gunnell (Mrs. Emory S.) interspersed with arias and concerted numbers from the score, given by Mrs. Robert G. Chappell, soprano; Miss Alice May Carley, alto; Prof. W. F. Bentley, bass; Mr. W. B. Carlton, tenor.

The Visiting Nurse association was the latest of the purely philanthropic societies to be organized in Galesburg. It had its beginning in the spring of 1908, and its beneficent work is largely the result of the untiring efforts of Mrs. W. S. Purington, who originated the plan for such an association for Galesburg, and with the aid of a number of earnest and able women pushed it to an assured success. Mrs. Purington was its first president and continued in that office until her removal to Des Moines, in the spring of 1911. It was organized by women and its offices and management are held by women, a body of eighteen constituting the directorate. It was fortunate for the association and for our city that its first corps of directors was made up of such earnest, efficient women as were those that started the enterprise. Men may become members by paying their dues and by virtue of their membership are entitled to vote for the directors. The association sustains a visiting nurse for the city and is responsible for a nurse for the public schools, although the salary for the school nurse is now met by an appropriation from the city school fund. The salary of the city nurse is raised by contributions from the woman's clubs of the city, and by individual gifts from those citizens and business men whose sympathies go out toward this worthy object. It is a noteworthy fact that a large proportion of the contributions, aside from those of the woman's clubs, come from people of small or moderate means.

A loan closet is maintained, the supplies for which are provided by contribution.

The women of this association have been fortunate in securing the services of two very efficient trained nurses and their ministries to the sick, the suffering and the destitute have become indispensable to our city.

The Thursday club is a study club which meets on Thursday afternoon once in two weeks. Its lines of work are the same as those taken up by other purely literary clubs, although they are considering the advisability of taking up philanthropic work of some kind in addition to their literary pursuits. They have been organized for about two years and find their meetings most enjoyable and profitable.

Last year they studied Italian literature and art. The present year their attention is given to the study of Greece. They have a membership of eighteen young women, both married and unmarried, and their association together is very congenial.

The Woman's Club of Galesburg is the youngest of the clubs in date of organization, having been started in the spring of 1911. It is modeled after the pattern of the Woman's club in general, having different departments through which the work is carried on. In this club there are three departments, those of civics, the home and literature and art. The members may work in one, or in all of these departments as they choose.

In charge of the civics department is Mrs. Jennie Grubb Fowler, with Mrs. Louise M. Trask and Miss Minnedelle George as associates.

The home department is in charge of Mrs. Nellie C. Chamberlain, Mrs. Clara C. Rhodes and Mrs. Frances H. Raub.

The department devoted to literature and art is under the supervision of Miss Jessie R. Holmes, Mrs. Clara G. Rhodes and Mrs. Louise L. Roberts.

The club has an advisory board which includes the mayor of the city and eleven others of the leading business and professional men of the community.

It is one of the three federated organizations in the city. Its program embraces studies in child conservation, amusements, commission form of government, sanitation, nursing, child culture and historical and literary topics.

Standing committees are maintained on house, social, calendar, auditing, press and election, with a special committee on music, and regularly appointed doorkeeper and ushers.

The membership now numbers 225 and it is constantly growing. Many of its members are also members of the smaller and more exclusive clubs of the city. Many of them also are members of the Galesburg Equal Suffrage association.

The Woman's Auxiliary to the Railway Mail association, though not one of the largest nor oldest, is nevertheless one of the most helpful and successful of the medium-sized, youthful woman's associations in the city.

Only ladies of the immediate families of railway mail service employees are eligible to membership.

The object is the promoting of all the interests of the Railway Mail association; also of the comfort, the social enjoyment and literary advancement of the members of the families of railway postal clerks.

The Galesburg branch was organized by the Burlington branch, at Mrs. Young's home, Sept. 20, 1906, was federated, Nov. 16, 1906, with the Nat. W. A. R. M. A., which became affiliated with The Federation of Woman's clubs, January, 1908.

A civic interest and pride has also been shown at various times by their encouragement and willingness to assist worthy projects as hospitals, free kindergarten, visiting nurse, girls' club, mothers' congress, etc.

Under the wise guidance of Mrs. Slader, Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Golliday and the other faithful officers and active members, the club has more than realized its object—inspired by its motto, "Aiming at the Best."

Mrs. Chas. H. Burns is third division chairman of the National Club Extension committee—the United States being divided into fourteen divisions.

The Woman's Improvement club was organized in November, 1909, by Miss Daisy Dean Walker of Indianapolis, who was at that time in charge of a protective home for girls of the negro race in her home town. The club is composed of thirty women who are seeking self-improvement and literary culture. It also engages in philanthropic work, while social features enter into the life of the club to some extent. A special line of work is laid out for each year and each member has a part assigned her. Much of the club's success is due to Mrs. L. C. Carter, the first president, who worked hard at the beginning to insure a good start to their undertaking.

This club has established a rest and reading room for the young men and women of the negro race at No. 11 Public square, second floor.

They joined the State Federation of Negro Women's clubs in July, 1910, and so have for two years been represented at the state federation meetings. Their motto is "Loyalty," and they say "We are striving to lift as we climb."

The Daisy Dean Walker Culture club was also organized in November, 1909, by Miss Daisy Dean Walker of Indianapolis, who a few days before had organized the Woman's Improvement club. This club is especially for the young women and young married women and was started with a charter membership of fourteen, and has had a most successful growth and development. The number of members is restricted to twenty—with five associate members.

The club was formally organized at the home of Mrs. David Garnett, who was chosen as the first president. They first took up the study of the negro writers, both literary and musical. Later the attention of the club was turned toward such books and plays as "The Clansman," "The Leopard's Spots" and "The Nigger." Each year a systematic course of study has been mapped out which is carefully considered by the young women of the club. The subject for the present year is "Modern Literature."

The club has engaged in philanthropic work, and has regular guest days and two open days as social features of its programs.

It is a member of the State Federation of Negro Women's clubs.

The twenty-three organized associations in Galesburg, above reviewed, are a credit to the city, for separately and collectively they are having an uplifting influence upon the women who are sustaining them, as well as being a very potent factor in creating a higher intellectual and moral standard in the community.

We may also speak with deep satisfaction and pride of other clubs located in neighboring towns.

Probably not one of the individual clubs in Galesburg, aside from those of a specifically philanthropic character, is doing better or more really effective work than is that done by the Illini club of Maquon. It deserves honorable mention because of its remarkable record during the six years of its history as an organization.

The Illini club of Maquon was organized in November, 1905, and was largely the outgrowth of the thought and effort of five ladies, Mrs. H. Woods, Mrs. C. E. Hartsook, Miss Jennie McKinney, Miss Abbie Dickson and Mrs. Eva Chapin Maple.

The first intention was to have simply a literary club for study and mental improvement, but gradually the avenues of thought and investigation have led them out into the alluring fields of local and state history, political problems, civic improvement, the history of other countries and the great national problems which engage the thought of statesmen and politicians. Bible study has also entered into their programs through a prescribed course of three years.

As a relief from their heavier work, they have read with interest the historical and semi-historical writings of Gilbert Parker, Emerson Hough, Mary Hartwell Catherwood, Randall Parrish, Winston Churchill and Maurice Thompson. They consider themselves especially fortunate in securing a little work of John Regan, late of Elmwood, on the "Backwoods and Prairies" of Illinois, 1842-47. A list of the topics considered by this club will in itself open to the view the broad fields of education and intellectual culture through which these ladies have strolled, gathering here and there rich stores of pleasure and information.

They were organized just at the beginning of a wider study of our own state history, so the general subject "Illinois" was chosen for their first study, and as Colonel Clark E. Carr's book "The Illini" was new, its title naturally suggested a name for the new club, and accordingly it was christened "The Illini." In the study of Illinois, they considered its settlement, landmarks, traditions, early political policies, etc.

Local history next claimed their attention and as a natural result, the annual "Home Coming" of the village was inaugurated by this club; and further results of this line of study were the issuing of souvenir editions of the local papers containing bits of family and village history; and furthermore, they became affiliated with the county and state historical societies. In their study of local history much time was given to the investigation of Indian traditions, relics and remains, in which that part of the county furnishes an especially rich field for the explorer.

A most interesting paper, and also of great historical value prepared for the Illini club by Miss Jennie McKenney, as a result of her study of this Indian lore, was read before the Knox County Historical society and received much appreciation and favorable comment.

The history of England and her dependencies was continued through two years.

Current events, especially those of world-wide interest, have had a place upon their programs from the beginning.

Other topics which have been considered by the club are the following: "Public Policies—Out Banking and Monetary Systems"; "Home Rule for Ireland"; "English Radicalism"; "Socialism as a Governmental Possibility"; "Popular vs. Representative Government"; "The Hague Tribunal"; "The Peace Conference." At the request of County Superintendent W. F. Boyes, the "Illini" was honored by an open discussion of educational matters with some of the prominent educators of the state.

As another form of its many-sided efforts, this club laid the foundation for civic improvement in their town and secured a franchise for the development and beautifying of two small parks on their main street, but the surveys for a Galesburg-Peoria interurban railway put a stop to this work until something definite was known.

The latest achievement of the club is the founding of a "Mother's club," for the benefit of teachers and patrons, but the work is so recent that its value as a factor in the community cannot yet be estimated.

The New Century club of Oneida has been in existence about ten years and has a present membership of twenty-two. Soon after its organization it became auxiliary to the State Federation of Woman's clubs.

Its aims and purposes and its programs of study are similar to those of other clubs of its kind. The club flower is the carnation, its colors are pink and green and its motto, "Hold fast to that which is good."

(We regret that we were unable to secure any information of a definite or specific nature regarding this club.)

The Twentieth Century club of Oneida has for its motto, "The aim if reached, or not, makes great the life." Its programs include "discussions of literary, household, historical and other topics."

(In the case of this club also, our information has been only of a general character.)

The Society of Mayflower Descendants, of Galesburg, while not exclusively a woman's organization, is indebted to a woman for its beginning, and its membership is composed so largely of women, the proportion being more than three-fourths, that it may rightfully claim a mention in this sketch of woman's work in the county. More especially should it be included because of the fact that on its membership list may be found the names of residents of Oneida, Knoxville, Maquon and Abingdon.

To Mrs. Martha Farnham Webster (Mrs. Charles Ashley) is due the credit of the initiative thought and effort which resulted in the establishment of this society as a permanent organization, with a constitution and by-laws, regularly elected officers and stated meetings. But her thought and action found so cordial a response from the sons and daughters of the "Pilgrims" resident in and about Galesburg, that it seemed as if the movement was spontaneous, only awaiting the fitting occasion to spring into action.

The first meeting was called by means of notices in the papers and announcements from the different pulpits on the Sabbath preceding December 21, 1901. All descendants of the Pilgrims of Plymouth were asked to meet at the home of Dr. J. V. N. Standish for the purpose of forming a society of Mayflower descendants. The response to so informal and general an invitation was quite remarkable and very gratifying, and on that evening a society was organized with a charter membership of sixteen. Those present signed their names to a temporary compact, giving their lines of descent from Mayflower ancestry, and plans were made for a meeting to be held one year from that date at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Webster.

Each succeeding year since that time on the 21st of December, or the nearest date convenient thereto, the society has observed this anniversary of "Forefather's Day" by a celebration, including a dinner at 6:30 and an evening's program following the dinner. These occasions have invariably been most interesting and much of the history of the Plymouth colony has come to light through information gained from the speeches and papers that have been presented. Valuable historical addresses have been given by Dr. Standish, Dr. Louis B. Fisher and Prof. and Mrs. Raymond, of Knox college. Character sketches of the signers of the Mayflower compact have been given by members of the society who are their descendants.

Our national hymn "America" is always sung by the society at the beginning of the evening's festivities, as they are gathered about the tables before being seated for the dinner. Mrs. Hemans' thrilling and soul-inspiring hymn "The Pilgrim Fathers," sung by a chosen soloist, has always had a place on the evening's program; while the sympathetic strains of "Auld Lang Syne," sung by the entire company as they rise for adjournment, unite their hearts in bonds of friendship and give them happy anticipations of future gatherings.

The charter membership of sixteen has increased to a present membership of forty, while during the ten years the names of upwards of sixty have been enrolled. The annual dinner and reunion, until that of 1910, has been held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ashley Webster. Since then they have been held at one of the down town banquet halls.

The office of president has been held by Dr. J. V. N. Standish since the organization of the society, and that of secretary by Mrs. Webster since the beginning also.

The Daughters of the American Revolution in Knox county are represented by two chapters, one in Galesburg and one in Knoxville.

The Rebecca Parke chapter, of Galesburg, was organized in January, 1901. Mrs. Robert W. Colville was its founder and first regent. To her is due the credit of having aroused the sentiment and stimulated the interest of the twenty-four women who in June of the same year became charter members of Chapter 537 of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Its objects are the same as are those set forth in the constitution of the national society, viz.:

"(1) To perpetuate the memory of the spirit of the men and women who achieved American independence, by the acquisition and protection of historical spots, and the erection of monuments; by the encouragement of historical research in relation to the Revolution and the publication of its results; by the preservation of documents and relics, and the records of the individual services of Revolutionary soldiers and patriots, and by the promotion of celebrations of all patriotic anniversaries.

"(2) To carry out the injunction of Washington in his farewell address to the American people, 'to promote as an object of primary importance institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge,' thus developing an enlightened public opinion and affording to young and old such advantages as shall develop in them the largest capacity for performing the duties of American citizens.

"(3) To cherish, maintain and extend the institutions of American freedom, to foster true patriotism and love of country and to aid in securing for mankind all the blessings of liberty."

Truly a noble aim, and right loyally have the women of the Rebecca Parke chapter risen to an earnest endeavor for the fulfillment of its spirit and its purpose.

Year by year has witnessed some progress on the part of the Rebecca Parke chapter in one or more of the departments of work undertaken by the national society as outlined in its constitution.

While many of the women of this chapter are of an intensely patriotic spirit and earnest purpose, they have needed the stimulus of a leader of like spirit with themselves, and also the stimulus and incentive of co-operative and harmonious effort. These the chapter has enjoyed to a remarkable degree. The four regents who have served the chapter have each in her own way, and in the use of the best resources at her command, striven to carry out a policy of patriotic service best suited to the demands of her term of office. Those who have held the office of regent are the following: Edith Cole Colville (Mrs. Robert W.), Martha Farnham Webster (Mrs. Charles Ashley), Maria Judd Edgerton (Mrs. John H.), Ella Parke Lawrence (Mrs. Geo. A.) and the present regent, Fannie Sisson Everett (Mrs. Edward R.).

Owing to more favorable conditions and opportunities, the chapter has been permitted to do more systematic and effective work under the wise, tactful and stimulating leadership of Mrs. Geo. A. Lawrence, their beloved regent for six years, and whose leadership they could only consent to relinquish in order that she might rise to a higher service in the acceptance of the proffered honor of the state regency, to which office she was elected in April, 1911.

The practical, individual and united effort of this chapter, especially that of a patriotic and philanthropic character, is clearly shown by the various committees carrying on local, state and national work, upon which our members are represented. We have not space to refer in detail to the work of these various committees, but by giving free range to the imagination as they are named one can readily see what an uplifting and ennobling influence such a work might have upon the daughter who engages in it, and upon those persons and objects for the advancement and betterment of which her sympathies and her energies are enlisted. The very names of the different lines of work within the province of these committees are in themselves a revelation, an inspiration and an education. They cover the broad field of our country's needs. The influence of the enactment of the plans and purposes therein suggested will enter into the life and activities of the homes, the schools, the cities, the states of our nation with a purifying and transforming power.

The membership of this chapter is represented upon six of the national, and seven of the state committees, while in some cases two of our members are appointed upon the same committee. For example, two of our number are members of the national committee of the Children of the Republic. Upon the committee for the welfare of women and children, Mrs. Geo. A. Lawrence, our late regent, is state chairman by national appointment. She is also state chairman by national appointment of the committee on good roads—ocean to ocean highways and vice-chairman of the national Franco-American committee. Six of our ladies are appointed as assistant chairmen of important state committees, and some of this number serve on more than one of these committees.

In brief, three of the members of the Rebecca Parke chapter are actively identified with the work of the national committees, and nine with that of state committees.

Does not the list of these various lines of work in which our daughters are engaged open to the mental vision an ever outreaching view of rich fields in which to plant the seeds which it is hoped will take deep root and develop into a thoroughly patriotic, loyal and upright citizenship of the future?

The committees are as follows:

"Fort Massac—its conservation as a national park."

"Memorial continental hall."

"The American monthly magazine—historic—patriotic."

"Historic spots, monuments and revolutionary relics."

"Patriotic education."

"Children of the republic."

"Conservation"—(in general and in particular).

"The welfare of women and children."

"Good roads—ocean to ocean highways."

(The old trails—a memorial to pioneer men and women.)

"Historical research."

"Starved Rock a national park."

Still other lines of work suggested and urged by the national society are the following:

"To prevent desecration of the flag."

"An interchangeable bureau, lectures, etc., for promoting patriotic education."

"Committee on national university."

"Legislation in United States congress."

"Committee on real daughters."

The Rebecca Parke chapter has contributed of its money and its personal interest to the purchase and restoration of old Fort Massac, "situated almost within the environment of the old city of Metropolis in southern Illinois, and overlooking many miles of the Ohio river from its rocky heights." History gives the date of the erection of this fort as probably 1542. It was used as a temporary fort by De Soto's men as a protection from the Indians.

As a chapter, and individually, they hold certificates of stock in the purchase of Lincoln's birthplace in Kentucky—the old farm being now set apart for a national park, through the instrumentality of the national society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

It has also, through its members, contributed to the purchase and restoration of the old Betsy Ross house in Philadelphia, the "birthplace of the American flag."

The conservation of Starved Rock as a national park has claimed our loyal interest as Illinois daughters, and the Berry Industrial school in Georgia appeals to us as a demand for our most earnest interest and support, from motives of patriotism if for no other. This is true "patriotic education," one of the principles for which our national society stands.

The chapter is actively interested in locating and marking the graves of revolutionary soldiers in Knox county, and in the verification of records relating to early history in the county. Much, very much, has been accomplished and gratefully do we recognize and accept this opportunity for real service to our country as befits a patriotic organization. But much still remains to be done.

As has been fittingly expressed by another:

"So long as there remains one hero or one heroine to commemorate; so long as there remains one spot to mark, because it is sacred from labor done by brain or brawn for love of independence; one site on which patriots contended for human rights and human liberty; while there remains within the limits of our country one man, one woman, or one child who has not heard the good news of the great fact in the gospel of peace and brotherhood—that every one, no matter how humble, stands with the greatest in equality before the tribunal of justice; one still to be impressed by the story of liberty so sublimely illustrated by examples of loyalty, courage and humanity on the part of our ancestors of the Revolution, who laid so firmly the rugged foundation for this great government, cementing it, as it were, with resolves for justice, with love of liberty, with suffering, tears and blood, this priceless heritage it is our privilege and duty to pass on to those who come after us, unchanged in all its glory."

And so we say, all hail, to the Daughters of the American Revolution, and may God speed us in our good work.

This completes the review of woman's work in Knox county. It has been a careful and painstaking effort to include all the organizations that have been brought to notice, and all those of which information could be secured by labored investigation. If anything worthy of note has been omitted, it is to be regretted, but it has been from no lack of effort on the part of the writer to secure all possible available information.

It is the record of remarkable intellectual activity and fervid philanthropic and patriotic effort crowned with noteworthy success, an admirable showing in every respect.

It is submitted to the women of our county with the hope that it may awaken a feeling of pardonable pride in view of what has been accomplished in the past, and stimulate them to an ambition to reach still greater heights of achievement in the future.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION IN KNOX COUNTY

By Lawrence R. Ryan, M. D.

Knox county, as far as we are able to learn, has always been favored with its full quota of excellent physicians who were ever abreast of the times. Many of the older men live only in the traditions of the county. During the early history of the county, and in fact until the medical registration law of 1877 was passed, there was no record. Many competent physicians lived, did their work in the most approved manner, and "passed on" without leaving a monument except in the memories of those they served and aided. Whenever advances have been made in scientific medicine, the Knox county physicians have been quick to avail themselves of it. Every year some of them go away to take post graduate work, and give the people the benefit of their new knowledge and skill.

There are two well equipped hospitals in the county (The Galesburg Cottage hospital, and St. Mary's hospital) where almost any operation known to surgical science is performed with skill and dispatch. Many of our physicians and surgeons have a reputation which extends far beyond the confines of the county, and patients come from all directions to receive the benefits of their skill.

The ratio of physicians in the county to the population has always been about one to six hundred. The number, however, is constantly changing. Since the passage of the registration act in 1877, fully two hundred have registered in the county, but many remained only a few months, and others died. Of the forty physicians in the county, twenty-five years ago, there are only ten now in practice. Twenty-two have died and a few who moved away are still living. Doctor L. S. Lambert is the oldest practicing physician in the county. He has been in continuous practice since 1866.

The completion of the schools of medicine has also shown a decided change. "Regulars" have always predominated, but there was about twenty-five per cent of non-regulars twenty-five years ago and most of those were homeopaths, there was a smattering of eclectics. At the present time there are scarcely five per cent non-regulars. As the science of medicine has become more exact, and the germ theory has been developed (when diagnosis must depend upon the microscope), the ranks of the homeopaths have become thinned. Their places have been taken, however, by other cults, viz., osteopaths, naturopaths, chiropractic and Christian scientists.

In epidemics of disease and wherever the service of a physician was needed, the Knox county physician has not been found wanting. He has ever been at the front to bear his share of the burden for humanity's sake. During the Rebellion several of the Knox county men served as surgeons and notable among them was W. F. Tait, who recently passed to his reward, and E. S. Cooper. Many who are now physicians, but were not during the war, served their country in the ranks in time of need. Among them were D. W. Aldrich, L. S. Lambert, G. W. Foote, M. S. Carr, E. L. Phillips and R. B. Snead. All of these have been prominent in the ranks of the G. A. R.

In the late war with Spain, Doctor Jesse Rowe, of Abingdon, was the only Knox county physician who went to the front. He had a commission in the First Illinois cavalry and served from May 21, 1898, until the end of the war.

Doctor W. H. Maley is at present a member of the medical reserve corps in the United States army with the rank of first lieutenant. From 1900 to 1908, he was first lieutenant and assistant surgeon in the artillery battalion of the Illinois National Guards.

The Knox county physicians, as is common with the profession, have not dabbled much in politics, except in a general way. Three physicians have held the office of mayor of Galesburg, and Doctor Louis Becker is now mayor of Knoxville. D. W. Aldrich was elected mayor of Galesburg, in 1887, G. W. Foote, in 1885, and W. O'R. Bradley, in 1901. Several have served the city in the capacity of alderman. H. S. Hurd, 1860-1863; W. H. Maley and C. G. Johnson, several terms each.

Doctor W. F. Tait was appointed chief surgeon to the Soldiers' Home at Quincy, which position he held until he was forced by failing health to resign.

L. R. Ryan was on the National Gold Democratic ticket in 1896, as a candidate for elector.

In club life the physicians have been more active. Four have been exalted rulers of the Elks lodge, viz., L. G. Hall, R. C. Matheny, W. O'R. Bradley and C. B. Horrell. Doctor Bradley also had the honor to serve as president of the Retail Merchants' association and was its president when Galesburg held its first and most successful street fair.

Doctors J. A. Denny, L. R. Ryan, R. C. Matheny and C. B. Ripley have served on the directory of the Galesburg club.

In medical society work the Knox county physicians have forged more to the front than in war or politics, and that is as it should be. It is their natural sphere. Until 1893 there was no medical organization in Knox county. On several occasions feeble efforts had been made to get the physicians together for the purpose of organization, but every effort met with failure until 1893. In the spring of 1893 Doctors Ryan and Bradley sent out notices for a preliminary meeting for the purpose of organizing a Galesburg medical society. There was a hearty response, and the first meeting was held in the offices of Aldrich, Bradley and Ryan, 24 South Cherry street, and an organization perfected. The society was called the "Galesburg Medical society." In this society there were two departures from the regular routine of organizations of this kind. In order to avoid friction and jealousy there were no officers except the secretary and treasurer. The members presided in alphabetical order. The constitution and by-laws also allowed the society to take into membership "non-regulars," viz., eclectics and homeopaths. This was contrary to the constitution of the American Medical association and the code of ethics and naturally created a howl of indignation from the ultra regulars or "moss backs" and "holier than thou" individuals. Strange as it may seem, it was but a few years until this very provision was embodied in the new constitution of the American Medical association and all its affiliated societies, state and county. We, the organizers, were simply ahead of the times. Be that as it may, the ultra regulars organized a new society called the "Galesburg club" the following year, to which "non-conformists" were not eligible. The "Galesburg club" lasted about a year. The society first formed dragged out a miserable existence for five years, and then passed into a state of "innocuous desuetude" for five years more, when it was reorganized and is now in a flourishing condition. Doctor L. R. Ryan was the secretary of the first Galesburg medical society.

In order to affiliate with the state society and the American Medical association, a Knox county medical society was organized in 1902. Doctor Louis Becker of Knoxville was its first president. Since then the office of president has been filled by Doctors Matheny, Stewart, Ryan, Brown, Chalmers, Lytle, Cowan, Davis, Evans and Beecher. In order to avoid friction between the city and country practitioners, the presiding officer is chosen alternately from the Galesburg and smaller town districts. Enthusiastic meetings are held twice a year, April and September. The day is devoted to scientific papers and business and the evening to a banquet, where the inner man is satisfied and jest and jollity are unconfined.

Strife and petty jealousy, which is so common among professional men in small communities, is fast becoming a thing of the past, and all the physicians work together for the good of the profession and suffering humanity. The county societies are not allowed to have fee bills or to attempt to regulate charges. The Galesburg City society, however, has a fee bill, which is used simply as a guide. Each physician makes his charges as the exigencies of the case seem to demand.

For forty years the Military Tract Medical association, which comprised all the territory from Mendota to Quincy and from Peoria to the Mississippi river, took the place of the County society. All the progressive physicians in Knox county were members of that most excellent organization. Many of its meetings were held in Galesburg, and a great many of the Knox county men had the honor of being its president. Among them may be mentioned Doctors Judd, Hensley, Reece, Lambert, Hopper, Percy, Ryan, Becker, Horrell and Matheny.

Doctor Percy has had the distinguished honor of an election as president of the State Medical society and has been one of its counsellors for many years.

Many of the Knox county physicians are members of special societies, and their names appear frequently in the scientific programs.

Thirty years ago few of the physicians were graduates of literary colleges. A two years' course, in an old doctor, was deemed sufficient to start him in practice. Now there are few young physicians in the county who are not graduates of some literary college or university.

Doctor A. G. Humphrey, whose specialty was medical physiology, has repeatedly read articles before scientific bodies.

Doctor R. A. Saunders was the first physician to register under the new registration law of 1877. The date of his registration was Sept. 12th, 1877.

The Knox county physicians have always been a unit in insisting on quarantine regulations and on devising ways and means for the prevention of disease in our community. Repeatedly they have called the attention of the people to the filthy and unsanitary condition of Cedar Fork creek, Galesburg, into which all the sewerage of the city flows, and have pointed it out as a disease breeding medium. Soon after the organization of the first Galesburg medical society in 1894 a resolution was drawn up and presented to the city council, urging upon them the necessity of inclosing Cedar Fork creek, having a garbage crematory and a suitable sewerage system for the city. (It is a notorious fact that certain sections of the city are yearly subject to epidemics of typhoid fever due to deficient drainage.) Like all good resolutions for the betterment of the health of the people, that memorial was listened to in silence by the good city fathers and pigeonholed and died the death of all "good resolutions." The Cedar Fork still sends forth its noisome odors, an ever present menace to the good health of the community and also is an everliving monument to the lack of judgment and foresight of our counsellors. Thousands to fight disease, but not one cent to prevent it!

Twenty years ago many of the foreign countries, recognizing the wisdom and necessity of conserving the health of their citizens and insisting on means of prevention of disease, were compelling the examination of the children as to their physical condition before they entered school, so that prevalent disease or deformities might be eradicated and others prevented. In 1892 Doctor L. R.

Ryan, on his return from Germany, where he had been studying, gave lectures before the teachers of the city of Galesburg on the necessity of having the children examined, especially as to the condition of their sight and hearing, as those were the organs brought most into use in the school room. On many occasions after that physicians have lectured before the teachers at the County Institute and much good has come of it.

In 1904, under the administration of Doctor Ben B. Baird, commissioner of health, a more elaborate plan of examination of the school children's eyes was instituted. Doctor R. C. Matheny and Doctor L. R. Ryan made personal examination of the vision of several thousand children. As neither the county or city make any financial provision for such work, the service of the physicians was gratuitous.

Within the past three years, however, the school nurse system has been instituted and the work of examination is taken over by her, to the great advantage of the pupil and the teacher.

Recently, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., courses of lectures on health and hygiene have been instituted and the Knox county physicians have given the lectures on subjects assigned them.

On numerous occasions the physicians have filled the pulpits on tuberculosis Sunday, admonishing the people as to the wide prevalence of that dread disease and the great necessity of its prevention. These lectures have been of inestimable value in awakening interest among the people, as is evidenced by the complete organization the county now has to fight the disease. The propaganda organized by the Knox county physicians in the spring of 1911, for the education of all the people of the county as to the dangers of tuberculosis and of the necessity of having a county sanatorium for the treatment is one of the most unselfish on record. In 1908, the Knox County Medical society appointed a committee consisting of Dr. C. B. Ripley, chairman, and Doctors Bradley and Cromwell to confer with a committee from the county supervisors to see if the county would not erect or provide a suitable sanatorium for the treatment of consumption. Several meetings were held, but very little was done. Finally it was discovered that a small farm could be purchased near Knoxville, which would be suitable for a tent colony at least. This was purchased, but it soon became evident that some of the supervisors had "inside information," and as individuals used their knowledge as supervisors to their own profit. It was finally threshed out in court and the whole episode ruined all prospects of a sanatorium, and for the time put a quietus on the effort to secure one. The matter was held in abeyance for a year or two. Finally in the spring of 1911, the Galesburg City Medical society called a special meeting with the same end in view. The following committee was appointed: Dr. Cox, chairman; Doctors Bradley, Hall, Longbrake and Ryan. This committee was augmented by three from the county society, Birmingham, Bohan and Becker. Under the active guidance of Doctor Cox, chairman of the committee, a strenuous campaign was begun at once. At the beginning of the campaign the physicians were urged by the supervisors to go out among the people and finally bring evidence to the supervisors that there was need of such an institution and that the people really wanted it. In all good faith the physicians and those interested did so, and brought the evidence and presented it. The best plan seemed to be that of securing the hearty co-operation of the business men, make an educational assault on all the towns of the county, and finally to get an expression of opinion from each locality as to the advisability of having a county sanatorium. Money to defray the expenses of the canvass was subscribed by the merchants and other individuals. Physicians who had automobiles loaned them for the work. The organization was complete and active work was begun in August. The county was divided into districts and a complete schedule of lectures was made, so that two physicians usually and one lay party would appear at each town at the time specified. The physicians were untiring in their efforts, spurred on by their enthusiastic and able chairman, Doctor Cox, who gave almost all his time during the crusade to its furtherance. Twenty towns and districts were visited by twenty physicians and several citizens, attorneys and merchants divided up into groups of three. The physicians discussed the scientific side and the necessity for strict quarantine and right living, also urging the establishment of a county institution as the best plan of treatment. The social and business aspect was presented by the non-physicians. At each meeting place the people in attendance were asked to vote upon the following resolution:

"At a public meeting held in ..... Knox County, Ills. August ..... 1911. For the purpose of devising ways and means to check the spread of the dread disease tuberculosis the following resolution was passed:

Resolved:—That the supervisors of Knox County be urged to immediately arrange for the procuring or erection of a suitable sanatorium for the isolation and cure of tubercular patients.

Signed ....., Chairman.

....., Secretary."

Thus tangible evidence of the desire of the people could be presented to the board of supervisors. Everywhere they were received with enthusiasm and the questions asked by the people showed a deep interest in the matter. As a climax to the crusade, a large meeting was held in Galesburg in the temporary wigwam of the Christian church, and Doctor Petit, who has charge of the tubercular sanatorium, gave an entertaining address.

The special committee of the supervisors to consider the matter was made up of Hoxworth, chairman, and Robson, Barry, Paden and Greigg. This committee agreed to meet the committee from the medical society and others interested and hear arguments. A résumé of the whole subject was written up by Doctor Ryan on behalf of the committee and presented in pamphlet form after being read. Many of the physicians of the county, besides those on the committee, also spoke in favor of the plan. Nearly a whole day was given up to this discussion. The arguments were so overwhelming, and there was such a unanimity of opinion among the newspapers and people of standing, that it seemed as if the supervisors could not refuse. It is known that several of the committee were in favor of it, but were overawed by stronger influence. The committee of the physicians were forced to spend half their time answering irrelevant questions, or brushing away imaginary cobwebs, and suppositions, which were pertinent only to the mind of the opposition. Nothing was done except to appoint a subcommittee to visit Ottawa and Naperville and investigate the institutions at those points, and a non-committal report was given to the board of supervisors and placed on file without a word of discussion by the board, notwithstanding the fact that the day the report was brought in, the secretary of the State Anti-tubercular society was present and spoke before the board, in hopes that something might be done. Members of the committee of the medical societies also added their mite. They may as well have saved their energy for they were talking to deaf ears.

Thus ended the first chapter of the great crusade to awaken the people to the existence of a great evil and to effect a means of its eradication.

When, oh when, will the people consider enough their own welfare to place it in the hands of competent individuals who hold office at their will and consider their highest duty to be to guard carefully the people's welfare even though it does cost a little money? When will shallow office holders realize that they are there at the will of the people, and to subserve their interests and not to carry out some personal political scheme or spite and thereby kill a plan that the community needs for its own protection?

The first move against tuberculosis in the county was crushed but the end is not yet. The work goes grandly on. Every newspaper and thinking man sees the necessity for such a sanatorium. A county organization which affiliates with the State Anti-tubercular league has been organized, and the people are daily being educated. Public sentiment will soon force Knox county to take her place in the progressive league, and establish a place where those sorely afflicted tubercular patients can be properly cared for. "Thousands for graft, but not a dollar for real necessity."

Early recognizing the fact that disease is conveyed to humans through the medium of the milk of cows and that a large per cent of the intestinal diseases of childhood and subsequent deaths were due to this source, the Knox county physicians through the Galesburg Medical and Knox County Medical societies organized the Knox County Milk commission. The commission was composed of the following physicians: Baird, chairman; Evans, secretary; Longbrake, Nash, Beecher and Cromwell. The commission was organized for the purpose of educating the people at large to the dangers lurking in unclean milk and to induce the dairy men to increase the sanitary conditions and to eliminate all diseased and particularly tuberculous cattle. An effort was to be made to compel the delivery of sterilized milk having its full fat percentage. The committee went to work with a will, but soon found that when the individual's pocketbook was touched he rebelled. The whole story is graphically told by the chairman of the commission, who read a paper before the American Association of Medical Milk commissioners at St. Louis, Missouri, June 6th, 1910, which I here quote in full, and fully states the work done by Knox county physicians:

Some Considerations of the Pure Milk Question in Country Districts.

BY BEN. D. BAIRD, M. D., GALESBURG, ILL.

(Reprint from Wisconsin State Medical Journal.)

In a burst of public spiritedness, characteristic of the profession, the Galesburg Medical society in April, 1908, organized the Galesburg Medical Milk commission. It is only fair to say that our desires were greater than our resources, and the medical society not having had a great deal of experience with milk commissions, considered the honor of appointment to membership of this commission, due and sufficient reason for proceeding to get busy with the milk question, and everlastingly keeping at it without thought of remuneration or wherewithal to meet expenses. The public was indifferent to the degree of absolutely refusing even to get interested in us, and the city council seemed to think we were grafters when we asked for a milk ordinance that would give us some authority to inspect milk. So that fell through, and we were right where we started, only we knew a few things which we didn't know to start out with. We then thought the milk dealers were easy and would like to be educated along the lines of certified milk, so we called them together and talked to them, talked to them earnestly, like fathers. They listened intently and seemed delighted with our theory. They thought our talks were beautiful and our unselfish stand for humanity entitled us to a bronze medal, and then they woke up and said: "How are we going to pay for all this when we're making only a living now? Your theory is beautiful, your intentions are ennobling, your certified milk is just the thing, but we are only poor milk dealers and have to buy milk wherever we can get it so that we can sell it for enough profit to keep our families in shoes and our groceryman satisfied. We can't build sanitary barns and put screens on them, we can't have our herds tested and we can't make the farmers do it because they have milked cows too long now in the good old filthy, disease-producing way."

We found that Galesburg was using about ten thousand quarts of milk daily and two thousand five hundred quarts of cream. About 15 per cent was produced by two or three dairymen, the balance was shipped in or furnished by private families. We approached the dairymen in a very cautious and respectful manner and suggested that certain improvements would allow them to furnish a better milk supply. Their reply was that "to make these necessary improvements would mean a raise in the price of milk and our customers wouldn't stand for it, and besides our barn lots are so flat the cows wade knee-deep in mud, after each rain," which is literally true, as Galesburg is right on the prairies, "so we couldn't furnish certified milk if we got twice as much for it as we now get" (the average price is about seven cents per quart). So we were up against it again. All this had taken us better than a year, and what we had accomplished in the way of certified milk wouldn't hurt anybody. But we were the Medical Milk commission and our duty was to see that Galesburg got a better quality of milk and we had to do it some way and without money. Moral suasion had failed, our milk ordinance was knocked out, the milk producers wouldn't listen, the milk dealers couldn't and it looked as if we were going to be failures as milk commissioners.

At the critical moment when we were in deep despair a Moses arose as of old and told us how our superintendent of public schools had a way of getting things and suggested that we have him equip the chemical department of the high school with milk testing apparatus and have the professor of chemistry adopt milk analysis as a part of the regular curriculum and teach the pupils how to analyze milk and teach them what pure milk was and what impure milk meant, to instruct them that it was a most valuable part of their daily life to see that the family didn't buy filthy milk and by repeatedly examining the milk from their own houses and keeping records of the same it would soon be easy to tell which of the dealers were handling the best milk and soon the whole school would be talking and comparing notes and the milk man who wasn't clean would have to brush up or he would lose his business.

This plan we adopted and the board of education made us a very liberal allowance for this equipment and installed it in the chemical department of the high school. Of course this does not include the bacterial count, but we test for fats, solids, preservatives and specific gravity and use the Wisconsin curd test for purity, so it is after all a very good analysis. A record of every analysis is kept by the professor of chemistry and the pupils themselves make the tests under the supervision of their professor, and very soon they become quite proficient and after a while they positively refuse to use milk that doesn't come up to the standard. The high school has nearly eight hundred pupils, representing nearly as many families, and these eight hundred families wield a tremendous influence for the betterment of the milk situation.

Recently in a talk with the superintendent of schools and the professor of chemistry they told me that milk examination was specially dwelt upon all through the four years' course and they considered it relatively of as great importance as any other branch that was taught because it brought the question of pure milk daily into homes that previously had known nothing of it and the demand for better milk was so great that the milk to-day is 50 per cent better than when it was inaugurated. Superintendent of Schools Steel says: "It emphasizes in a way as nothing else could, the value of pure milk and bring it directly home to the consumers."

Of course we do not claim to produce certified milk nor do we expect this association to accept it as such, but we do claim to have raised the standard of milk in Galesburg until less than 5 per cent of it falls below the standard in fats or shows the presence of preservatives or filth, and this at a time when the milk was notoriously bad, and this in a country which is not a dairy country and where the conditions and environments are not conducive to the production of the best milk, and we did it without any expense. In addition the inspector of high schools sent out by the University of Illinois to inspect such schools with the idea of admitting their pupils to the university, wrote us a very flattering letter in which he commended us highly for the step we had taken and advocating strongly its general adoption by high schools throughout the state.

In conclusion I only wish to reiterate the principal considerations with which we dealt and which I believe will apply almost everywhere to towns of our size: First, the apathy of its citizens toward a movement of this kind due to a lack of knowledge of the subject. Second, the seeming inability to have the city council pass an operable ordinance that would assist us. Third, the backwardness with which milk dealers and milk producers are brought to see the light. Fourth, the ease with which a chemical department of a high school can be induced to take up milk analysis and the general good resulting from such procedure.

Illinois Standards.—Milk shall contain not less than 3% of milk fat, and not less than 8.5% of solids not fat.

U. S. Standards.—Standard milk is milk containing not less than 12% of total solids, and not less than 8.5% of solid not fat, nor less than 3.25% of milk fat

In his recently published book entitled "Foods and Their Adulteration," Dr. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, says: "From thousands of analyses of American milks that have been made it appears that the average content of fat therein is about 3.9%."

Doctor Chalmers has been a frequent contributor to our newspapers on all subjects of interest to the people and the profession, as he takes a deep interest both in medical and civic life.

Doctor Bradway, of Abingdon, fills the chair of physiology in Abingdon college.

Doctor Bower, besides being a rival of Whitcomb Riley, is interested in many of the business enterprises of the city.

Doctor Wing was for many years chief medical director of the C. M. L. A. Insurance society of Galesburg.

For twenty years Knox county has had the services of two excellent woman physicians, Doctors Rice and Law. There have been others in the county, but they have not remained long.

For many years Knox county was one of the few that had a capable eye specialist. Doctor L. S. Lambert was one of the pioneers in that line of work in this county. At the present time there are four, Lambert, Ryan, Parry and Matheny.

EARLY HISTORY OF THE GALESBURG PUBLIC SCHOOL

By Professor W. L. Steele

The history of the public schools of Galesburg is divided into three periods: The district schools, the union graded schools and the schools under the present charter. Of the first period, that of district schools, no official records can be found. The first district was organized, probably, in 1840, when the village of Galesburg numbered 272 souls. As the population increased, it was subdivided, from time to time, until there were eight independent school districts, each having its own board of directors and a little schoolhouse of one department, when, in 1858, they were all united into one district, comprising the territory within the present limits of Galesburg and known as the Union Graded School District No. 1. During the nineteen years, which this period covers, the population of the city had grown to nearly 5,000. A population of 5,000 with only eight school rooms, where three times that number would be required today, calls for an explanation, which will be given farther on.

THE FIRST SCHOOLHOUSE

The first public school building, according to tradition, for there are no records preserved and no account of it was committed to print for more than a quarter of a century after the event, was built on the north side of the square, east of Broad street, in 1840. It was soon afterwards moved to the north side of Ferris street, between Broad and Cherry streets. It was constructed in accordance with the ideas of Mr. C. S. Colton, one of the directors, and the very novelty of the plan has preserved it from the common oblivion of the school architecture of that period. The floor was an inclined plane sloping from the rear to the front where the teacher's desk was placed, the object being to have the pupils in full view of the teacher. The pupils who attended that school all remember what a capital place the aisles were to slide down hill, and on this account it has not been forgotten. Mr. Colton, it is said, afterwards regretted that all the schoolhouses were not built on this plan. It would seat sixty pupils.

THE FIRST TEACHER

Mr. Eli Farnham taught the first school in this building in the winter of 1840-41. The school was in session from four to six months each year; the teacher was generally a college student who was in need of money to complete his education. Prof. George Churchill, when a boy, went to this school in the winter of 1840-41 and taught it in the winter of 1848-49, when he was a sophomore in college. He received a dollar a day and boarded around, sleeping at home. One of his pupils was Miss Mary Allen West.

LOCATION OF SCHOOLHOUSES

The names and the locations of the different school buildings at the time the districts were consolidated in 1858, were as follows: Ferris Street school, on the north side of Ferris street, west of Cherry street; East Main Street school, sometimes called the Brick school, on the southwest corner of Main and Pine streets; West Main Street school, sometimes known as the Parker school, on the south side of Main street, just east of Walnut avenue; Simmons Street school, known for a time as the Blanchard school, on the north side of Simmons street, east of Academy; Tompkins Street school, where the First Baptist church now stands; Monmouth Street school, at the junction of Monmouth and Brooks streets; Chambers Street school, known as the Depot school on First street, just west of Chambers street; Kellogg Street school, on the southwest corner of Kellogg and Losey streets.

POVERTY OF THE DISTRICTS

Comparing the dates of the purchase of the different school sites, with the years when it is certainly known schools were conducted on these premises, it is evident that the first schoolhouses were "squatters"—too poor to own the land on which they stood. The buildings themselves gave evidence of their poverty. The Galesburg Free Democrat, in its issue of November 13, 1856, says, editorially, "Our present school pens should be sold for coal houses." These conditions can easily be accounted for. The people of Illinois did not believe in common schools at that date; there was no free school law in Illinois till 1855, nineteen years after the settlement of the Galesburg colony. It is true, a free school law was enacted by the legislature in 1825.

SCHOOL LAW OF 1825

This law provided that common schools should be established free and open to every class of white citizens between the ages of five and twenty-one years. The legal voters were empowered at the annual meeting to levy a tax of one-

It is true, a free school law was enacted by the legislature in 1825.

SCHOOL LAW OF 1825

This law provided that common schools should be established free and open to every class of white citizens between the ages of five and twenty-one years. The legal voters were empowered at the annual meeting to levy a tax of one-half of one per cent, subject to a maximum limitation of $10 to any one person. An appropriation was made by the state of $2 out of every $100 received into the treasury. This, together with the interest on the state common school fund, which consisted of three per cent of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands, two townships donated for founding and maintaining a seminary of learning, and the surplus revenue of the United States distributed by act of Congress in 1837, made possible quite a complete system of public schools. To this must be added, of course, the income from the 16th section of every township the most munificent donation ever made to public education by a government. This came from Congress in compliance with the ordinance of 1787, which enjoined that "schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." But the law was so amended in 1827, as virtually to nullify it by providing that no person should be taxed for the maintenance of any school unless his consent was first obtained in writing, and the continuance of the state appropriation of $2 out of every $100 received into the treasury, being its very life, was denied. In 1845, even the interest on the state fund was suspended, owing to the embarrassed condition of the finances—this state, like many others, having stopped paying interest on her public debt. From this date, 1827, to 1855, there were repeated amendments and revisions of the school law by the legislature, but they had no effect upon the schools, for they all wanted the vital principle of the taxing power. As late as 1852, the total local tax for school purposes in the whole state of Illinois amounted to only fifty-one thousand dollars. The school law remained a dead letter for twenty-eight years; and it was during this period that the Galesburg colony was founded and grew to have a population of three thousand. Under these conditions it is no wonder that the schoolhouses of Galesburg were but little better than coal houses and that only three of them owned the land on which they stood.

THE SCHOOL SECTION

The income from the sixteenth section was, practically, all the support upon which the schools could depend till 1855, or rather 1856, when the tax provided by the law of 1855 became available. Thus the sixteenth section was a matter of great importance at that time. Where it was, what disposition was made of it, and how much was realized from it, forms part of the school history of those days; and it is certainly a matter of interest to us to-day, as we receive annually the income from that portion of this fund which we got when it was divided between Galesburg and the remainder of the township.

In an article, "A Brief History of Knox College," prepared by the Rev. Geo. W. Gale in 1845, "for the double purpose of public information and a document of reference," he says: "The school section (640 acres) given by the government for primary schools, fell near the town, and has yielded a permanent fund of $7,000, the interest of which with the annual state appropriations nearly furnishes gratuitous instruction to every child in the township. Some of two hundred children now profit by this fund." This was written nine years after the founding of the colony. The greater part of the school section lies within the city limits. Main street, west from Henderson street to Linwood cemetery, is its north boundary; and Henderson street, south from Main street to Fifth street, is its east boundary.

INCOME FROM TOWNSHIP FUND

When this fund was divided between the city and the township there is no record of the amount that came to the city. Whatever that amount was the board of education has to-day $5,133.55, which is this fund plus $221.20, Galesburg's share of the county fund that was distributed in 1908 by the county superintendent.

The records of those days show that school funds were loaned at 10 per cent. Thus the net income from the township fund would be about $550 annually. This was practically the amount of available funds for school purposes from 1839 to 1855. The population of the township in 1840, including the village of Galesburg, was 516, and in 1855 the population of the village alone was 2,916. During these fifteen years the public schools of the village and township of Galesburg, with a population never less than 500 and reaching 4,000, had for their support but little more than $500 a year—not enough to provide for more than two schools where there should have been from three to twenty. That the public school accommodations were entirely inadequate and miserably poor in Galesburg prior to 1855 is no reflection on the intelligence or public spirit of the good people of that time. After this date, however, when the present free school law was enacted, one would naturally expect to find in this community good schools with sufficient accommodations.

PUBLIC INDIFFERENCE TO SCHOOLS

In the issue of Jan. 1st, 1857, of the Galesburg Free Democrat, is an article signed by "E. S. W." (E. S. Wilcox, professor of modern languages in Knox college) in which he advocates forming union graded schools and pronounces the present schools inefficient, worse than useless—a shame to the community. In the issue of April 13, 1859, is an article signed "Tax-Payer" in which he says: "I believe I may safely assert that there is not another town in the state of Illinois, having as large a population as Galesburg, that has done so little, directly, for the improvement of its common schools." In an editorial of Sept. 3, 1859, appears the following: "The fair name of the 'College City' is being tarnished by our shameful negligence of the interests of our common schools. While we rejoice in the higher educational facilities afforded by our colleges and seminaries, let us no longer disgrace ourselves by neglecting the masses in our midst, whose right training is more intimately connected with our future prosperity than that of any other class." In an article on union graded schools by Professor Churchill, Nov. 20, 1856, is this sentence: "A schoolhouse could be built which instead of being a burning disgrace to us would be our brightest glory." He must then have had a vision of that schoolhouse which was built ten years later and which to-day bears his name.

JOHN F. EBERHART

In the Editor's Table of the Illinois Teacher, Feb. 27, 1857, is an article on Galesburg by John F. Eberhart, one of the distinguished educational pioneers of Illinois, a promoter of the union graded school system, in which may be found the following: "Galesburg is a pleasant city, and has already acquired a merited fame for literary enterprise. Lombard university, Knox male and female colleges—all school buildings nearly completed—are institutions of a high grade and throw a halo of light about the place. The citizens are generally intelligent and kind and probably think less of money and more of mind than is customary for a western city. However, amid all their aspirations for the formation of an intelligent community and the full development of true manhood and womanhood, one very important feature has, until lately, been overlooked. Their ambition has soared above the common schools. The dilapidated condition of the public schools bears a woeful testimony of their neglect. The buildings are poor, the teachers receive poor wages and the result is that they have poor schools."

SIMEON WRIGHT

Simeon Wright, another of our distinguished educational pioneers, as state agent of the Illinois Teacher, wrote up Galesburg for the July (1858) issue as follows: "I am on classic ground. The very atmosphere breathes incense to the goddess of letters and science. The severe elegance of Knox college and fair proportions of Lombard university are the material embodiment of the spirit of the place. Here are the higher institutions of learning just emerging from infancy in all the vigor of a young giantess, and here, also, are eight overshadowed public schools, and until recently there were as many districts." After referring, in complimentary terms, to Professors Churchill, Standish and Wilcox as educators who most fully recognized the dependence of the college on the common school, he makes this plea for the eight overshadowed public schools: "Would the college raise the standard of scholarship? Raise the standard of elementary education. Would she gain more students? Elevate the common school. Would she extend her influence? Extend sympathy and aid to the common schools. The more good public schools there are the more minds will feel the kindling fire and gaze longingly toward the higher hills of science. The college must grow with the growth of popular knowledge. Franklin once said: "Take care of the dimes; the dollars will take care of themselves." Take care of the common schools and the colleges will take care of themselves.

ATTITUDE OF THE COLLEGE

That it was thought necessary to make such a plea as this to college men and to a college community seems strange; for one would naturally think that the common school was the child of the college, but history tells a different story. The two institutions had different origins, with little in common. Gov. Berkeley, who thanked God that there were no free schools in Virginia and hoped that there would be none for a hundred years to come, contributed to the founding of a college, William and Mary's, and that without any feeling of inconsistency. Happily, with the world's broader vision, all this is changed now, and colleges and universities are the friends of the public schools.

There were several causes operating to produce this hostility to public schools. In the first place, as Professor Churchill says, "Every man, woman and child came here to build up Knox college. They were more interested in this even than in founding the city. Whenever a child had learned to read, write and spell and was ready to study arithmetic and grammar he was entered in the preparatory department of the college. As a rule children entered the academy when they were ten years of age." Under these conditions the people did not feel the need of public schools and naturally enough they regarded them as a competitor to their favorite institution. Professor Churchill was warned time and again by some of the close friends of the college that he was injuring that institution and jeopardizing his own position by his activity in promoting public schools. Their fears were not altogether groundless. The year before the union graded schools were organized Knox academy enrolled over 350 students to 60 in the college department; the following year the enrollment was less than 150.

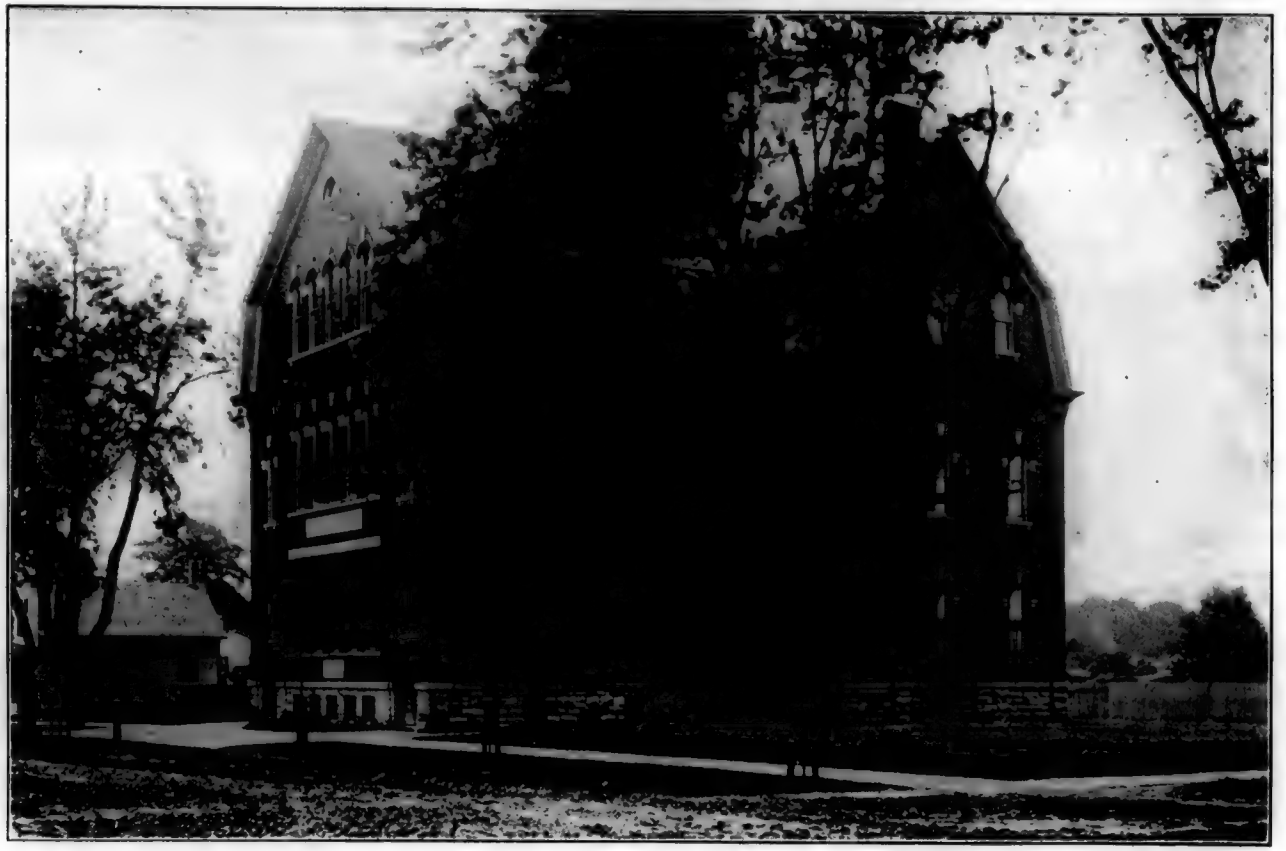
PRIVATE SCHOOLS



The income from the township fund being inadequate to furnish all the children what in those days was regarded as primary education, private schools, or select schools, as they preferred to call themselves, sprang up. Mrs. Geo. A. Tryon, who started such a school in 1856, told the writer that she could recall four others in the village at that time. For twenty years the people had to depend, to a great extent, upon these schools, and they were a power whose interests were antagonistic to free schools, that had to be reckoned with when it came to forming the free union graded schools. Even after the districts were united, such was the influence of these select schools and so strong was the feeling in their behalf that, in order to get the children to attend the new schools, it was necessary for the directors to incorporate, as it were, some of these schools into the new system of free public schools. Professor Churchill, who was one of the three directors that organized the union graded schools, is the authority for this statement. Mrs. Tryon had a private school of eighty pupils at that time, and she took fifty of them with her to the old post office building, and they were placed in the grammar department, without examination, of which she was made principal—an excellent person she was for this position, having had experience in graded schools in Ohio. Private schools of this type, or better designated as select schools, died hard, the last one not passing away until the late '80s.

JEALOUSY OF THE DISTRICTS

The fact that the city was divided into eight separate and independent districts, each with its rights, its interests, its jealousies, was another source of opposition. The reason this opposition alone did not prove to be insurmountable, was due to the poverty of the districts, they not having enough property to quarrel over.

CONDITIONS OPPOSED TO FREE SCHOOLS

These were the conditions that caused Galesburg to move slowly in forming a system of public education after the free school law was adopted in 1855; and the fact that it was a comparatively old settled community, with three to five thousand inhabitants, with its habits of thought and its local institutions formed and adjusted to a different state of things, would tend to retard any radical change. To satisfy the college, to placate the private schools, to quiet the fears of capital, and to convince the eight districts that the interests of each would be served better by one united district, was an undertaking of the first magnitude, compared to which any other event in the history of our schools is insignificant.

PROFESSOR CHURCHILL

It is perfectly evident that this movement could never have been successful without a great leader, a man with a vision, broad minded, progressive, patient, good-natured, forgetful of self, believing profoundly in education, and in closest sympathy with his fellowmen,—and that man was George Churchill. Others of course there were, who rendered noble service to the cause, but in every step taken to organize the union graded schools and to secure the present charter, he led the way. Professor George Churchill is as truly the founder of the public schools of Galesburg as the Rev. George W. Gale is the founder of the city. When the time comes, in the history of Galesburg, for erecting monuments to its great characters the first should have carved on it Rev. George W. Gale, Founder of the City, and the second should bear the name George Churchill, Founder of the Public Schools.

He was endowed by nature and qualified by training for the part he took in this great work. At ten years of age he came with his parents to Galesburg, in 1839,—three years after the first settlers. He attended the first public school taught in Galesburg, in the winter of 1840-41. He taught the same school in the winter of 1848-49, when a sophomore in college. After graduating from Knox college, he taught a year in Farmington. He then spent a year in Europe, devoting much of his time to the public schools of Germany,—especially the Frederick William Gymnasium, a graded school of four thousand students from seven to seventeen years of age. He said it was here that he first imbibed his enthusiasm for graded public schools. Full of this spirit he returned to Galesburg and took charge of Knox academy, in 1855,—the very year the free school law was passed. In the winter of this year, he attended the State Teachers' association at Bloomington. He met Dr. Bateman there and came home with fresh enthusiasm, and began writing articles for the Galesburg Free Democrat to show the advantages of graded schools and a consolidated district.

HENRY BARNARD

In December, 1856, he read a paper on German schools at the State Teachers' association in Chicago. Henry Barnard, who was present and heard this paper, at once became interested in the young man from Galesburg; and there was no man in this country, engaged in public school work, whose friendship could be so valuable to one in Professor Churchill's position, wrestling with the problem of organizing and grading a system of schools. Henry Barnard was the pioneer of educational journalism in America, and he had done for the schools of Connecticut what Horace Mann did for the schools of Massachusetts, —organized and graded them. Before the sessions of this meeting had adjourned, he promised Professor Churchill to aid him in getting men of recognized ability and great experience in organizing and grading schools, to come to Galesburg and conduct an educational campaign. Before returning home Professor Churchill, on the advice of Professor Barnard, engaged Mr. W. S. Baker, who had been one of Barnard's lieutenants in Connecticut for six weeks, agreeing to pay him one hundred dollars and his board.

W. B. BAKER

Mr. Baker began his six weeks' campaign in Galesburg in January, 1857. He would go to a school for a half day or more at a time and enthuse the teacher and pupils. Then he would visit the leading members of the district and explain to them the advantages of consolidation. Afternoon meetings were also held in the Old First church to which parents and children came, the church always being full, and Mr. Baker would address them on the benefits of a union graded school system.

HORACE MANN

In the following March, Horace Mann, the greatest educator America has produced, a most eloquent and irresistible speaker, was induced to come to Galesburg and deliver two lectures on free graded schools. These lectures were also delivered in the Old First church, and the result of them, following as they did, so closely the work of Mr. Baker, was a complete moral victory of consolidated districts and graded schools, though formal and official action was not taken till May or June, of the next year. Professor Churchill and Silas Willard paid the expenses of Mr. Baker and Horace Mann in this missionary campaign.

SILAS WILLARD

Another remarkable result of these lectures: Mr. Silas Willard, in the prime of life, perhaps the leading merchant of the city, dying at his home of tuberculosis, requested Horace Mann to call on him the morning after his second lecture, which he did in company with Prof. Churchill. At the close of this conference Mr. Willard said that he would provide in his will thirty thousand dollars for building a union graded school, and he thought he would donate two or three acres of ground on the northwest corner of Main and Chambers streets for the building site. The Galesburg Free Democrat of March 31st, 1857, closes an editorial with this sentence: "Silas Willard was buried in the old cemetery to-day and was followed to the grave by the largest concourse which ever turned out in Galesburg to honor the dead." Mr. Willard did provide in his will thirty thousand dollars for building a union graded school, but there is no record of the district receiving the money. Even if the city did not get the thirty thousand dollars it had the effect of stimulating the people to action, for in the Illinois Teacher of April, 1858, is this item: "Meetings of citizens of Galesburg have been held to initiate measures for the establishment of a system of union graded schools in that city and for obtaining the benefit of the bequest of the late Silas Willard." The school records do show that his widow did offer to give the land on the northwest corner of Main and Chambers streets for a building site for the new schoolhouse, but the board of education, for reasons not given in the records, purchased instead the lot on the southwest corner of Broad and Simmons streets. Why not name the next school building the Silas Willard school?

UNION GRADED SCHOOLS ADOPTED

This system came into being in May or June, 1858, and ceased to exist June 11, 1861, when the present system was organized. Apparently no attempt was made to grade the schools during the first year of this period. In fact the people did not seem anxious to conduct them according to the new system after it was adopted. There were several provisions in the law that made it undesirable, and they thought the best way to remedy these would be to secure a school charter from the legislature.

THE SCHOOL CHARTER

For this purpose a series of mass meetings was held in the early part of 1858. At one of these meetings a committee of fifteen was appointed to draft a charter to present to the legislature. On this committee were Dr. Skinner of Lombard and Judge Lanphere. Professor Churchill was made chairman of the committee. Judge Lanphere was made chairman of a sub-committee to draw up a charter and present it to the legislature.

TWO JOKERS IN THE CHARTER

There were two significant provisions inserted in the last section of the charter which were the means of delaying its going into operation for two years and seven months. The first of these provisos was, that the act shall not take effect or be in force unless the majority of the legal voters shall decide in its favor; the usual form would have been to require a majority of the votes cast at the election. The second proviso was, that the election for this purpose must be held at such a time and conducted in such a manner as the council of said city may direct. Both of these provisions were innocent looking, and they are customary in such instruments, but each contained a joker, showing the character of the opposition, which was composed of men who were always on the alert and especially skillful—the "standpatters" of those days, but, as it will be seen, they were fighting a losing cause.

ELECTION DENIED BY COUNCIL

Early in the spring of 1859 the friends of the charter or those, as the Free Democrat puts it, who wanted more than six months of school in a year for the children of the city, appealed to the city council to submit the adoption of the charter to a vote of the people, but it, in its wisdom, refused to call an election for that purpose.

SCHOOL DIRECTORS ELECTED

The friends of free graded schools having spent a year, since the consolidation of the districts, in trying to secure a charter that would give more liberal provisions for public schools than were contained in the union graded school act, and seeing no hope in the immediate future that the city council would allow a vote to be taken on the charter, determined to do the best that could be done with the law they had. An election for school directors for school district No. 1, comprising all the schools of the city, was held on the first Monday of September, 1859. This was the regular time for holding school elections in those days. George Churchill, A. B. Campbell and J. H. Knapp were nominated at a called meeting of the citizens held on the Saturday evening before. There were two hundred and fifty votes cast, and these men were elected by a majority of sixty-three votes.

UNION GRADED SCHOOLS ORGANIZED

The board of directors went to work immediately to organize a system of graded schools, free to all citizens of Galesburg between five and twenty-one years of age. The schools up to that time had been mixed schools, having the advanced scholars in the same room with those learning their A B C's; and the variety of text-books was said to be some less than the number of pupils. The first thing the board did was to grade the scholars according to advancement in studies into four departments: Primary, secondary, grammar and high school. Many scholars, it was said, had been educated in one branch and neglected in others; hence a regular course of study was outlined and uniform text-books were adopted.

UNION GRADED SCHOOLS OPENED

The primary and secondary schools were opened Monday, Sept. 19, 1859, in the eight schoolhouses that had come to the board by the consolidation of the districts. There were eight teachers in these schools, and 400 pupils were enrolled the first week and 639 during the year. The advanced departments, grammar and high school, were opened, Wednesday, Sept. 28, 1859, in rooms rented by the board. Three of these rooms were in the old post office building on South Broad street, opposite the Old First church. The board rented three other rooms this year, but where it is uncertain, probably two of them in the northwest corner of the square, the property of Mr. C. S. Colton, for the advanced departments, and the other perhaps, in an outlying section, for the elementary grades. The number of pupils enrolled during the year in the high school department was 60, and in the grammar department 160, making a total enrollment of 859 for the year in all departments. The number of teachers was fourteen, and they received $2,197.90 in salaries. The total cost of the schools for the year was $3,176.89.

tion for that purpose to be held on Saturday, June 30, 1860. The friends of the charter immediately inaugurated a campaign in its favor, but they were fearful of the result, for they labored under a great disadvantage, as they had to get all their voters to the polls on election day, whereas their opponents had only to remain away from the polls. The Free Democrat on the evening before the election said, editorially: "To-morrow (Saturday) has been set apart by our city fathers for a vote upon the new school charter. It will be noticed that a majority of all the legal voters must vote for it in order to make it a law. Its adoption will, therefore, require nearly 600 votes in its favor, and its friends will, no doubt, realize the necessity of untiring vigilance; every voter who stays at home practically votes against it." On election day there were cast 505 votes for the act and 55 votes against the act. The friends of the charter were satisfied and its opponents were silenced, as the majority was so decisive that any contest was out of the question, the highest number of votes cast at the last election being 629. The city council accordingly, on July 3, 1860, having canvassed the votes as above, declared the school charter legally adopted and a part of the law of the city. This was in July, 1860; but the schools were not organized under the charter until September, 1861. The explanation of this is, that the charter provides for the election of directors on the first Monday in June; hence, a board of education could not be elected until June, 1861.

LAST YEAR OF UNION GRADED SCHOOLS

There was nothing to do but to continue the union graded schools for another year, which was done, with R. B. Guild as superintendent of instruction and seventeen lady assistants, being an increase of four teachers over the previous year. A complete roster of these teachers may be found in Root's Galesburg city directory for the year 1861, a copy of which is in the public library. There were nine buildings for the primary and secondary schools, with twelve teachers. The central school, for the grammar and high school departments, was held this year on the west side of the square with five teachers, in rooms rented from Mr. C. S. Colton. There was a special teacher of penmanship; the German language and the rudiments of vocal music were taught; declamations and compositions were required weekly; and a teachers' class was formed in the fall and spring for the especial benefit of those wishing to teach. With this year the union graded school system, originally the ideal system of public schools, came to an end, having been in operation only two years; but a stronger, better and more complete system took its place—the present one, which came into existence on the first Monday of June, 1861, by the election of the board of education of the Galesburg school district.

ADVANTAGES OF A CHARTER

The provision of the charter that makes the treasurer and clerk of the city, ex-officio treasurer and clerk of the board of education has, in a large measure, preserved the schools in the past from political domination, by taking away the "sinews" of political warfare. If the board appointed its own treasurer, as it would do under the general law, then all the banks and their officials would be interested in the membership of the board, not for the good of the schools, particularly, but for their own benefit, as the school fund is one of the best deposits. If it appointed its own clerk, as it would do under the general law, then the politician for revenue would be interested in who is elected to the board, for that office is good for a salary of a thousand to fifteen hundred dollars, under political management. As it is, there is nothing in the management of the schools by the board of education, organized under the charter, to call forth the legitimate interest of any one, except the welfare of the schools alone.

The provision that empowers the board to locate the school buildings without submitting each to a vote of the people as it would be required to do under the general law, has saved the schools, and the city too, from much bitter and needless strife. Nothing so paralyzes the efficiency of a school as the warring of antagonistic interests in its administration.

THE LAST BATTLE FOR FREE SCHOOLS

At the third meeting of the board of education, held on July 9, 1861, the last move in the battle against free schools, that had been so persistently and ably waged since 1855, was begun. In a section of the charter, which declares that the schools shall be free, follows this clause, "or upon the payment of such rates of tuition as the board shall prescribe." All the facts in the history of the case being considered, this looks very much like another joker. In accordance with this provision the following resolution was introduced: "Resolved, That all student residents attending the Central school shall pay the sum of fifty cents per quarter tuition, and all attending other schools shall pay twenty-five cents per quarter, all to be paid in advance." Both the wording and the spirit of this resolution are an echo from a past age. On motion of Mr. Clement Leach, the member from the Fifth ward, it was laid on the table until the next meeting. At the next meeting, July 15th, the motion was taken up for consideration and after a full discussion, the vote was finally called, and it stood three yeas and three nays. Hon. Alfred Knowles, who was then mayor of the city, was presiding, and it fell to him to cast the deciding vote, which he did, on the side of the negative, in favor of free schools. Thus Mr. Knowles had the honor of firing the last shot in the battle for free schools, and, because he fired it in the right direction, his name will never be allowed to die.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS

The most serious problem that confronted the board of education when it was first organized under the present charter in June, 1861, was the providing of schoolhouses. Galesburg was then a city of about six thousand inhabitants with more than eight hundred pupils enrolled in its schools. It practically had no school buildings. It is true that the district owned six or eight one-room schoolhouses, but they were built in the days of the independent school districts and were now unfit for school purposes. One of the chief reasons for consolidating the districts in 1858, was to enable the people the better to provide themselves with suitable school buildings. Thus it is seen that the board of education was required not merely to make provision for the natural growth of the city, as the people of today are called upon to do, but to provide at once school buildings for a city with a population of six thousand.

It was not, however, until the first of January, 1867, that the first building was completed and ready for occupancy. It was then called the high school; it is today known as the Churchill school. The completion of this building was the fulfillment of the dream of the independent districts when they voted to unite in 1858. It was an imposing building for that day, comparing favorably with Knox college on the south and Lombard university on the east and costing about the same as each of these institutions dedicated to higher education. Its erection may rightly be considered as one of the great events in the history of Galesburg, since it caused the common schools to be recognized as one of the public and important institutions of the city. It was a credit and an ornament to the city. The State Teachers' association showed its appreciation of what had been done in Galesburg for public education by holding its annual meeting of 1867, in the new building.

The completion of this building was the first great event in the history of the schools after the adoption of the charter, and, strange to say, it precipitated the first and most serious crisis the schools have yet met. The plant had cost approximately sixty thousand dollars and that was too much for a community that had but recently been converted to the free school system. At the annual school election of that year when the board of education asked for the power to issue more bonds with which to build two new schoolhouses, the people arose and administered to it a crushing defeat. The whole trend of school affairs was changed by it. New schoolhouses were thereafter reluctantly built and they were cheaply constructed; the board, when it attempted to levy a tax for a new building became involved in a suit with the city council; it escaped an injunction only by resorting to a species of sharp practice; and factions ruled the board for a decade and a half. It has been only within recent years that the blighting effects of this blow have not been felt.

The second great event in the history of the schools was the building of the present high school building which may be justly regarded as the pride of the city. It should be remembered that the importance of the high school in public education was not then so generally recognized as it is today. At that time no city in the state had erected a really fine and modern building for its high school. There was one such building in Joliet, but it was a township high school. The high school was still generally regarded as merely a college preparatory school and did not appeal strongly to the people as their school. When one of the larger cities of Illinois today builds a high school, it makes it the finest public building in the city. It was not so when the present Galesburg high school was built. That building was the pioneer of high school buildings in the state. The board and the people have since had reason to congratulate themselves on having had a vision and rising to it.

The mere building of a schoolhouse is not a great event in a school system, except as it embodies a deep conviction of the people, and this is just what the building of the Churchill school, in 1866, and the high school, in 1906, did, the former giving expression to the belief of the people in a system of free elementary education for all and the latter their conviction that all the children of all the people should be given an opportunity to prepare themselves for life as well as for some of the children of some of the people for college.

Mr. R. B. Guild was superintendent of schools the first year, from June, 1861 to June, 1862. There was a corps of sixteen teachers and the number of pupils enrolled was probably as many as eight hundred. No records for this year are preserved.

In June, 1862, Mr. J. B. Roberts was appointed superintendent of schools and served twelve years, or until June, 1874. During these years the enrollment of pupils increased to 2,268 and the number of teachers to thirty. Mr. Roberts' administration may properly be regarded as the period of organization. It was a period full of educational activity and progress. It was noted, also, for the number of experiments tried. There was the colored school, the German school, the ungraded school for truants and incorrigibles, the night school, the teaching of elementary geometry in the last three years of the graded schools, and the ordering of gymnastic apparatus for the playgrounds of the two new schools. These experiments were all finally dropped; none of them has been reinstated, and most of them have been completely forgotten. Then there was supplementary reading, bookkeeping and mechanical drawing in the high school, free-hand drawing in the grades, and music, which may properly be included in this list. These, also, were tried and dropped, but in later years introduced into the schools as important features of modern education. Those who are advocating a special school for the truant and the incorrigible of these degenerate days will be surprised to find that in those good old times of forty years ago and more, there were truants and incorrigibles and a separate school provided for them by the board of education. The teaching of the elements of geometry in the grades, partially anticipated the popular plea of President Eliot and others, made thirty years later, for enriching the curriculum by bringing the elements of some of the high school studies into the grades. The resolution of the board of education ordering the playgrounds of the high school and the Fourth ward to be provided with gymnastic apparatus, preceded by a third of a century the movement that is now sweeping over the country to establish public playgrounds and to equip them with physical apparatus. In those days there were surely plenty of fads—"fad" being a generic term for anything new. All honor to those times for what was so courageously attempted as well as for what was so nobly done.

Mr. Roberts resigned in the summer of 1874, to accept the principalship of the Indianapolis high school and Mr. Matthew Andrews, who was then superintendent of schools at Macomb, Illinois, was appointed in his place.

After a period of active organization involving an unusual expenditure of money, such as the last period had been, would naturally come one of more or less reaction and retrenchment. This is a law of institutional growth and it is well illustrated in at least the first half of this period. There were two other causes that contributed to the general movement, either of which alone would have been sufficient to bring about a reaction. When Professor George Churchill retired from the board of education in June, 1873, and Mr. J. B. Roberts from the superintendency a year later, the management of the schools passed completely into the control, as it were, of another generation. There was then no one left in the management of the schools who thoroughly understood their organization and who could, consequently, be in special sympathy with it. This was the first of the contributory causes. The second was the financial panic that swept over the country at that time, paralyzing business and institutions of all kinds. The people of those days did not seem to be conscious that their actions were being guided and controlled by such deep-rooted and inexorable forces, but they were inclined rather to attribute the trend of affairs to the natural perversity of the individuals who were in control. The conditions made retrenchment imperative and it is not strange that under the circumstances cheapness became the chief consideration in the management of the schools. The course of study was pruned, all special subjects were lopped off, special teachers dropped, and all salaries greatly reduced; every schoolhouse built cost less than the preceding one; the same was true of the furniture purchased, and the amount expended on repairs was practically nothing. The policy of economy continued until the tax levy was reduced almost one-half. All this could not be done without much friction, which was manifested in the meetings of the board and at the school elections. In those years the people took a lively interest in school elections, at one or two of which more votes were polled than at the municipal elections. About the beginning of the second half of this period affairs began to improve and by the time it closed the schools were in good condition, having made substantial improvements, especially in regularity and punctuality of attendance.

The number of pupils registered during this period of eleven years remained about the same from year to year. The whole number enrolled for the first year was 2,196 and the number for the last year was 2,112, a decrease of eighty-four pupils. There would have been a slight gain had not the Catholics opened their parochial school, St. Joseph's academy, in the fall of 1879, which caused a decrease in the enrollment for that year of 226.

The number of teachers the first year was twenty-eight, and the number the last year (not including the special teacher of penmanship) was thirty-six, which made an increase of eight teachers. It is thus seen that the number of teachers was increased twenty-eight per cent, while the number of pupils actually decreased some three per cent, which means that the number of pupils to a teacher was decreased in this period, on an average, twenty-five per cent. Of the eight teachers added, five were placed in the north part of the city.

When Mr. Andrews resigned the superintendency in June, 1885, it was with the sincere regret of the board of education and the people generally. In July, 1885, Mr. W. L. Steele, then county superintendent of schools for Knox county, was appointed superintendent. Mr. Steele has continued to hold that position to the present time.

The schools having passed through the period of organization and the reactionary years that followed, now entered on one most favorable to their steady growth and development. During these twenty-six years the board of education pursued a policy that received the support of the people, for its membership, with one exception, remained unchanged save by death, resignation or removal from the city. Under these conditions whatever plans the board may have had it could mature and carry through to completion, an ideal state of affairs and one usually calculated to produce the best results.

Without attempting to enumerate all the changes, those that gave character to the period and that will perhaps remain a permanent part of the schools are here named. While all the buildings save one have been erected, enlarged or remodeled, at a cost of approximately four hundred thousand dollars, the high school and the heating plant were its chief addition to the physical equipment. The installation of sanitary closets in place of the unhealthful and demoralizing out-houses, mechanical ventilation, automatic temperature control, the method of admitting light into the schoolrooms, the drinking fountains and the school nurse, were its contribution to sanitation. No serious attention was paid to sanitation in the schools prior to 1888. The introduction of music, drawing, physical training, manual training and domestic science came in this period; as also supplementary reading, the removal of the fetish of examinations, and the articulation of the schools with the public library by means of the children's reading room. During this period also the average monthly enrollment of pupils to a room was reduced from forty-eight, in 1885, to forty-one, in 1910, or more than fourteen per cent; the maximum salary in the grades was raised from $55 to $70 per month, or more than twenty-seven per cent; and a training school for teachers was established. The inauguration of the elective system and the development of the high school into an institution adapted to the needs of the many who wish to prepare themselves for the manual, mechanical and commercial pursuits of life, as well as to the relatively few who desire to prepare for college, was the most distinctive work of the period. The board of education may not at times have moved as fast as it might have done or accomplished all it was possible to do; twenty-six years is a long time. It had the satisfaction, however, of always moving forward without ever being halted or reversed by the people; every step in advance was followed by another; the last building to be erected was always the best.

The number of pupils increased during this period to 3,814 and the number of teachers to 101.

KNOX COLLEGE

By Prof. Wm. E. Simonds

Among the colleges of Illinois, Knox college ranks fourth in point of age, having received its charter from the state in 1837. Shurtleff, Illinois college and McKendree were all chartered in 1835, although instruction was begun at Shurtleff in 1831, at Illinois college in 1829 and at McKendree in 1828. The early history of Knox college is identified with that of the city in which it stands, for both city and college were the realization of one idea.

In 1827 Rev. George W. Gale established a school upon a fertile farm adjoining the village of Whitesboro, three miles from the city of Utica, New York. Here he remained for seven years, erecting buildings for instruction, for lodging and for manual labor. The course of study was made equivalent to a college course. Of the teachers whom he associated with him, two, Innes Grant and Nehemiah Losey, were afterward members of the Knox college faculty. The peculiar feature of Mr. Gale's idea was this: He believed that in a college located on a farm and with workshops attached young men could secure their education and at the same time be self-supporting. All should be required to labor on the farm or in the shops three hours a day. Thus they could provide the means of support and secure the exercise essential to their health and yet have sufficient time for study and recitation. Upwards of a hundred students attended the school during this period. Those who had trades were put to work in the shops; they paid their board, which was charged at cost, and received the proceeds of their labor. Some were able to pay their entire expenses by their work. The rest were told off into classes of half a dozen, each under direction of one of their number called a monitor, and set at work on the farm or at market gardening. A farm superintendent arranged the work in concert with the monitors. The boarding establishment was supported from the profits of the farm and labor of the students without a deficit. The funds necessary to establish the institution and the professorships were contributed by benevolent persons living in the vicinity who had confidence in the management and appreciated the design. Such was Oneida institute in 1834, when Mr. Gale resigned his connection with it. These facts are preserved in a sketch of the founder by his son, William Selden Gale, from whose narrative they are taken. From this statement we see how the idea that was embodied in the Knox Manual Labor college was conceived.

In the cheap government land of the fertile central west, then to be purchased at one dollar and a quarter per acre, Mr. Gale saw a great opportunity for the development of his idea on a larger scale. He would buy a township of land, reserve a town site and a large farm for the use of the college, then he would lay off the remainder of the land in farms, place on the land a price averaging five dollars an acre and with the proceeds of the farms and the town lots endow the college. The project met with favor and subscribers to the plan were found. In 1835 the committee appointed to make the purchase came to Illinois, inspected the land available and completed the bargain. Returning to Whitesboro, the purchase was reported, a plat of the land was made, the village and farm reservation marked, an appraisal of from three to eight dollars an acre placed on each tract and the distribution made.

January 7, 1836, in the old academy building in Whitesboro (now Whitestown), New York, the original circular which led directly to the founding of Galesburg and of Knox college was adopted. This circular clearly indicates the serious moral purpose in the minds of the founders. Their plan comprehended something very different from a mere investment in western land for personal profit, and something, too, broader and deeper than merely the experiment of establishing such a school. Their enterprise was inspired by a definite missionary purpose and was characterized by religious zeal—although the material advantages to follow were by no means lost sight of. Rehearsing the obligations imposed on Christian people to devise and execute plans for the promotion of religion throughout the world and to provide for that purpose an educated and devoted ministry, the circular proceeds to show the advantages of the manual labor system as furnishing the opportunity to secure an education by "hundreds of youth of talent and piety and enterprise (who) stand ready to enter upon the work of preparation whenever a 'wide and effectual door is opened' for them." The following paragraph, the phraseology of which strikes oddly on the modern ear, is of interest as indicating the thought of the founders regarding the education of women:

"It is beginning to be believed, and not without good reason, that females are to act a much more important part in the conversion of the world than has been generally supposed; not as preachers of the gospel, but as helpmeets of those who are, and as instructors and guides of the rising generations, not only in the nursery, but in the public school. It should therefore be an object of special aim with all who pray and labor for the conversion of the world to provide for the thorough and well-directed education of females. Experiment has already proved that manual labor may be successfully introduced into female seminaries, and that it is highly conducive to health and piety and adapted to reduce the expenses of education sufficiently to encourage many young ladies to qualify themselves in such seminaries for fields of usefulness, who, without that encouragement, would never have put forth such efforts."

The circular closes with these sagacious words: "It is perfectly in the power of a few families of moderate property to rear up such institutions, at this time, in the valley of the Mississippi, on a permanent basis, with a great part of the endowment required and on a liberal and extensive scale with a great advantage to themselves and families. Such a plan is here proposed, with the design, if it may please the Lord, to carry it into effect."

There were forty-six subscribers to the plan. They voted that the proposed institution should receive the name Prairie college, but as this name was afterward thought not properly distinctive it was changed to Knox Manual Labor college; and it was under that title that the new institution was incorporated in 1837. There was a twofold appropriateness in thus adopting the name of Knox, for it would designate the location of the school and would also immediately suggest the relation of the founders to Presbyterianism—although not especially selected on that account.

Five of the original colonists were named as incorporators; these were George W. Gale, John Waters, Nehemiah West, Thomas Simmons and Nehemiah H. Losey. To these were added Matthew Chambers and Erastus Swift, of the Vermont accession, Parnach Owen and John G. Sanborn of Knoxville, George H. Wright, a Monmouth physician, and Ralph H. Hurlburt, a leading merchant and landholder at Mount Sterling; these two gentlemen were former residents of Oneida county, N. Y. The first meeting of the trustees was held in Knoxville, August 9, 1837. The board organized with Rev. John Waters, president; Nehemiah H. Losey, clerk, and John G. Sanborn, treasurer. By the terms of the charter the board was made self-perpetuating, with power to increase the number to twenty-four in addition to the president of the college, ex-officio a member. William Holyoke, Peter Butler and Sylvanus Ferris were at this time added. It was voted by the newly organized board to erect an academy building as soon as possible. In order to make a college it was necessary to prepare material to fill it.

By the fall of 1838 the academy was ready for students and the formal opening took place. There were forty pupils. This building stood on the northeast corner of Main and Cherry streets and was afterward moved a few rods to the north, where, at this date, it still stands, in use as a boarding-house. Nehemiah H. Losey, who, since the spring of 1837, had conducted a school at the temporary settlement of Log City, was the principal and Hiram Marsh was his assistant. It was not until 1841 that the college was fully organized. Rev. Hiram H. Kellogg was its first president. The faculty included Rev. George W. Gale, professor of belles lettres and acting-professor of ancient languages, with Nehemiah H. Losey, professor of mathematics. In the following year Innes Grant was added as professor of languages. The first catalogue, published in 1842, names ten freshmen and 147 preparatory students. The preparatory department in the college must be distinguished from the academy, which was a separate institution.

In 1841 a ladies' seminary had been built on Seminary street, opposite the beginning of Tompkins street, at a cost of $5,000. This building was destroyed by fire in 1843. The household effects and library of President Kellogg had been stored in the building for some time, and it had also furnished lodging for a number of the students. Its destruction at this time led directly to the erection of the first building on the Knox campus, a brick building of moderate size, afterward enlarged, known as East college. This was built in 1844; it remained, in a rather dilapidated condition at the last, until torn down in 1900. In the following year a companion structure, named West college, was built on the Cedar street side of the campus. It was afterward given the name of Williston hall; it remained standing until its removal became necessary in 1890. The old distinctive names of these two earlier buildings had passed from use long before their demolition, and they were popularly known as the "East Bricks" and the "West Bricks"—designations which not inaptly emphasized the contrast between them and later more pretentious structures. They, however, served well their generation. Not only did they contain recitation rooms, offices and society halls, they also supplied quarters for about forty students. Apparently the young ladies, dispossessed of their quarters by the burning of the seminary, sought shelter elsewhere. In 1846 a new academy building was erected on the public square. It was a substantial brick structure of two stories, the upper story, according to the annual catalogue, being "appropriated to the female branch." For the next twelve years it continued to serve this purpose and then was leased to the recently organized board of education, to be used for the new high school. The academy was then transferred to the new college building, and the "female branch" was transplanted to the seminary, where it has flourished ever since. The academy building was afterward demolished to make room for the Union hotel. In 1843 there were 175 students in the college. On account of failing health, President Kellogg resigned in 1845, and Rev. Jonathan Blanchard was chosen his successor. There were 201 students then enrolled.

The period of President Blanchard's administration forms an important epoch in the history of the college. During this period the foundations were strengthened, the enterprise took on the aspect of permanent success; and then there came a crisis in the affairs of the institution which, for a time, threatened disaster. In June, 1846, the first class was graduated. Of its nine members five entered the ministry, two of whom became missionaries; one became a lawyer, one a physician, one an editor and one a professor of mathematics. The material growth of the college was noteworthy.

Mr. J. P. Williston of Northampton, Mass., who through the influence of President Blanchard had become interested in the college, had given it in successive donations about $10,000. Another liberal benefactor of the college in this early period of its history was Mr. Charles Phelps of Cincinnati, a relative of President Blanchard, who, in 1853, turned over to the trustees the titles to eighteen quarter sections of Illinois land, at an estimated value of $30,000. The names of these philanthropists and their notable gifts should not be forgotten in the annals of the institution.

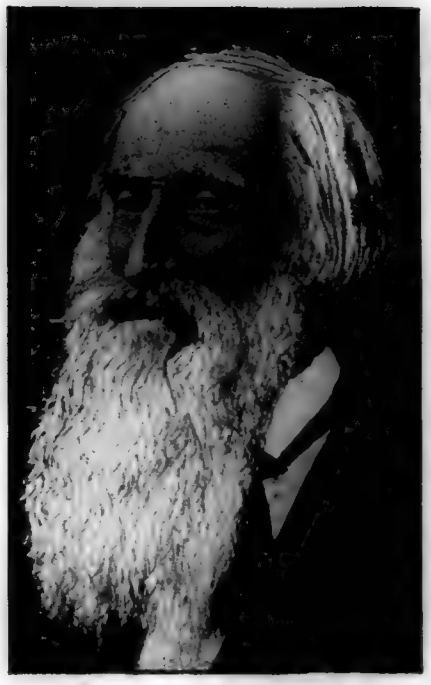
During the college year of 1849-50 the question of admitting women to collegiate courses in the institution was evidently settled in their favor. With the sanction of the executive committee a special department was conducted for their benefit and additional teachers were employed. The names of fourteen young women are listed in the catalogue published at the close of that year as members of this department, and the records of the trustees show that in June, 1850, they voted that a female collegiate department should be organized with a three years' course of study. The school year was to begin regularly on the first Wednesday in February and to terminate on the third Wednesday in January. But the principle of co-education had not yet been adopted. In January, 1851, three young women were graduated from this department—the first Knox alumnae.

The advent of the railroad in 1854 greatly enlarged the resources of the college. A part of its land was selected as the site of depots, shops and yards, and the valuation of adjoining property increased accordingly. There was a ready sale for the city lots and the farm was sold advantageously. It had become evident long before this that the manual labor feature of the original plan, although successful at the school in Whitesboro, was impracticable under college management in Galesburg, and it had been abandoned. The name, Knox Manual Labor college, having now become misleading, the phrase manual labor was, on petition of the trustees, in 1857, stricken from the title by act of legislature. It was estimated in 1855 that the property of the college was worth $400,000. In 1856 two important buildings were begun, and in the following year these were completed at a cost of nearly $100,000. The central college building, as it was then called, now affectionately known as Old Main, a splendid example of the Tudor Gothic style, thus found its place on the campus between East college and Williston hall. The other building, known as the seminary, stood on Tompkins street—and still stands, the central portion of Whiting hall. It accommodated between eighty and ninety young women. This was not the first building provided for the use of the female collegiate department; an earlier seminary had been built, at a cost of $5,000, in 1841, which was burned in 1843. There had been a steady increase in the attendance, which in 1857 reached 446, counting all departments; of these fifty-one were in the college classes. The growth of the town had been very notable. The following figures are significant:

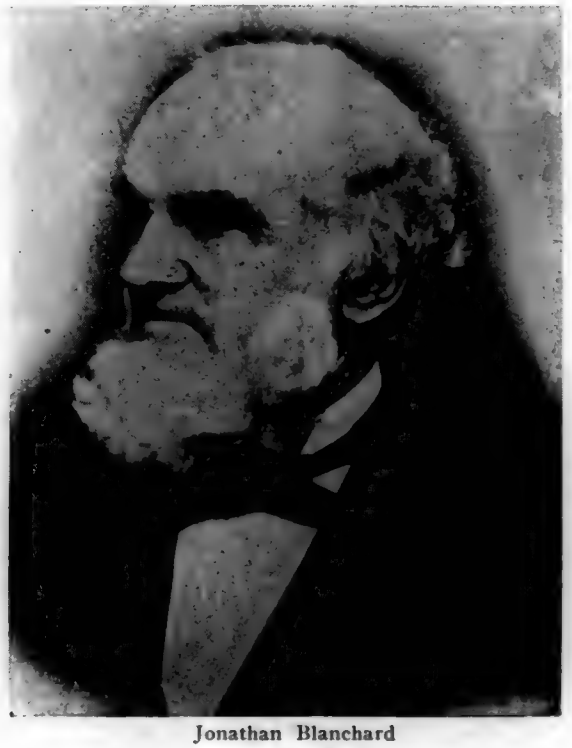
In 1840 the population was 272 (thirty-nine families).

In 1850 the population was less than 800.



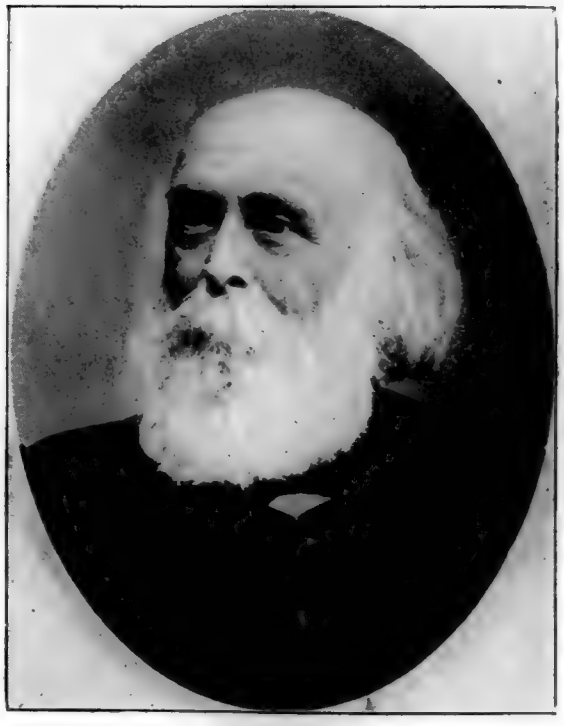
In 1853 the population was less than 1,400.

In 1855 the population was 2,916.



In 1857 the population was 5,455.

In 1856 there were 304 new buildings raised with a combined valuation of $551,060; most of the dwellings costing from $3,000 to $12,000 each. As many more were built in 1857.



Notwithstanding the financial prosperity of the college at this point in its history, a serious crisis now occurred. A bitter controversy had already developed over the question of denominational control. Presbyterians and Congregationalists had been intimately associated in the social and religious life of the community. For more than a decade they had worshipped harmoniously together in that broadly built and spacious meeting house on the square, the historic First church of Galesburg. The official head of the college had served at times as minister to the congregation. President Kellogg had been installed as pastor in 1846 and Doctor Blanchard had followed him in the pulpit when he succeeded him in the presidency, serving the church thus for two years. But with the expansion of the community jealousies had arisen and the quarrel grew so fierce that it threatened to disrupt the college. This is the period of what has been sometimes called "the Blanchard war." Jonathan Blanchard was a man of strong convictions, combative and fearless. During his pastorate in Cincinnati he had been a vigorous and outspoken abolitionist. After his removal to Illinois he had dared to meet Stephen A. Douglas in public debate and was thought by his friends to have issued from that encounter with the honors of the field. His position on the great issue of the time could not have been obnoxious in Galesburg, but his views on other matters had aroused strong opposition among some of the prominent citizens; at the same time he had a large and ardent following. The core of the quarrel was the denominational issue in Knox college, and the two parties, the Presbyterians headed by Rev. George W. Gale and the Congregationalists led by President Blanchard, were intensely stirred.

FOUR PRESIDENTS OF KNOX COLLEGE

The situation became acute and at its annual meeting in June, 1857, the board of trustees, by resolution, respectfully requested both Doctor Blanchard and Mr. Gale to resign their places on the faculty. Both gentlemen immediately complied. When this action was announced there was great excitement. The student body, which was devoted to President Blanchard, assembled on the steps of the college building and passed resolutions of regret at his departure. Many of the undergraduates asked for dismission. The Adelphi and Gnothautii literary societies disbanded, placing their effects in the hands of trustees. Only one of the ten members of the graduating class appeared on the commencement platform to deliver his address. The "war" continued for many weeks in pulpit, on platform and in the columns of the local press. It became more than a local issue; letters discussing the situation appeared in the Congregationalist Herald and in the New York Independent. Some prominent people were drawn into the controversy. Pamphlets were printed and tables compiled to show what financial support had been given the institution by the two denominations. As late as in May, 1859, the general association of the Congregational church in Illinois adopted and printed a report reflecting severely on Knox college and the Presbyterians. Into the merits of this controversy it is altogether unnecessary to go; for many years it has been a matter of ancient history and all bitterness of feeling has long since vanished. The final result was that Knox college was made independent of all denominational control and, happily, thus remains to this day.

August 21, 1857, the executive committee published "a circular to the students of Knox college in the different departments." It began and closed with the following statements:

"The executive committee are happy to inform you that the causes which led many of you to withdraw from this institution are now so far removed as to present no serious obstacle to your return. President Blanchard has consented to resume his former place in the faculty, by invitation of the executive committee, and the place of Prof. Gale will be filled by an experienced and successful teacher.

"It is with peculiar pleasure that we announce these arrangements (for boarding, lodging, etc.), which indicate the continued and increasing prosperity of our college. It has been a favored institution. But the means of its usefulness are now greatly augmented. The trustees have the ability and disposition to add something to its educational advantages every year, until they are complete in every department. Let the friends of the college implore for it the favor of God, and we trust that our past troubles will furnish a lesson of wisdom for our guidance, until those very troubles shall be forgotten in the joy of our future prosperity and success."

In the spring of the following year, 1858, Rev. Harvey Curtis, D. D., was elected president by the trustees. The catalogue of the college published in June, 1858, presents some facts which are interesting for comparison. The faculty was composed as follows: Rev. Harvey Curtis, president-elect and professor of intellectual philosophy; Nehemiah H. Losey, professor of mathematics and natural philosophy; Innes Grant, professor of ancient languages; Henry E. Hitchcock, professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in the female collegiate department; Albert Hurd, professor of natural sciences; E. S. Willcox Phelps professor of modern languages; Junius B. Roberts, tutor; George Churchill, principal of the academic department; Miss Jane Everett, principal in the female collegiate department; Miss Ada H. Hayes, lady principal in the academic department; Miss E. L. Gary, Miss Mary Allen West, Mrs. Sara M. McCall, assistants in the academic department; Miss E. S. Kendall, teacher of drawing and painting; Miss Jennie W. Sweetland, teacher of the piano. The chair of philosophy was filled during this year by Ex-President Blanchard and that of moral philosophy and belles-lettres, by Rev. J. W. Bailey, pastor of the Presbyterian church. The roll of students was: in the college, 109; in the female collegiate department, 60; in the academic department, gentlemen, 167; ladies, 158. Deducting names appearing more than once, there were altogether in the institution 455 students.

The requirements for admission to the college were such as were then standard in American colleges and were confined to Latin (Ovid, Caesar, Sallust), Greek (Anabasis), mathematics (elementary algebra) and geography. No one under fourteen years of age could be admitted to the freshman class. Prescribed courses in Latin, Greek and mathematics ran through the first three years; rhetoric was studied in the second half of the freshman year; logic, anatomy, physiology, zoology and botany were taken in the sophomore year; chemistry, mineralogy, astronomy and German, in the junior year. The senior year included courses in intellectual philosophy, plan of salvation, political economy, Paley's Natural Theology, geology, German or French, psychology, Butler's Analogy, British Eloquence, Shepherd On the Constitution, moral philosophy, Paley's Evidences, composition and declamation. It was a well-rounded course of study and, for its time, supplied admirably the requirements of a "liberal education." In the curriculum of the female collegiate department this course was somewhat diluted. There was no Greek; there was a year and a half of Latin; the mathematics, however, included about what was required in the college. There was a course in universal history and one in English literature.

The college library contained between two and three thousand volumes; the mineralogical and geological cabinets had about five hundred specimens each, the beginnings of that remarkable museum of natural history collected by the patient effort of Professor Hurd. Special attention is called in the catalogue to the fact that an excellent skeleton has also been obtained for the illustration of anatomy. It is also announced that the first half hour of each day is appropriated to devotional exercises and to lectures by the president on various moral and religious subjects, on which as well as on the worship of God on the Sabbath, all the members of the institution are expected to attend. The chapel talks instituted by Doctor Blanchard were remarkable examples of the versatility, intellectual power and moral purpose of that president; they produced a lasting impression on the students of that generation and became a tradition of the college.

The college year was divided in two terms of twenty weeks each; there was a vacation of two weeks in the winter and one of ten weeks in the summer. College opened on the first Thursday in September, "at eight-thirty A. M." The female collegiate department had its commencement regularly in January; the college commencement occurred on the fourth Thursday in June. Tuition in the college and the seminary was $20 per annum; in the academy it was from $12 to $16. All students paid a fee of $2 for contingent expenses. Board, room and fuel in the seminary cost $100 and $5 was charged for the use of furniture. Room rent in the college buildings was $6. Board in the college boarding-house varied from $1.50 to $2 per week; in private families board could be had at from $2 to $2.50.

This year of 1858 was distinguished in the history of the time as the year of the great public debates between Stephen A. Douglas and Abraham Lincoln, when the momentous question of slavery then agitating the entire country was discussed by Lincoln and Douglas, both men being candidates for election to the United States senate. These debates were held in seven of the important towns of Illinois; the fifth in the series took place at Galesburg, on Knox college campus, October 7. Thousands attended. It was a great day for Galesburg and the college, and one of the most spectacular events in their history. A huge banner emblazoned with the motto "Knox College for Lincoln" was stretched across the east wall of the main college building, just over the platform occupied by the debaters. In 1860 Knox college conferred on Mr. Lincoln the degree of LL. D., and was thus the first educational institution to bestow academic honors on this great citizen of Illinois.

With the outbreak of the civil war the attendance of students was greatly diminished. The catalogue of 1861-62 shows but forty-eight names of young men, and of these five are designated as "gone to the war." George Gregory Foster, of Newark, Wis., is starred as "killed at Fredericktown." Mulford E. Dunham, of Bushnell, as "killed at Fort Donelson." There were twenty-four young women in the seminary and one hundred students in the academy a total of 172, as contrasted with 455 in 1858. In the following year, 1862-63, for some reason the college did not publish a catalogue, but one was published by the literary societies which gives the entire attendance as 163. In 1863-64 we find 39 men in the college and 94 in the academy; seven of the academy boys are registered in the United States army, and two in the navy. There were 129 young women in their department, making a total of 262. The next year there were but 32 men in the college and 98 in the academy, the number of young women, however, had increased to 140, making the total number of students 270. At the end of the catalogue for this year, (1864-65) is printed a list "of the graduates and students of Knox college, who have been or are now in the United States military or naval service." This list does not include the names of academy students "because unfortunately their names have not been preserved." Over the list of names is printed the motto: "Honor to Whom Honor." All classes from that of 1861 to that of 1868 are represented here, the class of 1864 providing eleven names, that of 1865, twelve; there are in all fifty names, including one adjutant, two majors, one lieutenant-colonel, one captain, ten lieutenants, and four sergeants. Four men were killed or died in the service: G. G. Foster, '62; W. D. Latimer, '63; J. W. Shields, '63; M. E. Dunham, '65. In a statistical paper prepared in 1866 by Rev. Frederic T. Perkins, pastor of the First church, the statement is made that Knox college furnished to the Union army two brevet-brigadier generals and forty-five officers and privates.

President Harvey Curtis died in the spring of 1863. On commencement day, June 25, Rev. William S. Curtis, D. D., was inaugurated as his successor. The new president took as the theme of his address "The American College." In discussing the relation of the college to politics he described the dangers of popular ignorance and passion, and the intense love of power in political leaders.

"What a sea have we spread out before us, susceptible to every wind that blows, and what elements of storm are ever ready to visit it. The ship of state must ride upon this sea. * * * Its sails are liable to be torn; its masts cut away; its helm may pass into the hands of unskillful pilots; its crew may become mutinous and arrayed in hostile factions one against another, as painful events are now teaching us."

This is the only reference in this address, the tone of which is purely academic, to the exciting period through which the nation was passing.

Five years later the finances of the college had fallen into a critical state. To meet current expenses the college land had been disposed of without thought of future values or of the necessity of preserving the productive endowment on which the security of the institution must inevitably depend. Although the location of railroad property on land purchased from the college twelve years before had greatly increased the value of its holdings, a proportionate increase had taken place in the expenditures for buildings, equipment and salaries. The income from tuition had been abnormally decreased, not only through the effect of the war in diminishing attendance, but also owing to the fact that a large proportion of the students were on free scholarships which had been given to each original purchaser of a lot at the founding of the town, and which were effective for twenty-five years. It was felt that an appeal must be made to the public; and it was proposed that the trustees should secure a head for the institution whose influence in this direction would be recognized. Rev. John P. Gulliver, D. D., pastor of a prominent Congregational church in Chicago, was selected for the position and accepted the presidency. He was noted for his brilliant talent in pulpit and on platform, and it was thought that students would be attracted to the college by his reputation. President Gulliver remained at Knox

Although the location of railroad property on land purchased from the college twelve years before had greatly increased the value of its holdings, a proportionate increase had taken place in the expenditures for buildings, equipment and salaries. The income from tuition had been abnormally decreased, not only through the effect of the war in diminishing attendance, but also owing to the fact that a large proportion of the students were on free scholarships which had been given to each original purchaser of a lot at the founding of the town, and which were effective for twenty-five years. It was felt that an appeal must be made to the public; and it was proposed that the trustees should secure a head for the institution whose influence in this direction would be recognized. Rev. John P. Gulliver, D. D., pastor of a prominent Congregational church in Chicago, was selected for the position and accepted the presidency. He was noted for his brilliant talent in pulpit and on platform, and it was thought that students would be attracted to the college by his reputation. President Gulliver remained at Knox from 1868 to 1872. The attendance was increased and the faculty was enlarged. But the expenses of the institution increased likewise, and, differing from the trustees on the policy to be followed, the trustees insisting on retrenchment, President Gulliver resigned. For the three years ensuing there was no president, Professor Albert Hurd discharging the duties of that office.

Reference has been made to the course of study in the female collegiate department. In June, 1870, the trustees adopted a plan whereby the young women in that department were enabled to take a course equivalent to that pursued in the college and to receive the degree of B. A. at its completion. They were allowed, however, to take six years instead of four "to avoid injury to health, and to give time for the cultivation of the fine arts and other accomplishments which are not pursued by young men." The courses were given, as previously, in the seminary and in separate classes; except that in the more advanced studies and lectures of the senior year the young women attended classes with the young men. It was not long after this until all recitations were conducted in mixed classes in the college building. In 1891 the distinctive course for women was abandoned and replaced by the literary course, leading to the degree of B. L.,—bachelor of letters. After 1901 this degree was no longer conferred, the literary course having been dropped from the catalogue two years before.

In 1875 Newton Bateman, LL. D., accepted the call of the trustees to the presidency and a new epoch was begun in the history of Knox college. Doctor Bateman, whose name is forever linked with the educational development of Illinois, had but recently retired from office as state superintendent of schools —an office in which he had rendered signal service for a period of fourteen years. To the duties of his new position he brought the ripe experience of that term of public service and also the experience gained during fourteen years of active teaching previous to his work as superintendent. Warm-hearted, genial, sympathetic and tactful, President Bateman was beloved by his students and admired by his fellow-citizens. His scholarly attainments, his native dignity and nobility of character commanded universal respect. Throughout the seventeen years of his long period of service as its president, the college enjoyed a placid era of continuous progress.

A department of musical instruction was opened in 1883 under the direction of Miss Lepha A. Kelsey. A department of art was created in the same year. In 1884, a military department was organized under a law authorizing the detail of ten army officers to various institutions in the country; the passage of the bill through congress was largely due to the influence of President Bateman who secured the assistance of Robert Lincoln, the secretary of war, and the two senators from Illinois, General Logan and Hon. Shelby M. Cullom. A cadet corps was maintained at Knox until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1899, after which event the special details were withdrawn from all educational institutions except the state universities.

An addition was placed, in 1885, on the east end of the seminary, and given the name of Whiting hall in honor of Mrs. Maria Whiting, for fifteen years the beloved and devoted principal. Seven years later the west addition was built and, in 1894, on the death of Mrs. Whiting, the entire building was named Whiting hall to honor her memory. Building operations were resumed in 1890 with the erection of alumni hall, the gift of former students of the college. On October 8th, the corner stone of this structure was laid with appropriate ceremony, in the presence of several thousand spectators, by President Benjamin Harrison. The first half century in the life of college and city was completed in 1887; and the semi-centennial was observed with enthusiasm. The town, the church and the college joined in a three-fold celebration of the founding in a series of gatherings held principally in the historic First church, February 25, 26 and 27.

The college was in a prosperous condition. There had been a steady increase in the attendance during the years of President Bateman's incumbency. In 1879-80 there were 391 students; in the following year there were 411; at the time of the semi-centennial the total reached 512; and for the college year of 1889-90 there were 601 enrolled. The spirit of the institution throughout this administration was admirable, and, although the financial situation was not materially strengthened, the affairs of the college were felt to be in good condition because of the popularity it enjoyed and by reason of the atmosphere of harmony and enthusiasm in which its work proceeded. One note-worthy gift was bestowed on the college in 1889. This was the first donation received from the Chicago philanthropist, the generous friend of colleges throughout the land, Doctor D. K. Pearsons. In 1889 he gave to Knox college real estate in Chicago then valued at $50,000. Unfortunately this property has not proved so valuable to the college as was hoped; it has depreciated in value and the income has decreased in proportion.

In 1892, at the instance of Doctor Bateman, whose physical strength had failed with advancing years, the board asked John H. Finley to accept the presidency. The call was accepted by Mr. Finley but Doctor Bateman continued to act as president for the following year. President Finley was inaugurated at commencement, 1893; and Doctor Bateman retained his relation to the college as president-emeritus until his death, October 21, 1897.

At the time of his election to this office, President Finley was twenty-nine years old—the youngest college president in the country. He was a graduate of Knox and his career as a student had been unusually brilliant. He had worked his way through college achieving every possible honor in scholarship, had won the highest prizes in inter-collegiate and inter-state oratorical contests, and had been one of the most popular men in the institution. After leaving college, Mr. Finley had taken graduate work at the Johns Hopkins University, and then had become secretary of the State Charities Aid Society of New York. He was the founder and editor of The Charities Review, and remained its editor for several years. To his new position he brought the enthusiasm of youth and the devotion of a loyal son of the college. His own undergraduate life was so recent that he was able with rare ability to enter into the circumstances and needs of his sudents, and the relation thus established was intimate and helpful. The feeling of personal comradeship that existed was remarkable. During President Finley's administration the modernization of the college was accomplished in the development of courses in science; the courses in physics, biology and chemistry were arranged in separate departments. In 1894 the position of Dean of Women was created. Instructors in physical culture for both men and women were added. A department of Bible study was established. Special lecturers were secured from the universities and some of the most distinguished scholars in the country were brought by President Finley to supplement and amplify the work of the college.

It was at this period that university extension became a popular feature in education and numerous lecture study courses were given under the auspices of the college. Among the special lecturers who thus appeared were Professors J. C. Freeman, Richard T. Ely, Frederick J. Turner and Edward A. Birge, of the University of Wisconsin; Frederick Starr, Harry P. Judson and Albion W. Small, of the University of Chicago; Frederick A. Wines and Jacob A. Riis, of New York; J. Graham Brooks, of Harvard University; J. W. Jenks, of Cornell University; William R. French, of the Chicago Art Institute; Alice Freeman Palmer, then Dean of Women at the University of Chicago; and Jane Addams, of Hull House. The lectures thus delivered were usually in courses of six each, and covered the fields of literature, history, economics, anthropology, bacteriology, sociology, ethics and art. Knox college itself took up the method of extension work and several of its own instructors conducted courses in nearby towns and cities. In 1894, 1895, and 1896, a summer session of five weeks duration was maintained with some success.

The custom of observing the anniversary of Founders' Day on the fifteenth of February was introduced by President Finley in 1894, on which occasion the principal address was delivered by Hon. Geo. R. Peck, of Chicago, his subject being "The Kingdom of Light." The anniversary of the Lincoln-Douglas debate was celebrated for the first time in 1896, with a program of notable addresses by Hon. Chauncy M. Depew of New York, Senator Palmer of Illinois, Governor Bois of Iowa, and Hon. Robert T. Lincoln. In 1900, a still more noteworthy celebration occurred when President William McKinley and his cabinet honored the occasion with their presence. Charles Emory Smith, postmaster general was the orator of the day, but President McKinley, John Hay, secretary of state, with others of the cabinet, made brief addresses.

During the seven years of President Finley's administration there was but one in which the attendance fell below 650; in 1898-99 the total number of students was 673. In 1899 Doctor Finley resigned to take up editorial work in New York; one year later he accepted a call to the chair of politics in Princeton University. Prof. Thomas R. Willard served as acting-president of the college during the year 1899-1900.

With the opening of the year 1900-1901, began the administration of President Thomas McClelland, whose inauguration took place on Founders' day, February 15, 1901. Doctor McClelland, at the time of his election by the trustees of Knox college, was the president of Pacific University, in Oregon; a man whose long experience as an educator and college executive had been accompanied with distinguished success. His administration, which has continued happily to the present time, is, perhaps, the most significant in the history of the institution. There has been a visible enlargement in the material equipment, both in buildings and endowment; and, parallel with this substantial increase in its resources, there has been also a notable development in the position of the college as a conspicuous factor in the educational work of the middle west. In these two phases of its growth, in this development both external and internal, those connected with the college and its affairs recognize the results of the wise educational policy, intelligent and tactful management and unremitting effort of President McClelland.

The new gymnasium, a handsome structure, perfectly equipped with all the apparatus necessary for the fulfillment of its useful purpose, was completed in 1908 and formally dedicated on Founders' day in that year. A banquet was served in its spacious hall to five hundred enthusiastic students and alumni. The cost of this building with its equipment was $30,000. It has supplied a much-needed element in student life and now admirably serves the needs of the college in the important field of physical training. There had long stood upon the campus an ugly, barnlike structure, known as the "Gym," erected by enthusiastic collegians in 1876; it served its modest purpose fairly well for a time, but became ruinous and was torn down in 1904, to be replaced by its worthier successor.

Another notable observance of the anniversary of the great debate occurred on October 7, 1908, when Hon. William H. Taft, republican nominee for the presidency of the United States, was the guest of honor and the distinguished orator of the occasion. United States Senator Theodore E. Burton, of Ohio, delivered the historical address of the day; and Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, the former vice-president, Senator Albert J. Hopkins, of Illinois, and Robert Douglas, of North Carolina, a grandson of the Little Giant, were also speakers.

The administrative force of the college was already engaged upon a most important and most strenuous undertaking; this was a year-long campaign for an endowment fund of a quarter million. The successful achievement of this task was finally consummated at a mass-meeting of students and friends of Knox held in Central Congregational church on Founders' day, 1909. The full amount of this fund reached $260,000, an amount sufficient to relieve the college of a debt accumulated in annual deficits for several years, and to produce an income sufficient to meet the annual expenses of the institution. It was felt that a new era had begun and that the greater and better Knox was now assured. To this endowment fund Mr. Andrew Carnegie contributed $50,000 and the General Education Board, which administers the Rockefeller fund, gave a like amount; both gifts being conditional on the raising of the entire sum. Citizens of Galesburg contributed amounts aggregating $88,000, this amount including large individual gifts from resident trustees of the college. The remainder of the fund was secured in various sums from hundreds of Knox alumni and friends of the college scattered from coast to coast. The success of this laborious and anxious enterprise bears emphatic testimony to the genuine and widespread interest in the welfare of the institution, as well as to the persevering effort of President McClelland and his faithful assistants.

The enthusiasm aroused by this event was revived a month or so later by the announcement of another very noteworthy and significant donation. In the summer of 1909 Doctor and Mrs. John Van Ness Standish gave to the college property estimated at more than $75,000. This included a deed of their own beautiful residence and spacious gardens which face the college campus, to be known as the Standish Home for the President of Knox College. The remainder of the gift consists of valuable real estate in the city of Chicago. Doctor and Mrs. Standish had passed the greater part of their lives in Galesburg, contributing to the improvement of the city to a degree that cannot be estimated. They had lived beside Knox college for many years and had personally interested themselves in beautifying its somewhat neglected campus. To them the college owes the present arrangement of trees and shrubbery that now adorn its grounds, in the later improvement of which the creator of the beautiful Standish park has been an active agent. Furthermore Doctor and Mrs. Standish had devoted their lives to the cause of education, and had long planned to bestow their property where it might best promote the cause of intelligence and culture after they should have passed away. Convinced of the permanency of this institution and of its broadening influence and usefulness, they thus acted—bestowing on Knox college the largest single gift it has ever received.

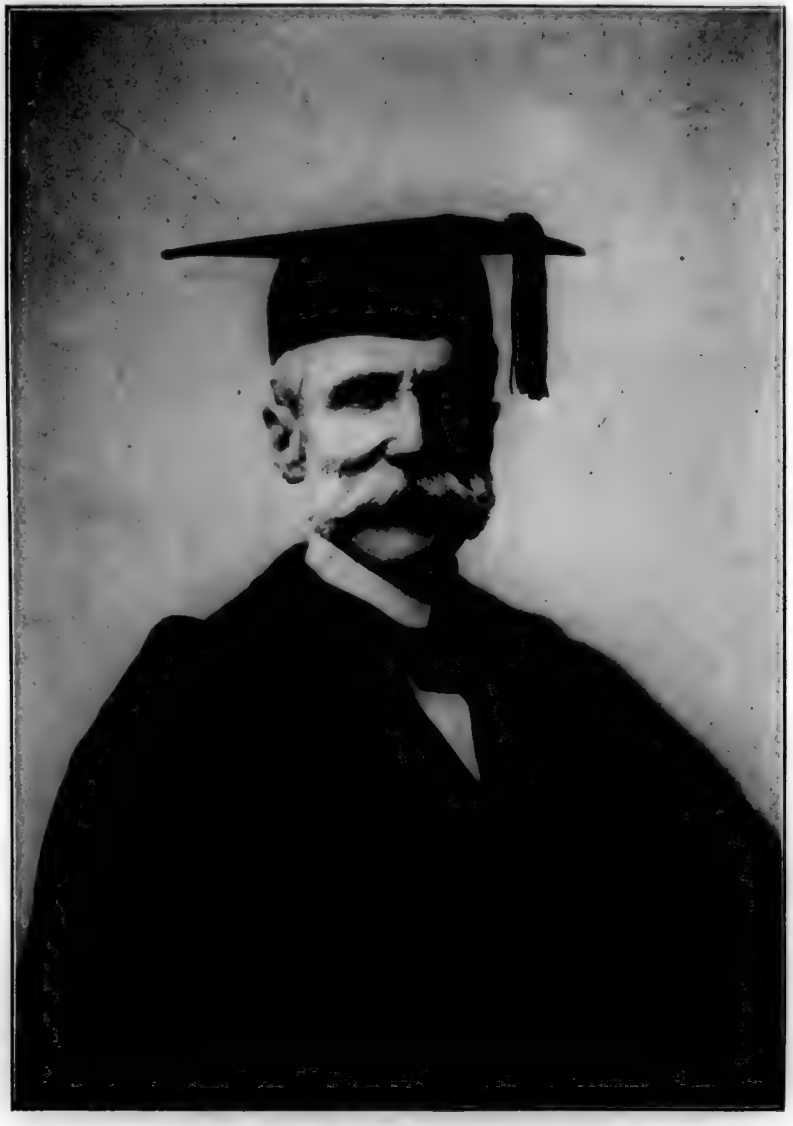
On October 13, a day appropriately designated as Knox-Galesburg day, in recognition of the close relationship existing between college and city, the city and the college united in a fitting testimonial to these public-spirited benefactors. At noon the college body, trustees, faculty and students, with many representative citizens of Galesburg gathered in the gymnasium. Doctor and Mrs. Standish were guests of honor. An informal luncheon was followed by exercises eloquently appreciative of their philanthropic work. Rev. Stuart M. Campbell, Knox '88, made the principal address upon "The Debt of Galesburg to Doctor and Mrs. Standish." At its close, in the name of the college, he presented to the subjects of his address a silver loving-cup "in appreciation of their life-long, broad-minded and far-reaching service in behalf of civic improvement and the advancement of education; and as a token of the love and esteem in which they are held."

The last conspicuous addition to the material equipment of the college is seen in the splendid building known as the George Davis Science hall, erected in 1910-1911 for the use of the departments of chemistry, biology and physics. This building receives its name in memory of a former treasurer of the college, whose son-in-law, Mr. J. T. McKnight, for many years a useful and an honored member of the board of trustees, together with Mrs. McKnight, gave the sum of $25,000 toward its erection. In its construction and furnishing no necessary expense was spared to make ample provision for the needs of these departments. The laboratories are thoroughly modern in their equipment and are not surpassed in convenience and efficiency. The entire cost was approximately $115,000. The dedication of Science hall was the feature of the annual Founders' day celebration in 1912.

A change was made in the educational policy of the institution in 1909, when the official board determined to discontinue the existence of the Knox academy. It had become apparent that this department was no longer a necessity. With the modern development of the high schools throughout the territory from which Knox receives her students, the number of those entering the preparatory department had steadily decreased until practically no students were enrolled below the third year, and most of these were here merely to make up deficiencies that could be covered in a single year of well-ordered work. Thus in 1909-10 there were in the academy but thirty-five students, as compared with 352 in the college, 136 of whom were regular freshmen.



To render the general equipment of the college more complete a heating and lighting plant, costing $40,000 with its connections, was built in 1911. It stands on a lot just east of Willard field, and furnishes steam heat and electric lighting for all the college buildings.

Knox college enjoys the distinction of being the first educational institution in Illinois—and to this date the only one—to be placed upon the list of the Carnegie Foundation for the advancement of Teaching. This admits the professors on its faculty to benefits of the retiring allowance provided by that fund. Especially significant is the recognition thus given to the standing of the college in the educational world. Equally significant is the recent establishment of a system of exchange professorships with Harvard University. The plan originated at Harvard. Four representative colleges in four western states are included in the arrangement: Knox, Beloit, Grinnell and Colorado. By the terms of this agreement Harvard is to send a professor for a half year to these colleges, dividing his time equally among them, and giving such regular instruction in their courses as they may require. In return each of the four colleges is entitled to send to Harvard each year one of its instructors for half a year, with the understanding that he is to devote one-third of his time as an assistant and the rest of his time to graduate or research work in Harvard university. The significance of this agreement lies in the fact that it is an alliance between colleges that stand for the integrity of the four year college course and a university that is committed to the same educational policy. The plan went into operation in 1912. Albert Bushnell Hart, Eaton professor of the science of government, at Harvard University, spent the month of February at Knox college. He gave courses in American history and American government, and a series of eight public lectures on American biography; he also delivered four illustrated lectures on Japan, China, India, and the Philippine Islands.

The policy of the institution throughout its history has been to fulfill, in so far as its equipment permitted, the ideal of a college education. The scope of its work has varied at different periods. Some of the departments of the institution in its earlier years have been successively abandoned; the so-called commercial courses, the department of art, and finally the preparatory department, the old academy, have been discontinued. The curriculum of the college itself has been broadened and strengthened; its faculty has been increased until it now numbers twenty-three active members; its equipment has been greatly enlarged; but its does not seek to enter the field of the university. It stands for recognized college work and does not attempt that of the special or professional school. Although the lines of admission and classification are now closely drawn the number of students in attendance has increased steadily. In the seventy-fifth year of its existence Knox contains a body of 346 college students.

The limits of this history will not permit any account of the social and literary activities, which form so prominent a part of undergraduate student life; but no sketch of Knox college would be adequate which omitted mention of the service rendered by instructors and trustees. The members of the executive board of the college have from the first been men of integrity and ability, loyal to the highest interests of the institution, and often displaying a remarkable degree of wisdom and foresight in their supervision of its affairs; had it been otherwise Knox College would not stand where it does today. membered, too, that the college has been carried under their guidance and with their liberal assistance through some difficult and critical experiences. The success of any educational institution is closely associated with the influence of the stronger personalities among its teachers. This is eminently true of Knox college. The lives of three men are inseparably interwoven with the life of the college. These were the men who composed the "triumvirate" as, in the closing years of their long and splendid service they were affectionately called. George Churchill, Knox, 1851, became principal of the academy in 1855 and remained its head for forty-five years, until his death in 1899. Albert Hurd, Middlebury, 1850 became a member of the Knox faculty as teacher of the sciences, in 1851; in 1897 he was made professor of Latin, and continued to fill that chair until his death in 1906, having taught continuously in the college for fifty-five years. Milton L. Comstock, Knox, 1851, became professor of mathematics in 1858, retiring from active work in 1898. He died in 1906. With the record of these men, strong in character and great teachers, stands that of Mrs. Sarah M. McCall, Mt. Holyoke, 1851, who became an instructor in Knox academy in 1865. She was principal of the Galesburg high school from 1869 to 1876, when she became again an instructor in Knox academy where she remained until her retirement in 1901. Her death occurred in 1906.

The extent to which the influence of these noble lives has entered into the spirit of Knox graduates and former students who have established the reputation of their college in all parts of the world and in every field of honorable activity can not be estimated. And it is in the ability and usefulness of its graduates that a college is justified.

MUSIC IN KNOX COLLEGE

By Prof. Wm. F. Bentley

The history of music in Knox college is simply a repetition of the history of music in America, although when Knox college was founded in 1837, music was past the early stages of our Puritan Fathers, who believed that musical instruments belonged to the devil and had no place in our religious life. The Puritan clergy opposed even the study of music; "The names of the musical notes were considered blasphemous." "To sing man's melody was a vain show of art." "God could not take delight in praises where the man of sin had a hand in making the melody." Having to overcome so much of opposition it is no wonder that music in America in 1837 was still in the crudest of conditions, and only comparatively a few of those who lived in the larger cities of our country, even in the "Hub," Boston, knew music as an art or science. Music, however, is a part of man's existence, the same as speech, and as men converse together without a knowledge of grammar or rhetoric, so they sing and play upon instruments without a knowledge of melody or harmony.

Music in Galesburg and in Knox college was, at first, principally vocal music, as there were few musical instruments owned by the dwellers in "Log City." A limited number of Psalm tunes sung "by ear" was the extent of the religious music of the day. The popular music consisted of love songs, ballads, glees, and rounds, both humorous and pathetic, which all tried to sing.

During the long winter evenings, the great diversion for the young people, as well as the old, was "The Sings," which were held in the different homes and which were greatly enjoyed, the refreshments of pop-corn, apples, and cider, aiding, no doubt, in the enjoyment.

It would be interesting to follow in detail the growth of this early music, but that is not the object of this article; therefore only a few facts will be mentioned, and for this data the writer quotes largely from historical articles written by Prof. George Churchill and Mrs. John T. Avery, which have previously appeared in our college and city papers.

Of the early settlers there were a number who had really good voices, and could sing fairly well, notably Silas Olmstead and E. R. Adams, both of whom brought real musical culture and training from the east. The musical families of the Holyokes, Hitchcocks, Mills, Lymans, Waters, Churchills, and Stanleys, besides many others, helped to make Galesburg noted for good congregational singing. Mrs. Palmer, sister of Levant Dilley, was considered the leading singer among the women. In 1837 John Kendall and wife came from New York. He had a good voice, and brought with him his violoncello, the first one in the colony. Naturally, he led the music in church with voice and instrument, although he remained only a short time. The first piano was owned by Mrs. S. F. Dolbear who was the first piano teacher in the college and city. Mr. Wm. B. Hamblin, a shoemaker, owned the first violin. The first melodian (purchased in Buffalo, N. Y.) was brought to Galesburg by Riley Root. The first singing master was Samuel R. Bacon, who in 1839 came with his bride, also a singer, and settled with the colony at Geneseo, Illinois. Mr. Bacon made frequent visits to Galesburg, and conducted here the old fashioned singing school for many years. He was a genuine master of music with boundless enthusiasm, a master of reading, of expression, of purity of tone, and of the scientific use of the voice. He with his violin did a great and lasting work for musical Galesburg.

August 15, 1843, a meeting of the citizens was held in the schoolhouse for the purpose of organizing a band. The organization was perfected under the name of "The Galesburg Citizens' Band," and give its first concert March 27, 1844. This band was in demand in all the nearby towns as well as at home for all celebrations, college commencements, etc. The first great success of the band was scored when they furnished the music at a monster presidential gathering of the Henry Clay campaign in Peoria, June, 1844, and their elegant band wagon drawn by six horses attracted much attention.

Following Mr. Bacon, the second musician of great and sterling worth was Mr. L. B. Miller, who moved to Galesburg in 1856. Mr. Miller's voice was a sweet, pure tenor, and as a teacher he excelled. He brought out many of the choruses from oratorios and cantatas with large and finely drilled singing classes. He organized the first male glee club of the city.

Up to 1859 no other musical event quite equalled the placing of the pipe organ in the Old First church. For several years, Mrs. S. M. Owen was the organist. Mr. Owen was an excellent teacher, and the energetic leader of the choir. After Mr. and Mrs. Owen left Galesburg, Mrs. Lyman West played the organ for two or three years; then came Prof. Charles Fuhrmann who was a trained musician and a really good player on both organ and piano. Galesburg and Knox college owe a great debt to this man; his ideals were high and the standard of music as an art was perceptibly raised.

During the period of the civil war, the war songs helped stir all hearts with patriotic fervor. Mrs. M. D. Cooke with characteristic energy, went about the schools and taught the children war songs. She did such efficient work in training the children that the board of education conceived the idea of engaging her as a permanent instructor for several years.

Galesburg, like many other American cities of a half century ago, passed through the musical convention stage. George F. Root, Wm. P. Bradbury, and other prominent men held conventions here, and both the college and the city gave staunch support. Choral music became one of the distinct features of college and city life.

The music in Knox college was so intimately associated with the music in Galesburg that it is difficult to separate the two distinct factions, for Knox college did not engage its music teachers as it did the other instructors, on a salaried basis; it simply recommended certain teachers from the city to the various students who wished to study music. The names of the teachers thus recommended appeared in the catalog as members of the faculty, but there was no course in music offered, and the college owned no instrument except the little organ used for chapel exercises. The name of Mrs. S. F. Dolbear appears in the catalog of 1852 as teacher of music, and this was the beginning of a long list of music teachers.

From 1868 to 1883 the average yearly attendance was 46 students.

Lepha A. Kelsey, Florence Sperry, Charles Lindoft, E. D. Wycoff, 1883-84.

In this year a prescribed course in piano, voice, violin, organ and harmony was formulated, and Knox Conservatory of Music was established as a regular department of the college.

Miss Lepha A. Kelsey remained as director for the following year, 1884-85, but in the fall of 1885 the writer of this article was called to take full charge of this department of the college, and for over a quarter of a century he has labored incessantly for the educational, artistic, and financial success of the institution.

Although the present director was practically the founder of the conservatory, yet if he had not had the assistance and support of Mrs. Maria Whiting, who was at that time the principal of "the ladies' seminary," now "Whiting hall," he could have accomplished but a small part of what has been realized.

The equipment in 1885 consisted of an old cabinet organ, two old square pianos, and one new upright. The present equipment consists of a fine large three manual pipe organ in Beecher chapel, and three two manual pedal organs, all pumped with electric motors. The school owns also six large grand pianos, and twenty upright pianos for practice. For the orchestra the school has purchased a number of instruments, and has an extensive library of music.

While the growth of Knox conservatory has been slow, the standards are high, and a diploma from this department of the college takes with it an assurance of good technical attainments and a thorough appreciation of the intellectual and artistic in music. There is now an extended course offered, leading to the degree of musical bachelor.

The home of the conservatory has always been in Whiting hall; indeed, the east end of the building was originally built for its use and as a home for L. M. I. society. The pressing need of the school at the present time, if it is to grow, is a building thoroughly modern and up to date, so that a large number of students can be accommodated.

It is one thing to plan, another to carry out the plan, and it is to the list of professors and instructors we must turn if we would know why Knox conservatory has succeeded. Some of these professors have worked many years side by side with the director with the utmost enthusiasm.

The following list contains only those who were in the school as regular teachers for five or more years.

John Winter Thompson, Mus. B., teacher of organ and theory of music; twenty-two years' service; member of present faculty.

Susan K. Clisbee (Countryman), teacher of violin; twenty years' service.

Florence Josephine Lee (Whitman), A. M., teacher of voice; six years' service.

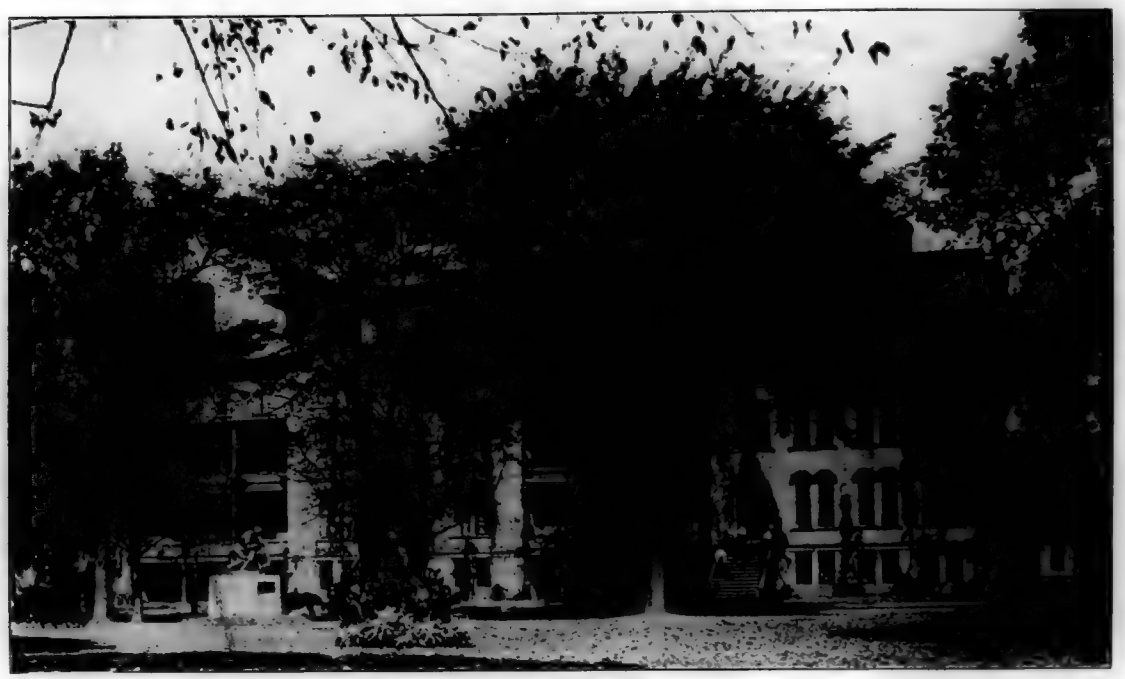
Blanche M. Boult, teacher of pianoforte; nineteen years' service; member of present faculty.

Frederick M. Mueller, Mus. B., teacher of organ, theory and pianoforte; eleven years' service.

Harriet W. Webster, teacher of pianoforte; eighteen years' service.

Bessie Cary, teacher of voice; six years' service.

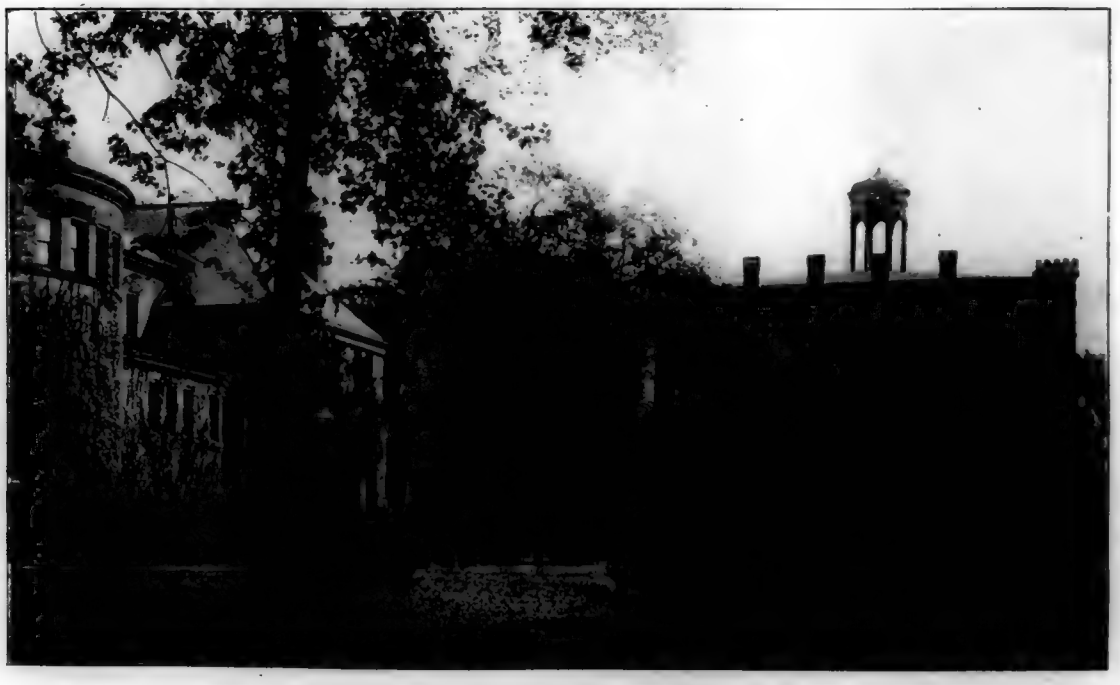
Forrest Horrell (Kellogg), teacher of voice; six years' service.



Selma Zetterberg (Stromberg), teacher of pianoforte; six years' service.

Emelie C. Waste, teacher of pianoforte; five years' service.

Allan B. Dow, teacher of pianoforte; five years' service.



Lilian Elwood, teacher of voice; five years' service; member of present faculty.

William Blake Carlton, teacher of voice; five years' service; member of present faculty.

Our graduates, nearly two hundred in number, are doing excellent service in nearly every state in the Union, and some are bringing great honor upon their alma mater. The enrollment of 250 students is at present about the average attendance, with a faculty of nine professors.

A history of "Music in Knox College" would not be complete without mention of some of the musical organizations. During the years when Knox boasted of a cadet corps in charge of a lieutenant furnished by the government, a cadet band was organized and sustained as long as the military officer was in charge. This band of thirty-five pieces, uniformed in gray, was the pride not only of the college, but of the city as well.

For the past decade of years the Knox Glee club has held aloft the standard of "Old Knox" in many states, even as far west as the Pacific coast. The club has boasted some excellent voices in past years, but the club of 1912 seems to be the culmination of good voices, good musicians and good fun-makers.

Another organization is the "Knox Conservatory Vocal Society," which was organized in 1890, and in connection with the conservatory orchestra presented yearly the masterpieces of choral music. In 1899 this society was reorganized, and at the present time continues as a city organization known as "the Galesburg Musical Union." It gives from time to time the choral works of the great masters, a partial list of which follows: "Messiah," Handel; "Creation," Haydn; "St. Paul" and "Elijah," Mendelssohn; "Crusaders," Gade; "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; "Faust," Gounod; "The Golden Legend," Sullivan; "Scenes from Hiawatha," Coleridge-Taylor, and "Aida," Verdi.

Such organizations as "The Thomas Orchestra," "The Chicago Symphony Orchestra" and "The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra" have played here frequently in special concerts or in connection with "The Galesburg Musical Union" in the annual May festivals, which have become a feature of our city's life.

The conservatory has maintained for twenty years an artists' course, in which many prominent artists have appeared in recital, giving the students of the college and conservatory an opportunity to hear the best, and through this hearing to acquire higher ideals. The names of only a few of these artists are recorded: Wm. H. Sherwood, Max Heinrich, Teresa Carreno, Bruno Steindel, Godowsky, Edward Baxter Perry, Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, Rudolph Ganz, Witherspoon, Ellen Beach Yaw, the Olive Mead Quartette, Maude Powell and Myrtle Elvyn.

The same spirit which exists in the college regarding Christian character and good morals exists in the faculty and among the students of the conservatory, and the whole tone of the school is hard work and high ideals.

As has been stated, when the college was first organized it depended entirely upon the city for its music, whereas now the opposite may be said, for from the faculty of the conservatory or from its student body the choristers, organists and soloists of the various churches are chosen, and the musical life of Galesburg is practically resultant of the work of this institution.

LOMBARD COLLEGE

By Rev. Edson Reifsnider

The movement inaugurated in 1850 looking toward the establishment of an institution of learning in which religious pressure, distasteful to those who were not classed as Evangelical Christians, would not be brought to bear upon their children, had in view no such ambitious end as a college. On the part of these earnest souls there was a strong feeling that the denominational control of the institutions above the grade of common schools, practically all in the state being thus controlled, was detrimental to free inquiry after truth. Release was most eagerly desired, also, from the well meant, but unwelcome interference with their children on the ground of religious belief. It came about, therefore, when Reverend Charles P. West, a pioneer preacher of universalism in Illinois, suggested that a non-sectarian "seminary of learning" be established by the Universalists of Illinois he found an encouraging reception of his idea.

On the 19th of May, 1850, the Spoon River Association of Universalists convened at Greenbush, Warren county. To the association Mr. West presented his plea for the founding of an academy, having been urged to do so at a meeting held shortly before at the home of Mr. Amos Pierce of Greenbush, for the discussion of the project. The association resolved that such a school ought to be established at Galesburg by the Universalists of the state. Soon after this the Henderson River association, meeting in Oquaka, and the Universalist State convention, meeting in Toulon, commended the idea, the latter pledging itself to do all possible to put the plan into execution.

A canvass for the raising of funds was started, the plan being to organize a joint stock company with a capital of $5,000, shares $25, when half the amount was subscribed. Mr. West proved himself a man of action as well as of words, being able to announce in October that the required sum had been pledged. On the 24th of that month the subscribers met in Galesburg and organized under the name "The Universalist Literary Society of the State of Illinois." They elected fifteen trustees, whose officers were Honorable Alfred Brown, president; Lorentus E. Conger, treasurer, and Reverend C. P. West, secretary. A building committee was appointed and Mr. West again went into the field as general agent to make collections and solicit further subscriptions. A charter was secured from the state February 15, 1851, for "The Illinois Liberal institute," that name having been selected at a meeting held November 29, 1850. The object of the incorporation was stated to be the establishment and support of education, it being stipulated that property beyond the value at any one time of more than $20,000 could not be held.

On the northwest corner of Seminary and Tompkins streets, near the Burlington depot, the first building was erected. It was of brick and was begun in the spring of 1851, but owing to the lack of means at the disposal of the committee it was not ready for occupancy until the first of September, 1852. The institute was then opened with Reverend P. Raymond Kendall as principal and Miss Caroline S. Woodbury in charge of the female department, these teachers having been appointed the previous March. The courses offered were in three departments—academic, scientific and collegiate, the total enrollment for the first year being 134.

The choice of Professor Kendall meant much for the future of the young institution. He soon became ambitious to make it something more than the academy first planned and fully satisfied the original promoters. He urged the need of a college in addition to the work done by the institute; but he found the trustees unwilling to further his ambition. His strong personality and his enterprise were such that finally a reluctant consent was wrung from the board to undertake the establishment of a college. However, they made the seemingly impossible condition, the raising of $50,000, doubtless believing that this would put an end to the importunities to which they had been so opposed. The charter was amended January 26, 1853, granting the right to hold property to the amount of $50,000, and to confer degrees for collegiate honors. In the fall of 1854, among other additions to the faculty, were two teachers destined to render the institution many years of devoted service. They were Miss H. A. Kendall, afterward Mrs. Standish, and Professor J. V. N. Standish, both of them most excellent and commanding teachers, sketches of whose busy and useful lives appear elsewhere in this work. To Professor Standish, prior to his coming, his friend and classmate, Professor Kendall, had confided his plans to make of the institute a college, relying on his co-operation. In furtherance of the plans Professor Kendall shortly after the arrival of Professor Standish took the field to canvass for the necessary funds, the latter becoming acting president and remaining such until the fall of 1857.

On the afternoon of April 27, 1855, the building burned, the loss being total, as there was no insurance. The blow was a serious one, but the friends of the institute and its loyal and self-sacrificing teachers would not brook any suggestion of failure. On learning of the calamity, Professor Kendall hastened home from Wisconsin to find that without an intermission recitations had been continued in rooms temporarily secured in various parts of the city through the energy of Professor Standish. Professor Kendall now continued to press his plans for a college, and with the aid of a corps of assistants, Messrs. J. H. Chapin, W. S. Ballou and other Universalist clergymen, he pushed the canvass for funds with renewed zeal. As a result a total of about $60,000 was subscribed, the larger part of it being secured by the sale of scholarships, which yielded twice their cost in tuition.

It was in 1855 that Benjamin Lombard, then living in Henry, Illinois, bestowed his liberal gift of $20,000 on the institution, and in recognition of his generous aid the name was changed to Lombard University. A new building costing $40,000 was erected on a site selected in an eighty acre tract in the southeast part of the city purchased from L. E. Conger. It is built of brick, 80x66 feet, three stories high and of modified gothic architecture. Then it stood on the barren prairie; now on its fourteen acre campus it is surrounded by spacious lawns, attractive shrubbery and a glory of magnificent trees of about forty choice varieties, the most glorious of all being the two rows of noble elms on the north and west. This building was not completed without many discouragements. Several times work was suspended because the treasury was empty, but at last the roof was on and late in the fall of 1856 recitations were held under its shelter. Several years elapsed before the building was fully completed, and now it stands a monument to the faithful souls who put so much of themselves into its walls.

Professor Kendall severed his connection with the university in 1856, though for part of the college year of 1858-9 he was in temporary charge during the absence of the president. In the fall of 1857 Doctor Otis A. Skinner became president. Into his administration he put with much intensity the brilliant powers with which he was endowed, but unfortunately he was obliged to resign in 1859, though not until he made his fine influence an investment for the future welfare of the school. It was during his administration in 1858 that Professor Parker became a member of the faculty. He is now in his 87th year, the honored professor emeritus of the Greek language and Greek literature. His conspicuous ability as a teacher and his sincere, helpful, kindly interest in the students who came under his instruction have made his name revered.

James Partelow Weston, D. D., became the successor of Doctor Skinner. He remained in the office from the fall of 1859 until 1872, his term of service being long enough for him to leave the impress of his strong character not alone upon Lombard, but upon the city as well. Very largely inspired by him, the endowment was increased to $100,000. Among the generous donors were E. G. Hall and Lorentus E. Conger, each giving $10,000. Doctor Weston was loved by teachers, students and friends, and the fact that one of the grammar schools of Galesburg was named for him testifies to the esteem in which he was held.

Following the resignation of Doctor Weston, Professor William Livingston was made provisional president, serving in that capacity for three years. His long connection with the university as a member of the faculty made him acquainted with its needs. He came to Lombard in 1855 as the professor of natural science, and from that time until his death, December 29, 1879, he gave to it the full measure of his devotion. When in 1875 Doctor Nehemiah White was elected to the presidency Professor Livingston was appointed financial agent and won for the institution many warm friends through his gracious presentation of its claims.

President White was inaugurated in the opera house, January 6, 1876, and continued in office until 1892, which makes his term of service as president the longest in Lombard's history. He was born in Wallingford, Vermont, in 1835, was graduated from Middlebury college, Middlebury, Vermont, in 1857, and entered at once the ranks of the teacher. After holding several minor positions he took the chair of mathematics in St. Lawrence University, Canton, N. Y. In 1872 he became professor of ancient languages in Buchtel College, Akron, Ohio, a position he held until called to Galesburg. While in Ohio he was ordained to the ministry of the Universalist church. He was a man of ripe scholarship, deep spiritual nature and gentle, kindly manner.

It was during his administration that the project to establish a theological department was first considered. In 1880 definite action was taken by President White, Reverend E. L. Conger and Reverend W. H. Ryder, D. D., and the department was established in the fall of 1881. Prior to this the Universalist denomination had no divinity school in the west, and the lack which had been felt for some time was supplied. The school has received many gifts, among them being $20,000 from the late Honorable A. G. Throop, founder of the Throop Polytechnic Institute at Pasadena, California. Its largest benefactor was Doctor Ryder, whose generous provision for it in his will secured to it about $50,000. In recognition of his abiding interest in it and in the university it was named in 1890 Ryder Divinity School. It has sent into the ministry of the Universalist church men and women who have served it with devotion and ability and who have made their worthy contribution to the advancement of the Christian religion. In 1892 Doctor White was placed in charge of the divinity school, retaining that position until failing health made necessary his resignation in 1905. He died in Ogdensburg, N. Y., December 8, 1911. In 1909 Reverend Edson Reifsnider, for several years prior to that time pastor of the local Universalist church, was appointed dean of the school.

Dr. John Clarence Lee, a member of the faculty, became president in 1892, but after serving only a few weeks he resigned. His interest in the elective system, which made somewhat more flexible the course of study offered, led to its adoption the following year.

In October, 1892, Doctor Standish became president. He served until June, 1895, bringing to the office the ripened wisdom of a long life devoted with enthusiasm to advancing the cause of education. The need of a building for women was urgent, and Doctor Standish began a canvass for the necessary funds. Before the completion of the canvass, however, the financial depression which swept over the country counseled delay, and the building was not erected while he was president, though part of the money subscribed was subsequently paid.

Late in the fall of 1895 there was called to the office a man whose administration infused fresh life and vigor into all the interests of the school and wrought marked changes in the appearance of the campus. This man was Reverend Charles Ellwood Nash, S. T. D., who at the time was pastor of one of the prominent Universalist churches of Brooklyn, N. Y. Doctor Nash, being an alumnus of Lombard, brought to her the ardent love of one of her sons, and all of his conspicuous ability as an inspiring preacher and eloquent platform speaker, a quickener of the spirit of loyalty and an indefatigable worker, was freely and joyously placed under tribute to her. His stirring and virile manhood, his hearty belief in the value of education and his contagious optimism soon began to bear fruit. In 1896 the building for the use of the women of the college was erected near the northeast corner of the campus. This building, known as Lombard hall, is of red pressed brick, three stories in height and is a model of convenience and comfort. It has proved a delightful home for the young ladies who have been fortunate enough to find shelter beneath its hospitable roof. The year following the walls of the gymnasium arose on the campus between the main building and Lombard hall. It is two stories in height and has a fine basement furnished with the necessary conveniences of a well equipped structure of its character. It has been a source of keen satisfaction to the lovers of athletics among the students and faculty. On one of the inner walls a bronze tablet commends the class of 1897 for the important part it took in subscribing to the fund and in making the canvass for the building a success. The president's house across from the campus on the corner of Knox and Lombard streets was built for Doctor Nash for his home and acquired by the college after his resignation. Doctor Nash presented the needs of Lombard so persuasively to its friends that a considerable sum was added to its endowment during his administration, and prior to his resignation he had secured several goodly subscriptions toward a new $100,000 fund for the enlargement of the permanent endowment. In 1899 the name was changed from Lombard university to Lombard college, the latter title being considered more appropriate for an institution of its character.

Early in 1894 Doctor Nash resigned to accept an important national office in the Universalist church, and Dean Fredrick W. Rich was put in charge of the college. Dean Rich had been a teacher there for a score of years and was so well acquainted with the routine of administration that under his intelligent and careful oversight none of its interests suffered. He was at the helm until the fall of 1905, turning it over to the new president at that time. Dean Rich has been one of the most efficient teachers connected with the college, and when he resigned at the close of the college year in 1911 after a service covering more than a quarter of a century it was with the consciousness that he had helped hundreds of young men and women to find themselves and a worthy place in life and a friend whose regard for them was sincere and true.

The present head of Lombard, Reverend Lewis Beals Fisher, D. D., assumed the presidency in September, 1905. He had been a professor for fifteen years in the Canton Theological school, Canton, N. Y., a department of St. Lawrence University. He was at once confronted by the task of completing the canvass for a $100,000 fund begun by Doctor Nash, and he addressed himself to it with an energy and persistency prophesying success. It was far from easy of accomplishment, but the appeals of this genial, warmhearted man brought from old friends and new the subscriptions called for by the terms of an agreement on the part of Mr. Andrew Carnegie to contribute $25,000, provided the balance be secured from others. When the late Thomas Lowry of Minneapolis, who had early in the canvass pledged $10,000, made the condition of its payment the raising of the entire amount sought by December 31, 1906, a fresh impetus was imparted to the enterprise, and when the day arrived the joyful announcement was made that the conditions had been met and the fund was assured.

Doctor Fisher's conduct of his office has been characterized by kindly regard for the best welfare of the teachers associated with him and the students committed to his care. He has made for himself a wide circle of friends, whose friendship extends also to the college. It is not too much to say that no man has ever occupied the presidency who has won so readily the warm affection of the student body nor one who has better deserved it.

The foregoing is mainly a statement of bare facts. Only those who can read liberally between the lines will succeed in getting the whole story. Justice cannot begin to be done in so brief a sketch, and many must go unnamed whose love and sacrifice are builded into the walls of Old Lombard. mission of the faculty." Students playing cards or any games of chance were to be dealt with as the faculty saw fit, and the intimation clearly was that they would see fit to do something likely to be long remembered. With the passage of the years the list of formal rules gradually grew shorter and finally altogether disappeared, but always the concern of the faculty has been to bring under wholesome and uplifting influences the young people placed in their charge, and for the result throughout these two generations no apology is necessary. Like other small colleges of this country, Lombard has had her ideals, and to their guidance she has endeavored to hold true. Together with them she has performed a service of measureless value, and as her influence has blessed the past so will it also richly bless the future.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

By Dr. Chas. W. Leffingwell

St. Mary's school, Knoxville, was opened in April, 1868, in the building of the Ewing Female University, erected about ten years before. For lack of endowment, that institution had been compelled to discontinue its work, and the property was transferred to the Episcopal diocese of Illinois. Of the fifteen trustees, ten are appointed to represent the diocese of Illinois and five to represent Knox county. The Rev. Charles W. Leffingwell became the founder and rector of St. Mary's, Mrs. Leffingwell being the matron and Miss Nancy Menedy Hitchcock the vice-principal. Dr. Leffingwell continues to this day (1912) rector of the school; Mrs. Leffingwell was matron for forty years; Miss Hitchcock was vice-principal for over twenty-five years.

The school soon outgrew its limited accommodations, and at a cost of about $25,000 it was greatly improved and enlarged. The Hon. James Knox contributed nearly one-half the required amount.

On January 4th, 1883, the building and contents were destroyed by fire. Within a month the school was reopened in the building of Ansgari College, in Knoxville, the few college students finding homes in private houses and reciting in the rooms of the old court house.

The cost of the new school building, the new stone chapel and the improvement of the ground was about $100,000, of which nearly one-half was provided by the legacy of Mr. Knox. Additions and improvements have been made from time to time. In 1901 a recreation annex was built and furnished at a cost of nearly $10,000.

Succeeding Miss Hitchcock as principal, Miss Emma Pease Howard has continued in office to the date of this writing and for some years has successfully managed the business as well as the academical work of the institution. The maximum of one hundred students in residence, with twenty officers and teachers, has been reported during most of the time for a quarter of a century.

St. Mary's is a school for young women who desire to continue their work two or three years beyond the course of the high school. It is a school home where girls become better daughters; where they are systematically trained for the duties of wifehood and motherhood; where they are encouraged to recognize, and where they are required to prepare for, their present and future obligations. There is a thorough preparatory course for younger girls and an affiliated school, St. Martha's, for little girls.

More than twenty states are represented by the teachers and students in attendance. The alumnae are resident in nearly every country of the world—in Alaska, in Mexico, in Canada, on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, in Europe, Australia, Hawaii, the Philippines, Guam, Japan, China, Ceylon and the West Indies.

ST. MARTHA'S SCHOOL FOR YOUNGER GIRLS

St. Martha's school for younger girls was opened in Knoxville in September, 1911, by Miss Emma Pease Howard. The building was designed and constructed expressly for this work and is located upon a beautiful campus adjacent to St. Mary's school, with which institution St. Martha's is affiliated. The school is entirely distinct from St. Mary's, being complete in equipment and especially adapted in methods and management to the care and training of young children. The official visitors are the Rt. Rev. M. E. Fawcett, D. D., Ph. D., Bishop of Quincy, and the Rev. C. W. Leffingwell, D. D., rector of St. Mary's school. A fine corps of officers and teachers is provided, and everything possible is done to promote the physical, mental and moral welfare of the little girls. Healthful recreation is a prominent feature of the curriculum. The course of study includes all branches taught in the best public schools preparatory to the eighth grade, with instruction also in French and German, drawing, music, dancing, arts and industries.

Though St. Martha's school may not yet claim a place in history, it is a unique and interesting development in educational enterprise, being the only school of high grade, so far as we knew, which is completely organized and equipped for the care of little girls exclusively. Only those under thirteen years of age are received.

ST. ALBAN'S SCHOOL

St. Alban's school for boys, Knoxville, was founded in 1890 by the Rev. Dr. C. W. Leffingwell, and for several years was conducted under his supervision. The property of Ansgari college, having reverted to the city, by the discontinuance of the Swedish school there, was transferred to Dr. Leffingwell, and by him was greatly enlarged and improved. Towards the erection of the main building the Hon. James Knox had given $10,000. The building and equipment are valued at $60,000. The school is widely and favorably known, and many of its graduates hold high positions in the church, in the army and in the business world. Mr. Lucien F. Sennett is the present headmaster and lessee of the school, and under his capable management the institution has steadily advanced in numbers and in efficiency. The maximum number of students in residence is now sixty and there are some day scholars.

HISTORY OF THE BUSINESS COLLEGE FROM ITS FOUNDING IN GALESBURG

By J. H. Cox

In the year 1864 Prof. H. E. Hayes organized a school on Main street on the third floor in the building now occupied by the Farmers' and Mechanics' bank. Mr. Hayes was a beautiful penman, a fine scholar, a cultured gentleman and had been a soldier in the Civil war. The school was organized at a time when the soldiers who had seen four years of service were just returning home and had been too busy in the south to further their education. They saw the need of more training in order that they might enter and succeed in mercantile enterprises. Mr. J. B. Harsh, now an attorney and banker of Creston, Iowa, and for whom we are indebted to this early history, taught in the Hayes' Business Institute while attending classes in Lombard College, 1865-66.

In the year 1866-67 Mr. Harsh and Mr. Hayes joined their fortunes, and then the school was known as the Hayes and Harsh Business College. It was located in the upper story of Colton block west of the public square, or west of "Central park." The original location was also retained and was used for a telegraph station, as telegraphy was one of the branches taught.

Prof. Harsh purchased the remaining interest of Prof. Hayes and changed the name to Western Business College, which name it retained until it was purchased by the present owner. Mr. Harsh moved his school to the third story of the new Allen building on Prairie street, now known as the "Doyle building." The school grew rapidly, and over 700 students were enrolled in the year 1867-68.

In the spring of 1869 Prof. Harsh sold the institution to Prof. E. R. Poole, who retained the management for a number of years and conducted it in the same location.

In the year 1872-73 Mr. Poole sold his interest to J. M. Martin and Brother, who conducted it for ten years, when, according to the Republican Register of March 24, 1883, it was sold to Prof. M. H. Barringer of Jacksonville, Illinois. Prof. J. M. Martin engaged in the banking business at Burlington Junction, Missouri, and A. B. Martin engaged in business in this city.

Prof. G. H. Bridge, now of the Galesburg high school, was the teacher of penmanship and telegraphy under Mr. Barringer's management. Mr. Barringer moved his school to the Nelson building, at the corner of Seminary and Main streets, where Mr. Brown purchased it in the spring of 1891, and it has since been known as Brown's Business College.

Mr. C. C. Gilliand, one of the teachers, was made principal of the school until July, 1892, when W. F. Cadwell took charge. June 29, 1895, the college was moved from the Nelson building to the Arnold block, corner of Cherry and Simmons, its present location. Mr. Cadwell was principal of the school for ten years, or until 1902. He was succeeded by Prof. I. N. Wright, who was principal for six years, when J. H. Cox, the present principal of the school, took charge.

Among the leading teachers who have been connected with the school are: C. E. Faust, a penmanship expert located in Chicago; J. R. Anderson, now owner of a business college in St. Louis, Missouri; E. F. Quintal, owner of a business college in Green Bay, Wisconsin; J. B. Owen, lumber merchant in Stonington, Illinois; Prof. G. W. Roseberry, proprietor of three business colleges in Massachusetts; Gertrude Harvey, teacher of shorthand in the Davenport high school, and Prof. A. T. Scoville, now principal of Brown's Sterling school.

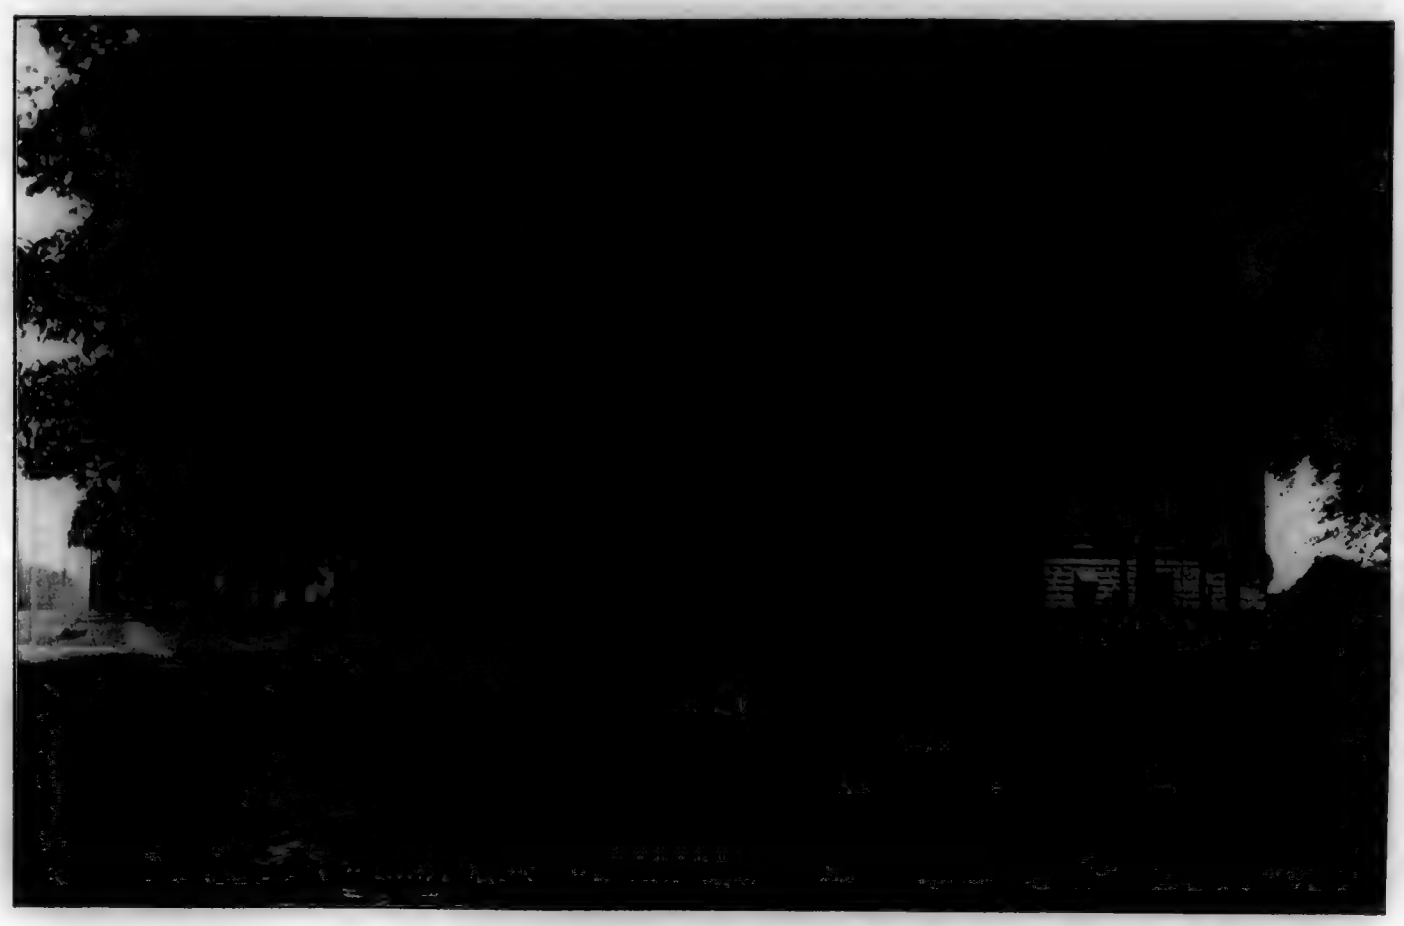
Mr. Brown graduated as a boy from the Eastman's Business College in Poughkeepsie, New York, and began teaching in the commercial department of Hedding College, Abingdon, Illinois. Later he was employed by Whipple Academy at Jacksonville as the writing master and began his work there February 17, 1867.

Soon after the business college and the academy separated, Mr. Brown going with the business college, and the school prospered for a number of years.

In 1888 the Peoria school was purchased and was soon followed by Decatur and then Galesburg, until now Mr. Brown controls a chain of twenty-nine business colleges located in the best cities in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri and Indiana. The Galesburg school ranks well up among the best and is well attended. The graduates may be found in nearly all of the business houses of Galesburg and surrounding territory. The annual graduating exercises are a new feature, and forty to fifty young people are given their diplomas each year.

A new course will be added this year in stenotype, a machine invented to write shorthand.

The school is now owned and controlled by President G. W. Brown; however, the actual management has been shifted from his shoulders to Superintendent R. H. Peck, who was at one time teacher in the English department of the school. Mr. Brown was the first western school manager to introduce typewriting in the school, the first to admit ladies, and was the first to introduce a course in salesmanship.



The present teachers, aside from Principal J. H. Cox, are Miss Maud Lance, shorthand; Mr. J. A. Ebersol, bookkeeping; Miss Myrtle Reck, typewriting and English; and Miss Dorothy Bean, the stenotype teacher, and Miss Olga Thuline, assistant.

GENESIS OF THE RAILROAD

Before the advent of the railroad transportation was carried on by means of canals, as in China to-day, and the construction of government roads, such as the Appian way of Italy, and a great deal of commerce may be carried on under that old system. Besides, those roads were used for military purposes, and we may well be surprised with their effectiveness when compared with modern transportation. The discovery of the power of steam was made by Heron in the third century, B. C. in all other primitive efforts in the application of a new principle, the success was at first quite indifferent, and there elapsed quite a period of time before anything like real success was arrived at. But the general necessities of mankind for something that would transport passengers and freight quickly from point to point proved a great stimulus to additional invention and constant improvements in the method of application.

The growth of the cities of the world made it imperative that some means should be discovered for bringing the products of the country to the city and in return the manufactured articles from the city back to the country. In the early days of railroad life there were but small sections of roads here and there, but the great body of the land was without any facilities of this kind. These necessities were so poorly supplied that the geniuses of the country were constantly working to produce something really efficient in the line of transportation.

The immediate forerunners of the Burlington system were projected roads from Peoria to Oquawka, from Quincy northward, known as the Northern Cross railroad, and from Chicago to Aurora, all located within the state of Illinois. With a road from Peoria to Oquawka and another from Quincy northward and another from Chicago southward there was a great desire to extend the system so as to connect all these points with Chicago. But out of those three projected roads has grown the great system and network of railways known as the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad.

THE EXTENT OF THE BURLINGTON SYSTEM

This system has become known as the Burlington route. It is the parent organization and corporation of an extensive system which operates railroads in most of the western and northwestern states. It starts at Chicago and furnishes connections at St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Cheyenne, Denver, Billings, Deadwood and many other connecting and intermediate points and has connections by affiliated roads such as the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City, Colorado Midland, Western Pacific, Denver & Rio Grande, reaching the southwestern states at Los Angeles, the western and northwestern states at San Francisco, Seattle and Portland; and on the southeast to the Ohio river and the south and all the southeastern states. This system is destined, through its great controlling road, the Great Northern, to tap the large wheat and timber lands of Canada and the northwestern states. An ever increasing volume of traffic will surely be brought to the great northwestern gateway by the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific and the Colorado Southern to the Burlington route and transported to the eastern, southern, central and gulf states and thence to Europe.

From the south and east the products of the country will be transported to the important shipping points on the north Pacific coast, British Columbia and Alaska and then to the Orient and far away Asia and Europe.

Surely a stupendous system of commercial activity of such a character as that passing through the county of Knox is worthy of the most careful study.

Railroads become one of the most important features in the development of the country. They have been the means of opening up the broad domain to settlement, and by them every department in life has been most rapidly advanced, and they constitute in a large degree the vital force of an active and wealthy civilization. The country is covered with a network of roads extending from ocean to ocean, penetrating every state and territory and employing millions of men and women, expending millions of money for service, maintenance and equipment, and any serious interference with the operation of these roads would at once paralyze the business of the country and result in untold injury and suffering to the people. The combined value of the railroads of the country is represented in figures wholly incomprehensible to the human mind, unthinkable even to their managers, and every dollar is at the service of the people.

From the beginning of the agitation of railway building in this county, which was about as early as that of any other part of the state, the people have been very earnest and active on the subject. The early settlers of the county, being largely from the east, were naturally among the first to desire a connection by rail with that part of the world from whence they came. They came to this country by wagon overland, slowly pushing their way over hills and through forests, fording streams swollen with spring rains, halting for nothing except the Sabbath day. Today we find them in the midst of the noise and whir of revolving shafts, of wheels of industry and commerce, enjoying the benefits of twentieth century transportation and the journey once made with such trial and hardship is now taken with comfort and the enjoyment of books and newspapers and is completed within a few hours.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE BURLINGTON SYSTEM

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad may justly be said to be the origin of the energy and power that has turned the west and uncultivated prairies of the central west into a land of plenty, beauty, business and wealth and of all the counties in all this great central west, Knox county and its adjoining counties in Illinois have been made the most productive and the most blest of all in the advantages of business, culture and refinement.

PEORIA & OQUAWKA R. R.

On February 12, 1849, the legislature granted a charter to the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad Co. with a capital stock of $500,000. Under this charter a certain amount of stock had to be subscribed by February 1, 1850, before grading could commence and besides this, other conditions were imposed which were burdensome, but which were modified by the next legislature. The plan was to construct a railroad from Peoria on the Illinois river to Oquawka, on the Mississippi.

The first railroad meeting was held in Knox county, September 9, 1849, the object of which was to provide for the general assembling of the citizens in October. There was a large and enthusiastic meeting, speeches were made by James Knox and Robert S. Blackwell. A motion was made and carried in favor of voluntary taxation to provide funds to prosecute the work. The estimated cost was between $500,000 and $750,000. A resolution was adopted requesting the commissioners of the county to correspond with those of other counties in order to bring about concerted action in the matter. Meetings were held throughout Knox county and a great deal of interest was manifested. The Knoxville Journal, then owned by John S. Winter, was very zealous in the advocacy of the cause, awakening an interest in railroad matters. A meeting was held in Galesburg, November 29, 1849.

The people of Oquawka, refusing to aid the enterprise, the people of Burlington came forward with the necessary subscription, the route was changed to the latter place and Oquawka was left out. The company expended all their money and exhausted their credit in building the road from Burlington to Kirkwood.

A large meeting was again held in Knoxville, inaugurated by the people of Peoria, at which Judge Purple presided. The idea of the people of Knoxville at this time was that the road would build to Peoria and thereby bring manufactories nearer to them. But the defects in the charter caused the project to drag and in the meantime the people of Peoria organized a new company under an old charter which had been granted to Andrew Gray to build a road ten miles from Peoria and finally to pass through Farmington, Illinois, and then direct to Burlington, leaving Knoxville and Galesburg to the north. This road was called the Peoria & Mississippi Railroad Co.

The people of Knoxville favored the road rather than have no road in the county. However, on February 10, 1851, the defects in the Peoria & Oquawka charter were removed, which allowed the company to commence work with less stock paid in and to run the road through Knoxville and Monmouth with Galesburg left to the north again.

CENTRAL MILITARY TRACT R. R.

This did not satisfy the citizens of Galesburg and on February 15, 1851, the Central Military Tract Railroad company was incorporated with Wm. McMurtry, C. S. Colton, James Bunce, W. S. Gale, C. G. Lanphere, H. H. May, W. A. Wood, Alfred Brown, Alvah Wheeler, Peter Grouse, Amos Ward, Patrick Dunn, Daniel Meek, Silas Willard, A. C. Wiley and their associates and successors, a body politic and corporate under the name and style of the Central Military Tract Railroad company, with power to build a road from Galesburg, in a northwesterly course, to some point on the Rock Island and LaSalle railroad. The object of this move was twofold, viz., to build in the direction of Chicago and thereby compel the Peoria & Oquawka railroad to come to Galesburg.

On June 19, 1852, the charter was amended so as to give them the right to build a road from Galesburg in a northeasterly direction on the most direct and eligible route to the city of Chicago, to a point to be designated by said company at or near the line of the Chicago and Rock Island railroad. The charter originated with a body of men who were wont to meet in the office of W. S. Gale, on the south side of the public square in the city of Galesburg. Among those were C. S. Colton, W. S. Gale, Silas Willard, Geo. C. Lanphere, and James Bunce, and they were aided in their scheme by Marcus Osborne of Rock Island. Their first charter was written in the office of W. S. Gale and Geo. C. Lanphere, the democrat in the ring, was sent to the legislature, which was democratic at that time, where the bill was passed. Under the charter, a survey was made for a line to Sheffield by Messrs. Whipple, Wentworth & Churchill.

Plans and estimates were made for this line and the work put under contract in the winter of 1851-2. The contracts were revoked, however, and nothing was done, the company having changed its plans and decided to meet the Chicago & Aurora road at Mendota.

AURORA BRANCH R. R.

On February 12, 1849, the Aurora Branch Railroad company was incorporated to build a road from Aurora to the Galesburg and Chicago railroad. On June 22, 1852, this act was amended to allow them to extend their road in a southwest direction or to build northwest to where they could interest any railroad, built or to be built, and then form connection with such road.

NORTHERN CROSS R. R.

February 1, 1851, power was granted to the Northern Cross Railroad company road, extending north from Quincy, Illinois, to build a branch from some point on that road in Adams county and then running in a most expedient and eligible route through the military tract, terminating at the most advantageous point at or near the south terminal of the Illinois and Michigan canal with a proviso that the company should not locate or construct this branch upon any line east of the city of Knoxville.

June 21, 1852, the act was modified to authorize the Northern Cross company to terminate the lateral branch of said road at any point where the railroad may connect with any other railroad extending north to the city of Chicago.

We now have under consideration the Peoria & Oquawka, the Central Military Tract, the Aurora Branch and the Northern Cross Railroad companies. It will be found necessary to consider all of these roads together because upon their completion the original Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad came into existence.

The changes in the plans of the Central Military Tract Co. were made because of the following circumstances: While the Peoria & Oquawka railroad interests were being slowly worked up by local subscriptions, C. S. Colton, of Galesburg, being in the east, accidentally met in Boston, J. W. Grimes, of Burlington, Iowa, who was a member of the state legislature, and also a Mr. Wadsworth, of Chicago, who was president of the Chicago & Aurora railroad, and after a conference they decided that an independent route direct to Chicago was the most practicable line. Mr. Colton returned home and had a conference with his railroad friends and the changes were determined upon.

It was found impossible to secure eastern capital to aid in the construction of the road while the rates of transportation were subject to control by the state legislature. A special charter was prepared which removed the difficulty and gave the company the entire control of the same with full power to establish and regulate their rates of transportation.

Mr. Colton was delegated to go to Springfield, Illinois, to secure the passage of the special charter, which was done June 21, 1852. At the same date he also secured the amendment to the Chicago & Aurora extension, authorizing the building of that road to Mendota. It was here that he met for the first time

James F. Joy, afterwards president of the C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., who became interested in Colton's plans and who suggested to him the change of the terminus of the Northern Cross railroad and securing the interest of the Quincy people in this branch; and here undoubtedly was the inception of the great Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad, the pride of the state.

Subsequently John W. Brooks, president of the Michigan Central Railroad Co., and James F. Joy, both of Detroit, interested themselves in the Central Military Tract road and proposed that if the people along the route between Galesburg and Mendota would subscribe $300,000 they would furnish enough more capital to complete the grading of the road and laying of the ties, and when that was done they could borrow money on the bonds of the company to complete the construction of the road and put it in operation. One of the first meetings to raise stock was at the old Academy building at Galesburg. The first three subscribers were James Bunce, James Bull and Henry Ferris. Mr. Bull failed to pay. Mr. Bunce was a resident of Galesburg, also Henry Ferris, who will be remembered by many as the father of Mrs. B. F. Arnold and Mrs. Geo. W. Prince. After several months of canvassing for subscriptions to the new company for the $300,000, the required guaranty, they were still short $50,000. At this juncture Messrs. Joy and Brooks came to Galesburg and gave notice that they could not promise a further extension of time on behalf of their principals, who had agreed to build the railroad when the required guaranty was subscribed.

This was a critical time, for $50,000 must be raised immediately or the whole project would be abandoned and all the work done would be lost. Everybody in the community had been canvassed, but to no purpose. At this vital moment C. S. Colton and Silas Willard, who had been the principal movers in the enterprise, finally determined to risk everything for the success of the undertaking, and they personally subscribed the $50,000, thereby binding all the other subscribers and also the eastern capitalists to their contract for building and operating the road. This subscription was a heavy load for these men and they were obliged to borrow the entire amount at the rate of 10 per cent, all their own means being fully absorbed in their business, and it was several years before their stock paid any dividend.

In 1852 the line was surveyed from Galesburg to Mendota, at first through Henderson, but later about four miles east.

Meanwhile Knoxville was fighting Galesburg and trying to get the Northern Cross Railroad company to come to that city. The people between Peoria and Burlington were anxiously waiting for the Peoria & Oquawka road to go ahead. The terminal cities, Burlington and Peoria, by vote subscribed $75,000 each. Burlington thus got ahead of Oquawka and then Henderson county voted to take no stock in the company.

On June 20, 1851, the stockholders of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad Co. met at Knoxville and elected the first board of directors, as follows: Chas. Mason and J. W. Grimes of Bloomington, A. C. Harding and Samuel Webster of Monmouth, James Knox and Julius Manning of Knoxville, Asa D. Reed of Farmington, Rudolphus Rouse and Washington Cockrel of Peoria to serve one year. James Knox was chosen president, Robert L. Hannaman secretary and William Phelps treasurer. The first contract for grading the road was let in October, 1851, at the Peoria end. By September, 1853, all parts of the Peoria & Oquawka road were under contract. When the eastern end of the P. & O. road was built to Elmwood and the western end to Monmouth the work ceased. The parties controlling the line failing to complete the road, the subscribers became dissatisfied, and W. S. Mans of Peoria, James Knox of Knoxville and A. C. Harding of Monmouth entered into a contract to finish the road between Monmouth and Elmwood, but being unable to carry out their contract they sold out to the Central Military Tract Co., the latter agreeing to complete, equip and open the road, which gave the road to Galesburg. After numerous efforts by C. S. Colton of the Central Military Tract Co. and N. Bushnell of the Northern Cross Co. a junction of the two roads at Galesburg was agreed upon which was subsequently ratified by the legislature. By this act, together with the purchase of the contract for the construction of the P. & O. line by the Central Military Tract Co., the destiny of Galesburg as a railroad center was absolutely fixed.

In October, 1852, the Central Military Tract Co. increased its capital stock from $100,000 to $600,000 and elected the following directors: John W. Brooks, Henry Ledyard, James F. Joy, W. N. Lathrop of Detroit, J. H. Birch, C. G. Hammond and John H. Kinsey of Chicago, C. G. Colton, W. S. Gale, James Bunce and Silas Willard of Galesburg, Wm. McMurtry of Henderson and John H. Bryant of Princeton, Illinois.

The road from Burlington to Peoria was not completed until the end of 1854. The first passenger trains began running in the spring of 1855. At this time the Chicago and Aurora company and the Central Military Tract company and the Peoria and Oquawka company were all consolidated under the name of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad company, the name being adopted from the terminal points of the lines that formed the consolidation. Upon the consolidation Galesburg was made a central division from Mendota west. Col. C. G. Hammond, formerly of the Michigan Central, being the general superintendent of the road, placed the Galesburg division under the supervision of Henry Hitchcock as assistant superintendent on Jan. 1, 1856.

Galesburg has always been the headquarters of the Galesburg division. Here are located the company's shops, roundhouses, locomotive and car departments, large stock yards, icing plant, timber preserving plant, cement works and other equipment, and here a large number of men live who are employed in the train, track and engine service, also bridge men, carpenters, shop men and men employed in other branches of the service, and these men have much to do in building up Galesburg and making it one of the most prosperous cities of the central west.

From Galesburg, the county seat of Knox county, the center lines of railroad diverge to many points terminating in Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Rock Island and Moline, Burlington, Quincy, Peoria, Streator, Rushville and West Havana, and from these points important connections are made with all the country, bringing Galesburg and Knox county in direct intercourse with a large territory and making it the distributing point for the merchandise and products of the central part of the state. The original offices and passenger station, which had a fine hotel connected with it, managed by the then noted hotel man H. W. Belden, was located at the intersection of Prairie and Brooks streets. This station and offices were destroyed by fire on the stormy March 1st, 1881. Temporary quarters were built for use until the new station was built in 1883 and completed and occupied May 4, 1884. This new station and office building was also destroyed by fire April 27, 1911, and temporary quarters rebuilt for use until the fine new station now being erected is completed, which will be this year, when Seminary and South streets' grade crossings will give place to large subways. Probably Main and Mulberry also will later be given subway crossings.

This, in a general way, gives the origin of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad company proper, which in 1855 consisted of but a few miles of road as compared with its present extent. This road extended from Chicago to Galesburg, Galesburg to East Burlington, south from Galesburg to Quincy and east from Galesburg to Peoria, three hundred and seventy-eight miles. This was increased in 1862 to four hundred and eight miles by a branch from Yates City to Lewistown. Now its main line, extending from Chicago to Denver, Kansas City, Cheyenne, Billings, Deadwood, and the whole number of miles of standard gauge road operated by the Burlington in 1911 was about nine thousand and seventy-five miles. Of this total seventeen hundred and thirty-two miles were in the state of Illinois.

The total earnings and disbursements of the road in the state for the year reached an enormous amount and the tonnage hauled was immense in volume and the prosperity of all the cities on its line may justly be said to depend upon the earnings of the employes of the road and to the business created and made possible by the advantages given by the road. The company paid to the treasurer of Knox county, in the year 1910, $49,646.09 in taxes.

In this sketch of the C., B. & Q. railroad we have aimed at giving the history of its inception, the events which culminated in the consolidation of the different railroad projects which resulted in the organization of the C., B. & Q. Railroad Co. and its operation in Knox county and adjacent territory, whose rails now carry the product of millions of acres of land and move the population of a continent. This company has the reputation of having the best track in the United States. Its trains are made of the most elegant and serviceable equipment and with all the latest facilities for service and comfort. The double steel rail is laid now on nearly all its lines and the trains are noted for their regularity in running on schedule time. The management of the road is, and always has been, of the best and in keeping with its equipment.

During the twelve months ending June 21, 1912, the Burlington railroad carried 22,000,000 passengers without causing a death. The management also announced that there has not been a fatality in the passenger list of the suburban system in five years.

The record covers the entire system of 9,332 miles. The suburban system, which has been clear of deaths for five years, handles an average of 11,000 passengers daily and operates 100 trains every twenty-four hours.

Of the total mileage there is 2,812 in Illinois, 1,925 in Iowa, 1,635 in Missouri, 3,523 in Nebraska, and from 54 to 600 in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Colorado, South Dakota, Wyoming and Montana. The number of passengers carried one mile was 1,173,435,093, and the average distance traveled by each passenger was 53 miles.

On two or three divisions there has not been a passenger killed for three to seven years.

Up to the present time the consideration of the Burlington route has been directed to a brief review of the construction of the road beginning at Chicago and running to Galesburg, the road beginning at Quincy and running to Galesburg, and the road from Peoria to Burlington. There are other branches of this road which belong in Knox county and as shown in the beginning of this article, it is worth our while to study with some care the growth of this enormous corporation even though we go beyond the limits of Knox county. Inasmuch as this railroad system is of such incalculable interest to Knox county, it is well to place before every thinking person of the county some knowledge of the growth of nearly the entire system. We will now proceed to recapitulate very briefly what has gone before and to take up the various branches of the Burlington system that are contributing so much business and activity to the people of Knox county.

To refer again to the construction and organization of the road. The road known as the C., B. & Q. railroad proper consists of the main line, Chicago via Aurora, Mendota and Galesburg to Burlington, Galesburg to Quincy, the branch from Aurora to Turner Junction (on the C. & N. W. Ry.), from Galesburg to Peoria, and from Yates City to Lewistown. The name of the road built by a company incorporated February 12, 1849, under the name of the Aurora Branch Railroad Co. was changed June 22, 1852, to the Chicago and Aurora Railroad Co. February 14, 1855, the name was again change to the C., B. & Q. Railroad Co.

The road from Mendota to Galesburg was built by a company incorporated February 15, 1851, under the name of the Central Military Tract Railroad Co. On July 9, 1856, the C., B. & Q. and the Central Military Track Railroad Co. were consolidated under the name of the former company. The road from Galesburg to the Mississippi river opposite Burlington and from Galesburg to Peoria was built by a corporation incorporated February 12, 1849, under the name of Peoria & Oquawka Railroad company. On February 21, 1861, the name was changed to the Logansport, Peoria & Burlington Railroad Co. On October 20, 1862, the Logansport, Peoria & Burlington railroad was purchased by G. S. Bartlett, N. Thayer, J. W. Brooks. By authority of an act of the legislature, approved June 19, 1863, the purchasers, on March 8, 1864, organized a new company under the name of the Peoria & Burlington Railroad Co. On July 24, 1864, the Peoria & Burlington railroad was consolidated with the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., under the name of the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co.

The road from Galesburg to Quincy was built by a company incorporated February 10, 1849, under the name of the Northern Cross Railroad Co. On February 10, 1857, its name was changed to the Quincy & Chicago Railroad Co. The Quincy & Chicago Railroad Co. was sold under foreclosure on April 28, 1864, and purchased by the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., and deeded to that company, June 30, 1865.

BURNING OF THE C., B. & Q. DEPOT

Galesburg, April 27, 1911.

The road from Yates City to Lewistown was built under the name of two companies. The Jacksonville & Savanna R. R. Co., incorporated February 14, 1855, under which name the road was built from Yates City southwesterly to a point about four miles south of Canton. The remainder of the road was built in the name of the Peoria & Hannibal R. R. Co., which was incorporated February 11, 1853, under the name of the Macomb, Vermont & Bath R. R. Co. This was changed to the Peoria & Hannibal R. R. Co., on February 24, 1854. November 4, 1860, these two pieces of road were purchased by J. W. Brooks and J. F. Joy. On November 6, 1861, they were transferred to the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co.

The branch from Buda to Elmwood was built by a company incorporated under the name of the Dixon, Peoria & Hannibal R. R. Co., on March 5, 1867. It was to be built from Dixon, Lee county, to the Mississippi river with branches. The construction was begun on a section between Buda and Elmwood, in August, 1869, and was opened for traffic February 1, 1870, leased to the C., B. & Q., July 1, 1869, and on July 1, 1899, sold to the Burlington company.

The road from Galva to New Boston was built by a company named the Western Air Line, which was incorporated February 9, 1853, to build from the east bank of the Mississippi river at New Boston via Lacon, to the eastern line of Illinois, in the direction of Fort Wayne, Indiana. On February 21, 1859, the name was changed to the American Central Railway Co. The road was built from Galva on the C., B. & Q. road to New Boston. Construction was begun soon after the organization of the company, but not very much was accomplished until the C., B. & Q. R. R., through James J. Joy, took hold of it, in 1865. The road was opened for traffic from Galva to New Boston, April 23, 1869. It was leased to the "Q" on October 12, 1868, conveyed to the "Q" July 1, 1899. The road from Keithsburg Junction to Keithsburg on the American Central was begun in 1870, and opened for traffic July 1, 1899, under the name of Dixon & Quincy R. R. Co., incorporated March 4, 1869, and conveyed to the "Q". The cars began to run regularly between Aurora and Chicago, via Turner Junction, October 21, 1850, and between Mendota and Chicago, November 12, 1853. The track of the Galena and Chicago Union R. R. was used between Turner Junction and Chicago.

The construction of the Northern Cross railroad was begun at Quincy in 1851. The first locomotive reached Quincy, March 12, 1854, and was placed on the track at Quincy, September 12, 1854. N. Bushnell, of Quincy, was then president. The road was completed from Quincy to Avon, eighty miles, in the fall of 1855. On the remainder of the road to Galesburg the track was laid from Galesburg south and connection made near Avon, January 31, 1856. April 10, 1857, the Northern Cross railroad was transferred to the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., under jurisdiction of Col. C. B. Hammond, general superintendent.

A company, incorporated March 8, 1867, as the Quincy, Alton & St. Louis road, built a branch from Quincy to Louisiana, commencing in 1871. It was completed and opened for transportation between Quincy and St. Louis, December 28, 1871.

Another branch from Fall Creek to East Hannibal was leased to the C., B. & Q. in perpetuity February 1, 1876, and conveyed June 1, 1890, to the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co.

It may be interesting to state that several years ago there died at La Grange, Illinois, a civil engineer eighty-four years old named Geo. W. Waite. He took a prominent part in western railroad construction. He came to Illinois in 1830. In 1848 as assistant engineer of the Galena Central Railroad Co. he laid the first railroad tie in Chicago and later built that portion of the C., B. & Q. railroad between Mendota and Aurora. This road formed a part of the main line of the Burlington and the cars reached Princeton, Illinois, September 11, 1854, and on December 7, 1854, the first locomotive, The Reindeer, steamed into Galesburg in charge of James P. Patch.

The road from Galesburg to Burlington was originally built to the eastern bank of the Mississippi at a point a short distance above where the bridge is now located. When the bridge was built the line was changed and the "Q" built the main track on the west side of the river as far as Locust street. The station on the east side of the river was known as East Burlington. The bridge across the Mississippi river was built by the Burlington company. Work was commenced on approaches in 1867 and the first pile driven Jan. 30, 1867. The masonry was completed March 30, 1868, and the first train crossed August 13, 1868. Beginning July 1, 1890, this bridge was entirely rebuilt as a double track bridge, completed and put into service October, 1892.

The Quincy and Warsaw Railroad Co. was incorporated Feb. 16, 1865, to build a road from Quincy to Warsaw. This company built the Quincy to Carthage portion of the branch from Quincy to Burlington. In March, 1869, the act was amended to authorize the construction of a branch from Quincy to Carthage via Mendon. The main line was not built. The construction of the branch, however, was commenced August, 1869, and completed and opened for business Dec. 25, 1870. Dec. 1, 1890, the branch was leased in perpetuity and later transferred to the Burlington road.

The road from Carthage to Burlington was built by a company incorporated by an act of the legislature as the Carthage and Burlington Railroad Co. March 8, 1867, to build from Carthage via Dallas City to East Burlington. Construction began Sept., 1870, and was leased to the C. B. & Q. R. R. Co. May 10, 1869, and was transferred July 1, 1899.

The Railroad Bridge company at Quincy was incorporated under an act of the legislature approved Feb. 10, 1853. Another incorporation under the name of the Quincy Railroad Bridge Co. was incorporated in Missouri March 28, 1866, and these two companies consolidated under the name of the Quincy Railroad Bridge Co. Nov. 20, 1866. The bridge over the Mississippi river at Quincy was built by this Quincy Railroad Bridge Co. under authority of an act of congress approved July 25, 1866.

On Nov. 21, 1866, surveys were begun, and between that date and Jan. 1st, 1867, contracts were let for building the bridge, and it was completed and opened for traffic Nov. 9, 1868. On Jan. 1, 1869, the bridge was leased to the C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad Co., and the Hannibal & St. Joe Railroad Co., for the term of the corporate existence of the Bridge Co. The Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad Co. failed to fulfill its obligations under the lease and forfeited the right when the road was sold under foreclosure, since which time the C., B. & Q. and the Hannibal & St. Joe railroads have been the sole lessees. The C., B. & Q. bought the Hannibal & St. Joe Railroad company's interest and consolidated that road with the C., B. & Q. and thereby became in full control of the bridge.

In July, 1897, the work of rebuilding the Quincy bridge was commenced. Seven spans were filled and not rebuilt. The work was completed June 18, 1898, and draw spans later. The bridge has a highway attachment and was opened for traffic Sept. 10, 1899.

The Galesburg and Rio branch was built by a company incorporated April 19, 1886, to build from Galesburg to Rio to connect the Rio with the St. Louis, Rock Island & Chicago railroad, now a part of the Savanna and Rock Island branch north of Rio. Contracts for the line were let April 15, 1886, and opened for traffic on Oct. 3, 1886. On Oct. 1, 1886, it was leased to the C., B. & Q. and on June 1, 1889, conveyed to that company.

The St. Louis & Rock Island and the Barstow & Savanna roads are a part of the road which was formerly the Rock Island & Alton R. R. Co., St. Louis, Alton & Rock Island Co., St. Louis, Rock Island & Chicago R. R. Co. and the Rockford, Rock Island & St. Louis Co.

The Rock Island & St. Louis R. R. Co. was incorporated in 1865, completed to Monmouth in 1870 and the first passenger train ran into Monmouth Aug. 22, 1870, making connections with St. Louis, and connection was made with Rock Island Nov. 11, 1870. The remainder of the line was not completed until it was sold to the St. Louis, Rock Island & Chicago Railroad Co. and subsequently came under the control of the C. B. & Q. Railroad Co. and known as the St. Louis division, and later in 1904 that part of the road from Rio north to Savanna was transferred to the Galesburg division.

The Keithsburg and Gladstone branch became a part of the C., B. & Q. when the Rock Island & St. Louis road was acquired.

From Fulton north the road was built by a corporation known as the C., B. & N. R. R., organized by C. E. Perkins, A. E. Tonzelin and Geo. B. Harris, which was sold to the C., B. & Q. Oct. 21, 1885, and conveyed to the "Q" in 1899.

The Fulton Co. R. R., now the West Havanna branch, had its origin in the struggle between Canton, Centerville (now Cuba) and Lewistown for the county seat of Fulton county. It was originally planned that Lewistown should be the county seat, but the other cities tried to wrest it from her, and it was not until 1878 that the final struggle between Canton and Lewistown was fought, Lewistown coming off victorious. This contest gave birth to the idea of the Fulton County Narrow Gauge railroad. The men interested in Lewistown claimed that she must have a railroad to protect her county seat and in order to secure the votes of the northern part of the county promised to build it. The enthusiasm spread, and in October, 1878, the Fulton County Narrow Gauge Railroad Co. was organized and J. C. Wilcoxen of Lewistown accepted the contract to build the line from Havanna to Fairview. After two years of hard work the first train entered Lewistown from Fairview on August 19, 1880. The completion of the Fulton County Narrow Gauge R. R. from Fairview to Galesburg in 1882 was due to the interest and financial backing of S. H. Mallory of Iowa, who secured a large interest in the road. For twenty-three years the little narrow gauge system performed its duty, and during those years the stock gradually drifted into the hands of the Burlington men, and since October, 1905, when the line was changed from narrow gauge to standard gauge, it has been operated by the Burlington, and in January, 1906, the Burlington took possession of the road. The change to standard gauge was made under the supervision of J. D. Besler of the Burlington road, who for months carefully arranged for standard gauging the line, and which was successfully accomplished.

There is an interesting incident in connection with the first train on the narrow gauge. The engine, known as No. 1, was built at the Baldwin works. By the time the road was completed between Lewistown and Fairview the treasury was depleted. An order had been placed for the engine, and upon notice being received that the engine had arrived at Cuba a delegation from the south end of the line hauled a homemade car to that place and it was triumphantly brought back over the line by its new engine. This engine commenced service in 1890 and continued in active service until the road was made standard gauge in October, 1905. The engineer and fireman on the last trip were M. K. Young and Reuben Simms, both men having been in the company's service for many years. Mr. Young helped to build the road into Galesburg. Mr. J. W. O'Donnell, the conductor of the passenger, had been for many years and is now still running the passenger train from Galesburg to West Havanna.

In 1873 the B. & M. railroad in Iowa and the C., B. & Q. were consolidated under the name of the latter, with Robert Harris, president; Mr. W. B. Strong, general superintendent, and T. J. Porter as superintendent at Burlington, W. Beckwith, superintendent track, bridges and buildings.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad's main line has been from time to time changed to double track, the first piece of double track being constructed in 1864 from Chicago to Lyons, now known as Riverside, and from that double track has been built in sections as the necessities of the traffic of the road demanded. The double track first built in Knox county was from Center Point to Galesburg in 1877, Wataga to Center Point, October, 1880, Oneida to Wataga in 1886, Altona to Oneida, 1886, Galva to Altona, 1885, and Galesburg west to Cameron in 1879-80, to Monmouth, 1886, Monmouth to Kirkwood, 1885, Kirkwood to Biggsville, 1884, Biggsville to Gladstone, 1883, Gladstone to Burlington, 1881, Burlington Bridge switch to Locust street, Burlington, 1892. There are several pieces of third track, the first being built in July, 1885, and others in 1886-7 and 1890-91. There is also a small mileage of fourth track in Chicago. The double track from Galesburg to Saluda was built in 1907 and Saluda to Bushnell in 1910. A double track is now under construction between Galesburg and Henderson, Galesburg and Knoxville and several other parts of the road in Illinois and Missouri.

The new yards at Galesburg opened August 21, 1906. The branch from Savanna to Rio was transferred to Galesburg division May 1, 1904. For several years the Burlington, Carthage and Quincy branch belonged to the Galesburg division, but was later transferred to the Burlington division.

In the foregoing presentation we have dealt almost entirely with the physical and organic part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., but it is desirable to speak something of the personnel of the road.

The development of the road in Knox and adjoining counties is largely due to the sagacious and prudent management of Col. C. G. Hammond and Henry Hitchcock. Mr. Hitchcock was from old Deerfield, Massachusetts, an agent at Rutland, Vermont, of the Rutland and Burlington railroad. Later he was in charge of the Michigan Central road's yard in Chicago. He was a man of rare ability, sagacity and good judgment, who thoroughly organized the work and for more than twenty-five years most faithfully and successfully managed its affairs. He retired June, 1881, with a special token of appreciation of his service given him by a vote of the directors of the company. When he assumed the management of the Galesburg division he had with him several men who helped to build the road into Galesburg, of whom we shall speak later.

Col. C. G. Hammond, whose name we have connected with that of Mr. Hitchcock, was general superintendent of the road, and it is doubtful if any man ever acquired the full confidence of his associates and those under him to a greater degree than he. There were associated with Colonel Hammond and Mr. Hitchcock, Mr. C. W. Mead as division superintendent at Quincy, Henry Martin, general freight agent; Samuel Powell, general passenger and ticket agent; W. W. Hawkins, general agent at Aurora; Amos T. Hall of Detroit, treasurer; J. W. Cothren, also of Detroit, and who became local freight agent at Galesburg and who opened all the stations from Galesburg to East Burlington; T. W. Seymore, assistant general agent, and Max Hjortsburg, chief engineer, who later built the Burlington bridge. Among those who helped to build the road from Aurora to Galesburg were James T. Clark, John D. Besler, John Sullivan, E. C. Olin, J. H. Linsley and Samuel Burch. James F. Joy was president of the road. He commenced his railroad career in the Galesburg yards and in 1883 went into the office of the superintendent of the Illinois lines, where he continued until Mr. Besler was promoted to general superintendent, with whom Mr. Byram went to Chicago. Later he returned to Galesburg, then to the Great Northern in the general manager's and vice-president's office, then division superintendent, then to the C., R. I. & P. R. R., later returning to the Burlington as division superintendent of the lines west of the Missouri, and then to Chicago in charge of the employment bureau, and from that position to the position of vice-president, as above stated.

It is a pleasure to refer to some others who are more particularly associated with Knox county and Galesburg and who helped to make the Galesburg division the banner division of the Burlington road and the one from which men, since prominent in railroad affairs, graduated for service in all parts of the United States.

The local chief from the beginning was Henry Hitchcock, assistant superintendent and later division superintendent, who had as his aids men whom he had trained and promoted, B. O. Carr, brother of Hon. Clark E. Carr, and Gen. Eugene Carr, Augustus Sargent, Charles Chappel, who in after years was general manager of the Chicago & Alton road; Sanford Kingsbury, his office assistant; John Lass, chief clerk; H. F. Hawley, train master, who left for the Chicago & Alton as superintendent; James Alexander, train master; Fred Tubbs and J. M. Ballantine of the telegraph department; L. A. Howland, conductor, afterward assistant superintendent. But of all his assistants none have succeeded more than A. N. Towne, a brakeman and conductor, chosen by Mr. Hitchcock to be his assistant and who later became assistant general manager and then called to the Central Pacific, now the Southern Pacific, at $50,000 a year in gold.

J. T. Clarke, formerly known as "Jim Clarke," was road master of the entire Galesburg division. He came to Galesburg in 1859 and was appointed assistant road master and in 1864 general road master. Mr. Clarke had two assistants, S. F. Shanklin, who had charge of the Quincy road, and J. H. Linsley, who had charge of the remainder of the division. The main line from Galesburg to Mendota having been completed, was placed under the supervision of J. D. Besler in 1863, the present live, active advisor of the road. Mr. Clarke continued in charge until after the consolidation of the B. & M. of Iowa, when he resigned to accept a call to the Union Pacific as general superintendent. After several years of service at the most critical time in the life of the Union Pacific, Mr. Clarke left to become the general superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road, where he remained for several years. Unfortunately his railroad life was cut short and upon his death his remains were brought to Galesburg, his old home, and deposited in Hope cemetery.

Mr. Besler commenced his railroad life in Illinois in 1853 by working from time to time on what is now the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis road, and in 1855 he first began work for the C., B. & Q. R. R. Co. on track between Mendota and Aurora. In 1856 he went to Galva and the following year became track foreman at Prairie City. In 1859 he was transferred to Augusta and for four years was extra gang foreman in charge of the construction train. In 1863 Mr. Besler came to Galesburg as assistant road master. In 1865 he was appointed road master in charge of the main line from Galesburg to Mendota with the addition of the Galva and New Boston branch and continued to hold that position with great credit to himself until 1873. He was appointed assistant superintendent of track, bridge and buildings. In 1878 he was, in addition to his other position, appointed assistant superintendent of the Galesburg division. In 1881 he became superintendent of all the lines in Illinois and in 1885 general superintendent with headquarters in Chicago, which necessitated his move from Galesburg in 1887. In 1902 after serving the company as general superintendent for seventeen years, he left that position and became assistant to the second vice-president, and is still connected with the vice-president's department.

Mr. S. T. Shanklin, one of Mr. Clarke's assistants, was a track laborer, then conductor of construction train with headquarters at Abingdon, then road master at Galesburg, from 1864, in charge of the Quincy line. On account of ill health he left the road and accepted a position as division superintendent of the Union Pacific with headquarters at Omaha. Later he left the Union Pacific and became superintendent of the Missouri Pacific, which position he held until at the age of seventy-five he retired to a well earned rest.

Mr. J. H. Linsley, the other assistant of Mr. Clarke, was well known in Galesburg where for many years he resided and where his widow still resides. His daughter, Mrs. G. W. Thompson and his son Fred, an engineer on the Burlington, also reside in Galesburg. Mr. Linsley was an old C. B. & Q. man, commencing before the road reached Galesburg. In 1848 he came west to Michigan and was engaged in the building department of the Michigan Central railroad, following the construction of that great thoroughfare into Chicago. Later he was with the Michigan Southern until 1854 when he came to the Burlington road and was located at Princeton in connection with the building department of what was then the Central Military Tract railroad. He helped build the Bureau bridges. In 1859 Mr. Linsley, having the gold fever, left the road for Pike's peak. He returned to Illinois in 1865, entered the track department of the C. B. & Q. railroad as assistant road master under Mr. Clarke and for many years faithfully served the company and retired at a good age to enjoy his remaining days in Galesburg.

These four men, James T. Clarke, S. T. Shanklin, James H. Linsley and J. D. Besler, had full charge of the Galesburg division at a time when it required most arduous and strenuous efforts to bring the new roadbed in safe and first class condition and keep it so.

Associated with these men was Mr. J. B. Scheitlin, who had full charge of the office or inner work of the track department, which then had its own store department. Mr. Scheitlin commenced his railroad work at Abingdon as assistant to the station agent. Soon after (in February, 1856) the first train from Quincy ran through to Galesburg, when the station was first opened. In August, 1856, the agent suddenly left the service. Mr. Scheitlin was given charge of the station. About that time Abingdon had a one stall engine house and turntable and the conductors and firemen of the construction crews made their headquarters there. Mr. Scheitlin gave up the station and came to Galesburg to assume charge of the books of the track department. In 1866, Mr. Scheitlin was selected to go with the pay master, W. E. Gillman, and later C. S. Bartlett, to assist in paying the men, for twelve successive years, making the trip over the whole road, still having charge of the office work. Mr. Scheitlin was a thorough office man and while the outside work was done by the road masters and superintendent, much of their success was due to the efficiency and faithfulness of the inside men looking after the details and keeping the supplies to the front.

Associated with Mr. Scheitlin for a time was Henry Moore and upon his being transferred in 1867 to the position of special agent, Mr. John Lass became assistant to Mr. Scheitlin, in charge of the office and track supplies and stores. Mr. Lass after five years' service in office of Mercer and Edwards, solicitors and lawyers, in England, commenced his work on the Burlington, in November, 1866, in the building department headquarters, which then was a larger department, where he had the pleasure of doing a pleasant service to the clerk of that office, the editor of this history, our esteemed friend Mr. Albert J. Perry, by relieving him from his duty when he responded to a call from his bride-to-be in the east. Mr. Lass was for four months in a position as assistant to the treasurer of Knox county. In the fall of 1867, he again entered the service of the "Q" in the track department, where he remained until the year 1872, when Superintendent Hitchcock called him to his office, where he was associated with Mr. Samuel Charles and others. After the consolidation of the C., B. & Q. with the B. & M., changes were made in the division superintendent's office. Mr. Sanford Kingsbury, for many years Mr. Hitchcock's chief cleck, was transferred to the position of train master and later left for the Central Pacific with Mr. A. N. Towne. Mr. Lass then became chief clerk and continued with Mr. Hitchcock until he retired from the service of the Burlington, in 1881. The office work of the assistant superintendent, Mr. Besler, was also under his charge. In 1890, Mr. Lass was appointed superintendent of the Galesburg division which then included the main line Mendota to Burlington as well as the Burlington to Quincy branch, and all the present division with the exception of the Savanna branch north of this, and after three years he returned to the inside work in charge of the Illinois lines office.

Mr. Lass has been continuously in the service from 1866 to the present time, closely associated with the first superintendent, Mr. Hitchcock, as well as with Mr. Besler, and all the other superintendents and the track, bridge and building department men.
